Congressional Quarterly services are primarily for newspapers and broadcasters at standard rates based on circulation and radio time rates respectively. Services are also available at standard rates to other media such as general magazines, forums, and publications of all political parties, civic groups, educational groups, veterans organizations, trade unions and trade associations. A school and library rate provides no publication or broadcasting rights. Written or oral use, direct or indirect, is reserved for current clients who pay for such rights in their regular editions, broadcasts, newsletters, bulletins or other releases. Special permission must be obtained before CQ may be used in special supplements, hand books, etc. Congressional Quarterly sources must be indicated if lack of credit jeopardizes any part of copyrights to any of its material.

Congressional Quarterly reserves second and subsequent rights in its services. Hence clients are not entitled to use back CQ material in any way that would cause Congressional Quarterly Inc. to lose its rights and values in its own material. Non-clients wishing to quote or use material from any of its services must obtain written permission from Congressional Quarterly Inc., 1156 Nineteenth Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Policy Statement . . .

"By providing a link between the local newspaper and Capitol Hill we hope Congressional Quarterly can help to make public opinion the only effective pressure group in the country. Since many citizens other than editors are also interested in Congress, we hope that they too will find Congressional Quarterly an aid to a better understanding of their government.

"Congressional Quarterly presents the facts in as complete, concise and unbiased form as we know how. The editorial comment on the acts and votes of Congress, we leave to our subscribers." Foreword, Congressional Quarterly, Vol. 1, 1945–Henrietta and Nelson Poynter.

CQ ALMANAC CORRECTIONS, 1959

The following corrections are to be made in the 1959 Congressional Quarterly Almanac, Vol. XV:

Page 377, 381 -- Votes of Rep. Hechler (D W.Va.) on Roll Calls 50-52, 55 should read: Announced For.

Page 395, 397 -- In Missouri's 4th District and New York's 43rd, the late Reps. Christopher and Reed are listed as voting. The votes should be credited to their successors: Randall (D Mo.) and Goodell (R N.Y.). In Ohio's 6th District the name of the late Rep. Polk should be replaced by Vacancy.

Page 719, Column 1 -- The Senate Banking and Currency Housing Subcommittee's investigations on mortgage credit adjourned 5/29/59 (not concluded).

Page 720, Column 1 -- The Senate Judiciary Special Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee's Investigation of the effectiveness of the juvenile court system adjourned 7/17/60, and did not continue field hearings.

Page 720, Column 1 -- Under Senate Judiciary Constitutional Rights Subcommittee, add: Funds for Communist causes. Began 2/3/59. Concluded 5/15/59.

Page 721, Column 1 -- Under Foreign Affairs, hearings on the Berlin situation were held by the Europe Subcommittee (not by the full House Foreign Affairs Committee) and concluded 7/8/59.

Page 723, Column 1 -- The Joint Defense Production Committee's investigation into stockpiling under the Defense Production Act lasted one day, 5/29/59 (not concluded 8/18/59).

What is Congressional Quarterly Service?

How to Use This Almanac and Other CQ Elements To Check a Congressman's Record and Follow Legislation

Congressional Quarterly Service is a privately owned news research service which places the full facts on Congress and politics at the command of any interested newspaper editor, scholar, reference librarian or citizen.

Congressional Quarterly Service is objective and politically impartial. The sure guaranty of objectivity is that most of the principal newspapers of the nation, including those of every political persuasion, and most of the educational institutions and reference libraries of the highest standing have subscribed for Congressional Quarterly Service for many years.

Congressional Quarterly is nonpartisan and unbiased. It is complete, concise and convenient.

Elements

Congressional Quarterly Service includes:

The Weekly Report, digesting in condensed magazine format Congressional and political activity for the current week - mailed every Friday night. It includes the full texts of Presidential press conferences, major statements, messages and speeches.

The Quarterly Index indexes by names and subjects the contents of all preceding issues of the Weekly Report for the year. It is the only current cumulative index to the full range of activities concerning Congress and politics and to the actual words of the President.

The Almanac, published early in January and covering the previous calendar year, is an 800-page volume which distills, reorganizes and cross-indexes the full year in Congress, politics and lobbying for permanent reference.

Tri-Weekly News Stories of about 450 words are mailed Monday, Wednesday and Friday in mimeographed form suitable for publication. These timely, exclusive stories are accompanied by fact sheets which treat the subject more fully and are advance proofs from the forthcoming Weekly Report, for editorial subscribers.

CQ Query Service, available to subscribers by telephone, telegraph, mail or through personal visits, answers questions about matters of fact in CQ's field of coverage.

What The Service Brings

Currently and continually updated - well indexed for permanent reference:

Major issues - pros - cons - background - outlook.

How Congress is organized for work - all Members by party - seniority - committee assignments - leadership posts - full background of Members in influential positions.

The record of action on bills:

- Bills introduced - subject matter - sponsors
- Committee hearings - conclusions
- Floor action - debate - amendments - voting
- Results of Senate-House conferences
- Public laws.

All roll-call votes of all Members - pinpointed for each Member to show:

- How often he votes
- How he votes on key issues
- How he votes on the President's requests
- How he votes with or against his own party
- Stands on issues by Members who did not vote on the pertinent roll calls.

Investigations - fully and clearly explained.

The lobbyists - who they are - what they want - what they do about it - what they spend - what they get.

Court decisions and administrative rulings affecting legislation before Congress - explained in detail.

Major Presidential nominations.

The President's press conferences, major statements, speeches and messages - the full texts, thoroughly indexed.

Politics and elections - the full analyzed details.

Voting Yardsticks

Congressional Quarterly Service offers exclusive statistical analyses of roll-call voting that show:

Support of the President -- How frequently each Member voted "for" and "against" the President on roll-call tests of his domestic and foreign policy programs and leadership.

Party Unity -- The frequency with which a Member voted in agreement with, and opposition to, the majority of his own party on roll calls which split Republicans and Democrats along partisan lines.

Bipartisan Support and Opposition -- The percentage of a Member's votes in agreement with, and opposition to, the bipartisan majority on roll calls on which majorities of both parties voted together.

Voting Participation -- Frequency with which each Member voted.

On The Record -- How often each Member voted, entered into "live" pairs, announced his stand, or answered the CQ Poll.

Conservative Coalition -- The percentage of each Member's votes with or against the majority of Southern Democrats and Republicans on roll-call votes on which the coalition lined up against a majority of Northern Democrats.

North-South Split -- The number of times individual Southern Democrats voted "with" or "against" the Southern position on issues that split a majority of Northern and Southern Democrats.

Federal Role -- How often each Member voted in support of a larger or a smaller role for the Federal Government on selected issues that presented a clear choice between the two alternatives.

A Congressman's Record

To gauge a Congressman's record, locate his name in the Index. Here are listed Congressional committees on which he served and the major legislation in which he played a significant role during the year. Page references to important investigations that he took part in also are included. For his personal data, see the "Ages and Professions" chart for his chamber.

Voting Record -- For a quick survey of the Congressman's voting on the crucial issues of the year, check for his name in the charts entitled "Key Votes."

For a complete record of his voting in any comprehensive field -- such as Agriculture or Foreign Policy -- check the list of Roll-Call Votes (p. 6) that were taken in the House or Senate. Then turn to the vote chart on the page indicated.

CQ lists every record vote for every Member of Congress. Senate votes appear together in chronological order, as do House votes. To find a Congressman's complete record on roll-call votes for the year, check all the charts for the appropriate chamber. Also check his performance by CQ's "Voting Yardsticks" (above).

Bills Sponsored -- Find out what bills he introduced. To do this, refer to the Index of Bills Introduced at the back of the volume. Measures the Congressman introduced will be listed by bill number under his name, together with the general field to which they pertained. For a summary of each bill's purpose, and the name of the committee to which it was referred, turn to the "Bills Introduced" section and locate, under each of the categories in which he submitted legislation, the bills he sponsored.

To discover whether Congress acted on the bills he introduced, check the "Bills Acted On" section, which lists bills that received committee or floor action.

Past Record -- Check the Congressman's past record. Key votes for each year since 1951 appear in the Almanacs for those years. Key votes of 1945-1951 are in the 1951 Almanac, p. 722-43. The most significant roll calls for 1919-1944 are in the 1949 Almanac, p. 100-116. Other actions by the Congressman, beginning with the 79th Congress, may be found in the 1945 Almanac and succeeding volumes.

Checking a Bill

CQ Almanac offers these three main sections for checking legislation:

- Bills Introduced
- Bills Acted On
- Major Legislation

In the Bills Introduced and Acted On sections, information on legislation is broken down into Congressional Quarterly's eight regular categories: Agriculture; Appropriations; Education and Welfare; Foreign Policy; Labor; Military and Veterans; Miscellaneous and Administrative; Taxes and Economic Policy.

Bills Introduced -- Every public bill and resolution introduced during the year is listed under subject categories, chronologically by bill, and then resolution, numbers.

Bills Acted On -- Every public bill reported from committee or acted on by House or Senate during the year is listed under subject categories and divided into "Action Completed" and "Unfinished Business" sections.

Public Laws -- All public laws enacted during the year are listed under Bills Acted On.

Major Legislation -- The legislative history of major bills acted on during the year is presented in the following sequence:

The bill's number, significant dates in its passage through Congress, final public law number, if any.

Summary of the bill's primary purpose and most notable provisions.

Background and history of issues involved, keyed to previous Almanacs for past developments.

Committee testimony, votes and reports.

Floor debate pro and con, highlighting major arguments of both sides before passage or rejection.

All roll-call votes and principal amendments.

Conference proceedings in the case of differing House and Senate versions; outstanding points in dispute and how they were reconciled.

Presidential comments upon enactment of the bill.

Lobby pressures for and against the measure.

How A Bill Is Passed

Note: Parliamentary terms used below are defined in the Glossary, which follows.

Introduction of Bills

A House Member (including the territorial Delegate) may introduce any one of several types of bills and resolutions by handing it to the Clerk of the House, or placing it in a box called the hopper. A Senator first gains recognition of the presiding officer to announce the introduction of a bill. If objection is offered by any Senator the introduction of the bill is postponed until the following day.

As the next step in either the House or Senate, the bill is numbered, referred to the appropriate committee, labeled with the sponsor's name, and sent to the Government Printing Office so that copies can be made for subsequent study and action. Senate bills may be jointly sponsored and carry several Senators' names; in the House each bill carries the name of one sponsor only; however, other Members may file identical measures. Bills written in the executive branch and proposed as Administration measures usually are introduced by the chairmen of the Congressional committees that have jurisdiction over the subjects involved.

Types of Congressional measures:

Bills -- Prefixed with "HR" in the House, "S" in the Senate, followed by a number. Used as the form for most legislation, whether permanent or temporary, general or special, public or private.

Joint Resolutions -- Designated H J Res or S J Res. Subject to the same procedure as bills with the exception of joint resolutions proposing an amendment to the Constitution which must be approved by two-thirds of both houses and are thereupon sent directly to the Administrator of General Services for submission to the states for ratification rather than being presented to the President for his approval.

Concurrent Resolutions -- Designated H Con Res or S Con Res. Used for matters affecting the operations of both houses. These do not become law.

Resolutions -- Designated H Res or S Res. Used for a matter concerning the operation of either house alone and adopted only by the chamber in which it originates.

Committee Action

A bill is referred to the appropriate committee by the House parliamentarian on the Speaker's order, or by the Senate President. Sponsors may indicate their preferences for referral, although custom and chamber rule generally govern this. An exception is the referral of private bills, which are sent to whatever group is designated by their sponsors. Bills are technically considered "read for the first time" when referred to House committees.

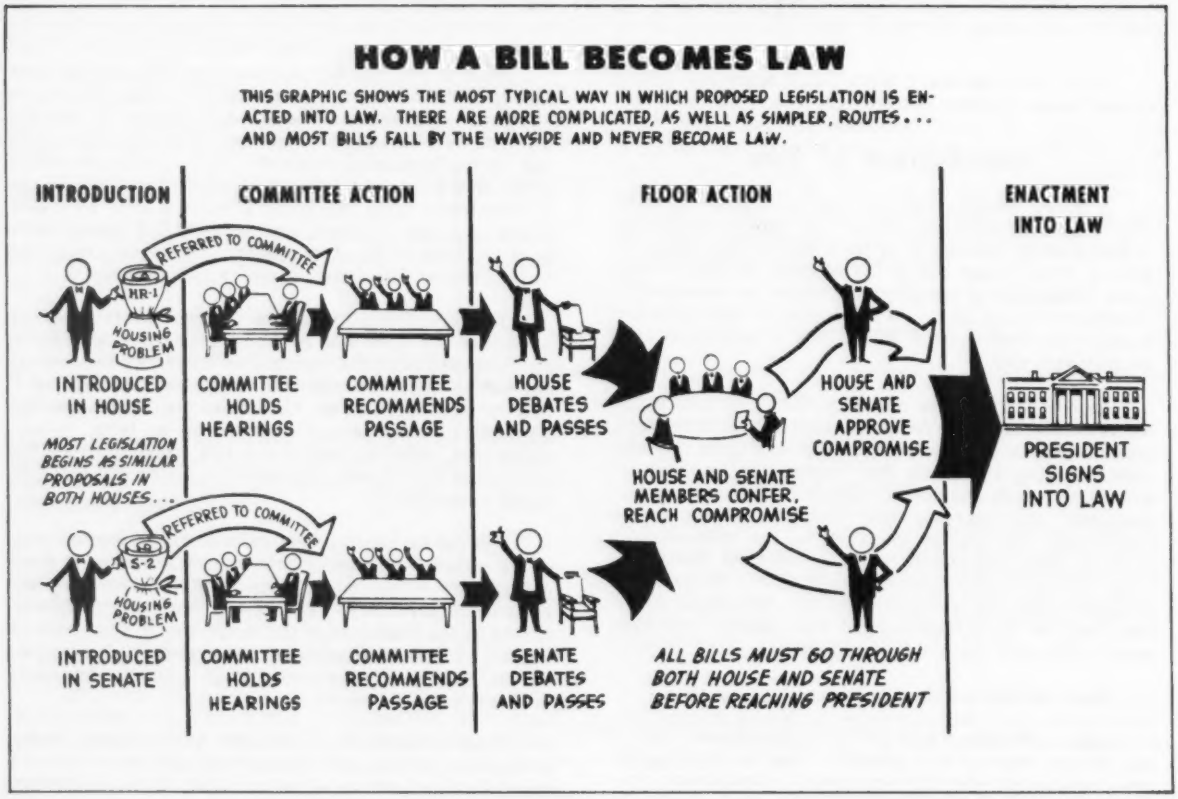
When a bill reaches a committee it is placed upon that group's calendar. At that time it comes under the sharpest Congressional focus. Its chances for passage are quickly determined -- and the great majority of bills fall by the legislative roadside. Failure of a committee to act on a bill is equivalent to killing it; the measure can be withdrawn from the group's purview only by a discharge petition requiring signatures of 219 House members on House bills, or by passage of a special resolution in the Senate. Discharge attempts rarely succeed.

The first committee action taken on a bill usually is a request for comment on it by interested agencies of the government. The committee chairman may assign the bill to a subcommittee for study and hearings, or it may be considered by the full committee. Hearings may be public, closed (executive session), or both. A subcommittee, after considering a bill, reports to the full committee its recommendations for action and any proposed amendments.

The full committee then votes on its recommendation to the House or Senate. This is called "ordering a bill reported." Occasionally a committee may order a bill reported unfavorably; most of the time a report, submitted by the chairman of the committee to the House or Senate, calls for favorable action on the legislation since the committee can effectively "kill" legislation by simply failing to take any action.

When a committee sends a bill to the chamber floor, it explains its reasons in a written statement, called a report, which accompanies the bill. Often committee members opposing a measure issue a dissenting minority report.

Frequently, the committee proposes amendments to the bill. If they are substantial and the legislation is complicated, the committee may order a "clean bill" introduced, which will embody the proposed amendments. The original bill then is put aside and the "clean bill," with a new number, is reported to the floor.



The chamber must approve, alter, or reject the committee amendments before the bill itself can be put to a vote.

Floor Action

After a bill is reported back to the house where it originated, it is placed on the calendar.

There are five legislative calendars in the House, issued in one cumulating calendar titled Calendars of the United States House of Representatives and History of Legislation. The House Calendars are:

The Union Calendar to which are referred bills raising revenues, general appropriation bills and any measures directly or indirectly appropriating money or property. It is the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

The House Calendar to which are referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor appropriating money or property.

The Consent Calendar to which are referred bills of a noncontroversial nature that are passed without debate when the Consent Calendar is called on the first and third Mondays of each month.

The Private Calendar to which are referred bills for relief in the nature of claims against the United States or private immigration bills that are passed without debate when the Private Calendar is called the first and third Tuesdays of each month.

The Discharge Calendar to which are referred motions to discharge committees when the necessary 219 signatures are signed to a discharge petition.

There is only one legislative calendar in the Senate and one "executive calendar" for treaties and nominations presented to the Senate. When the Senate Calendar is called, each Senator is limited to five minutes debate on each bill.

DEBATE

A bill is brought to debate by varying procedures. If a routine measure, it may await the call of the calendar. If it is urgent or important, it can be taken up in the Senate by unanimous consent, or by a majority vote. The Policy Committee of the majority party in the Senate schedules the bills that it wants taken up for debate.

In the House, precedence is granted if a special rule is obtained from the Rules Committee. A request for a special rule is usually made by the chairman of the committee that favorably reported the bill, supported by the bill's sponsor and other committee members. The request, considered by the Rules Committee in the same fashion that other committees consider legislative measures, is in the form of a resolution providing for immediate consideration of the bill. The Rules Committee reports the resolution to the House where it is debated and voted upon in the same fashion as regular bills. The resolutions providing special rules are important because they specify how long the bill may be debated and whether it may be amended from the floor. If floor amendment is banned, the bill is considered under a "closed rule" which permits only members of the committee that first reported the measure to the House to alter its language, subject to chamber acceptance.

When a bill is debated under an "open rule," amendments may be offered from the floor. Committee amendments are always taken up first, but may be changed, as may all amendments up to the second degree, i.e., a changed amendment cannot be further altered. Substitute motions, however, are permissible.

Duration of debate in the House depends on whether the bill is under discussion by the House proper or before the House when it is sitting as the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union. In the former, the amount of time for debate is determined either by special rule or is allocated with an hour for each Member if the measure is under consideration without a rule. In the Committee of the Whole the amount of time agreed on for general debate is equally divided between proponents and opponents. At the end of general discussion, the bill is read section by section for amendment. Debate on an amendment is limited to five minutes each for supporters and opponents.

Senate debate is usually unlimited. It can be halted only by unanimous consent or by "cloture," which requires a two-thirds vote.

The House sits as the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union when it first considers any tax measure or legislation dealing with public appropriations. It can also resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole if a Member moves to do so and the motion is carried. The Speaker appoints a Member to serve as the Chairman. The rules of the House permit the Committee of the Whole to meet with any 100 Members on the floor, and to amend and act on legislation with a quorum of the 100, within the time limitations mentioned previously. When the Committee of the Whole has acted, it "rises," the Speaker returns as the presiding officer of the House and the Member appointed chairman of the Committee of the Whole reports the action of the Committee and its recommendations.

VOTES

Voting on bills may occur repeatedly before they are finally approved or rejected. The House votes both on the rule for the bill, and various amendments to it. Voting on amendments often is a more illuminating test of a bill's support than is the final tally. Sometimes Congressmen approve final passage of bills after vigorously supporting amendments which would have scuttled the legislation if adopted.

The House and Senate vote both by untabulated voice votes and a recorded roll call of their names, to which they answer "yea" or "nay." The House also uses a standing vote, called a division, and a teller vote, when Members file up the center aisle past counters. The Senate also has a division, or standing, vote. It does not employ the teller vote. House totals on division and teller votes are announced. Division vote totals in the Senate are not announced. Only a roll-call vote reveals the yea or nay vote of a Member.

After amendments to a bill have been voted upon, a vote may be taken on a motion to recommit the bill to committee. If carried, this vote removes the bill from the chamber's calendar. If the motion is unsuccessful, the bill then is "read for the third time." An actual reading usually is dispensed with, although an opponent of a bill can delay this move by objecting and asking for a full reading of an engrossed (certified in final form) copy of the bill. After the "third reading," the vote on final passage is taken.

The final action vote may be followed by a motion to reconsider, and this motion itself may be followed by a move to lay the motion on the table. Usually, those voting for the bill's passage vote for the tabling motion, thus safeguarding the final passage action. With that, the bill has been formally passed by the chamber. While a motion to reconsider a Senate vote is pending on a bill, the measure cannot be sent to the House. Once a bill has been passed by either chamber, it becomes, officially, an "act," though it continues generally to be referred to as a bill.

ACTION IN SECOND HOUSE

After a bill is passed it is sent to the other chamber. This body may then take one of several steps. It may pass the bill as is -- accepting the other chamber's amendments. It may send the bill to committee for scrutiny or alteration, or reject the entire bill, advising the other house of its actions. Or it may simply ignore the bill submitted while it continues work on its own version of the legislation. Frequently, one chamber may approve a version of a bill that is greatly at variance with the version already passed by the other house, and then substitute its amendments for the language of the other, retaining only the latter's bill designation.

Often the chamber makes only minor changes. If these are readily agreed to by the other house, the bill then is routed to the White House for signing. However, if the opposite chamber basically alters the bill submitted to it, the measure usually is "sent to conference." The chamber that has possession of the "papers" (engrossed bill, engrossed amendments, messages of transmittal) requests a conference and the other chamber agrees to it.

Conference

A conference undertakes to harmonize conflicting House and Senate versions of a legislative bill. The conference is staffed by interested senior Members, appointed by the presiding officers of the two houses, from the committees which managed the bills. This charges the Members of one house who are most familiar with the bill with the duty of maintaining their chamber's position in the face of amending actions by the conferees (or "managers") of the other house.

The number of conferees from each chamber may vary, the range usually being from three to nine Members in each group, depending upon the length or complexity of the legislation involved. There may be five Representatives and three Senators on the conference committee, or the reverse. But a majority vote controls the action of each group so that a larger representation does not give one chamber a voting advantage over the other chamber's conferees.

Theoretically, conferees are not allowed to write new legislation in reconciling the two versions before them, but this curb sometimes is by-passed. Many bills have been put into acceptable compromise form only after new language was provided by the conferees.

Frequently the ironing out of difficulties takes days or even weeks. Conferences on involved appropriations bills sometimes are particularly drawn out.

As a conference proceeds, conferees reconcile their differences, but generally they grant concessions only insofar as they remain sure that the chamber they represent will accept the compromises. Once in a while uncertainty over this, or the positive refusal of a chamber to back down on a disputed amendment, results in an impasse, and the bills die in conference even though each was approved by its sponsoring chamber.

Conferees sometimes go back to their respective chambers for further instructions, when they report certain portions in disagreement. Then the chamber concerned can either "recede and concur" in the amendment of the other house, or "insist on its amendment."

When the conferees have reached agreement, they prepare a conference report, explaining why they did -- or did not -- retain some amendments, and cut out others. The reports are the justifications to their respective houses of the actions of the conferees, and the explanations, in document form, must be submitted to each house. Conference reports, with an explanation by the House conferees, are always printed in the House. In the Senate an explanation is often made orally by one of the conferees.

The conference report must be approved by each house. Consequently, approval of the report is approval of the compromise bill worked out. In the order of voting on conference reports, the chamber which asked for a conference yields the other chamber the opportunity to vote first.

Final Steps

After a bill has been passed by both the House and Senate all of the original papers are sent to the enrolling clerk of the chamber in which the bill originated. He then prepares an enrolled bill which is printed on parchment paper. When this bill has been certified as correct by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, depending on which chamber originated the bill, it is signed first (no matter whether it originated in the Senate or House) by the Speaker of the House and then by the President of the Senate. It is next sent to the White House to await Presidential action.

If the President approves the bill he signs it, dates it and usually writes the word "approved" on the document. If he does not sign it within 10 days (Sundays excepted) and Congress is in session, the bill becomes law without his signature.

VETOES

However, should Congress adjourn before the 10 days expire, and the President has failed to sign the measure, it does not become law. This procedure is called the pocket veto. Occasionally a President vetoes a bill by refusing to sign it and returning it to the Congress with a message stating his reasons. The message is sent to the chamber which originated the bill. If no action is taken there on the message, the bill affected dies. Sometimes, however, Congress attempts to override the President's veto and enact the bill, "the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding." This requires a two-thirds vote of those present, who must number a quorum and vote by roll call.

Debate can precede this vote, with motions permitted to lay the message on the table, postpone action on it, or refer it to committee. If the President's veto is overridden by a two-thirds vote in both houses, the bill becomes law. Otherwise it is dead, and can be revived only by reintroduction and routing through the process all bills undergo.

When bills are passed finally and signed, or passed over a veto, they are given law numbers in numerical order as they become law. There are two series of numbers, one for public and one for private laws, starting at the number "1" for each two-year term of Congress. They are then identified by law number and by Congress -- i.e., Private Law 21, 86th Congress; Public Law 250, 86th Congress (or PL 86-250).

GLOSSARY OF CONGRESSIONAL TERMS

Act -- The term for legislation which has passed both houses of Congress and has been signed by the President or passed over his veto, thus becoming law.

Also, used technically for a bill that has been passed by one house and engrossed.

Adjournment sine die -- Adjournment without definitely fixing a day for reconvening; literally "adjournment without a day." Marks the official end of a Congressional session.

Adjournment to a Day Certain -- Adjournment under a motion or resolution which fixes the next time of meeting. Neither house can adjourn for more than three days without the concurrence of the other. A session of Congress is not ended by adjournment to a day certain.

Amendment -- Proposal of a Congressman to alter the language or stipulations in a bill or act. It is usually printed, debated, and voted upon in the same manner as a bill.

Appeal -- A Congressman's challenge of a ruling or decision made by the presiding officer of the Senate or House. The Congressman appeals to Members of the chamber to override the decision. If carried by a majority vote, the appeal nullifies the chair's ruling.

Appropriation Bill -- Grants the actual monies approved by authorization bills, but not necessarily to the total permissible under the authorization bill. Normally an appropriation bill originates in the House, and is not acted on until its authorization measure is enacted. In addition to general appropriation bills, there are two specialized types. (See Deficiency and Supplemental.)

Authorization Bill -- Authorizes a program, specifies its general aim and conduct, and puts a ceiling on monies that can be used to finance it. Usually enacted before appropriation bill is passed. (See Contract Authorization.)

Bills -- Most legislative proposals before Congress are in the form of bills, and are designated as HR (House of Representatives) or S (Senate) according to the house in which they originate and by a number assigned in the order in which they were introduced, from the beginning of each two-year Congressional term. "Public bills" deal with general questions, and become Public Laws if approved by Congress and signed by the President. "Private bills" deal with individual matters such as claims against the government, immigration and naturalization cases, land titles, etc., and become Private Laws if approved and signed.

The introduction of a bill, and its referral to an appropriate committee for action, follows the process given in "How a Bill Is Passed." (See also Concurrent Resolution, Joint Resolution, Resolution, in this Glossary.)

Bills Introduced -- In the Senate, any number of Senators may join in introducing a single bill. In the House, no more than one Member's name may appear on a bill. The result is that in the House many duplicate bills are introduced, only one of which is passed.

Many bills in reality are committee bills and are introduced under the name of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee as a formality. All appropriation bills fall into this category, as do many other bills, particularly those dealing with complicated, technical subjects. A committee frequently holds hearings on a number of related bills, and may agree on one of them or on an entirely new bill. (See Clean Bill and By Request.)

Bills Referred --When introduced, a bill is referred to the committee which has jurisdiction over the subject with which the bill is concerned. The appropriate reference for bills is spelled out in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Bills are referred by the Speaker in the House and the Presiding Officer in the Senate. Appeals may be made from their decisions.

Budget -- The document sent to Congress by the President in January of each year estimating government revenue and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year and recommending appropriations in detail. The President's Budget Message forms the basis for Congressional hearings and legislation on the year's appropriations.

By Request -- A phrase used when a Senator or Representative introduces a bill at the request of an executive agency or private organization but does not necessarily endorse the legislation.

Calendar -- An agenda or list of pending business before committees or either chamber. The House uses five legislative calendars. (See Consent, Discharge, House, Private and Union Calendar.)

In the Senate, all legislative matters reported from committee go on a single calendar. They are listed there in order, but may be called up irregularly by the Majority Leader either by a motion to do so, or by obtaining the unanimous consent of the Senate. Frequently the Minority Leader is consulted to assure unanimous consent. Only cloture can limit debate on bills thus called up. (See Call of the Calendar.)

The Senate also uses one non-legislative calendar, for treaties, etc. (See Executive Calendar.)

Calendar Wednesday -- In the House on Wednesdays, committees may be called in the order in which they appear in Rule X of the House Manual, for the purpose of bringing up any of their bills from the House or the Union Calendars, except bills which are privileged. General debate is limited to two hours. Bills called up from the Union Calendar are considered in Committee of the Whole. Calendar Wednesday is not observed during the last two weeks of a session, and may be dispensed with at other times -- by a two-thirds vote. It usually is dispensed with.

Call of the Calendar -- Senate bills which are not brought up for debate by a motion or a unanimous consent agreement are brought before the Senate for action when the calendar listing them in order is "called." Bills considered in this fashion are usually non-controversial and debate is limited to five minutes for each Senator on a bill or on amendments to it.

Chamber -- Meeting place for the total membership of either the House or the Senate, as distinguished from the respective committee rooms.

Clean Bill -- Frequently after a committee has finished a major revision of a bill, one of the committee members, usually the chairman, will assemble the changes plus what is left of the original bill into a new measure and introduce it as a "clean bill." The new measure, which carries a new number, is then sent to the floor for consideration. This often is a timesaver, as committee-recommended changes do not have to be considered one at a time by the chamber.

Clerk of the House -- Chief administrative officer of the House of Representatives with duties corresponding to those of the Secretary of the Senate. (See Secretary of the Senate.)

Cloture -- The process by which debate can be limited in the Senate, other than by unanimous consent. A motion for cloture can apply to any measure before the Senate, including, under a 1959 revision, a proposal to change the chamber's rules. It requires 16 Senators' signatures for introduction and the votes of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting. It is put to a roll-call vote one hour after the Senate meets on the second day following introduction of the motion. If voted, cloture limits each Senator to one hour of debate.

Committee -- A subdivision of the House or Senate which prepares legislation for action by the parent chamber, or makes investigations as directed by the parent chamber. There are several types of committees. (See Standing, and Select or Special). Most standing committees are divided into subcommittees, which study legislation, hold hearings, and report their recommendations to the full committee. Only the full committee can report legislation for action by the House or Senate.

Committee of the Whole -- The working title of what is formally "The Committee of the Whole House (of Representatives) on the State of the Union." Unlike other committees, it has no fixed membership. It is comprised of any 100 or more House members who participate -- on the floor of the chamber -- in debating or altering legislation before the body. Such measures, however, must first have passed through the regular committees and be on the calendar.

Technically, the Committee of the Whole considers only bills directly or indirectly appropriating money, authorizing appropriations, or involving taxes or charges on the public. Actually, the Committee of the Whole often considers other types of legislation. Because the Committee of the Whole need number only 100 Congressmen, a quorum is more readily attained, and business is expedited. None of the group's votes can be the time-consuming roll calls which require yeas and nays for the record.

When the full House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole, it supplants the Speaker with a "chairman." The measure is debated or amended, with non-roll-call votes as needed. When the Committee completes its action on the measure, it dissolves itself by "rising." The Speaker returns, and the full House hears the erstwhile chairman of the committee report that group's recommendations. The full House then acts upon them.

At this time Members may demand a roll-call vote on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

Concurrent Resolution -- A concurrent resolution, designated H Con Res or S Con Res, must be passed by both houses but does not require the signature of the President and does not have the force of law. Concurrent resolutions generally are used to make or amend rules applicable to both houses or to express the sentiment of the two houses. A concurrent resolution, for example, is used to fix the time for adjournment of a Congress. It might also be used to convey the congratulations of Congress to another country on the anniversary of its independence.

Conference -- A meeting between the representatives of the House and Senate to reconcile differences between the two houses over provisions of a bill. Members of the conference committee are appointed by the Speaker and the President of the Senate and are called "managers" for their respective chambers. A majority of the managers for each house must reach agreement on the provisions of the bill (often a compromise between the versions of the two chambers) before it can be sent up for floor action in the form of a "conference report." There it cannot be amended, and if not approved by both chambers, the bill goes back to conference. Elaborate rules govern the conduct of the conferences. All bills which are passed by House and Senate in slightly different form need not be sent to conference; either chamber may "concur" in the other's amendments. (See Custody of the Papers.)

Congressional Record -- The daily, printed account of proceedings in both House and Senate chambers, with debate, statements, and the like reported verbatim. Committee activities are not covered, excepting their reports to the parent body. Highlights of legislative and committee action are embodied in a Digest section of the Record, and Congressmen are entitled to have their extraneous remarks printed in its Appendix. They may edit and revise remarks made on the floor, and frequently do, so that quotations reported by the press are not always found in the Record.

Consent Calendar -- Members of the House may place on this calendar any bill on the Union or House calendar which is considered to be non-controversial. Bills on the consent calendar are normally called on the first and third Mondays of each month. On the first occasion when a bill is called in this manner, consideration may be blocked by the objection of any Member. On the second time, if there are three objections, the bill is stricken from the consent calendar; if less than three Members object, the bill is given immediate consideration.

A bill on the consent calendar may be postponed in another way. A Member may ask that the measure be passed over "without prejudice." In that case, no objection is recorded against the bill, and its status on the consent calendar remains unchanged.

A bill stricken from the consent calendar remains on the Union or House calendar.

Contract Authorizations -- Found in both authorization and appropriation bills, these authorizations are stop-gap provisions which permit the Federal Government to let contracts or obligate itself for future payments from funds not yet appropriated. The assumption is that funds will be available for payment when contracted debts come due.

Correcting the Record -- Rules prohibit Members from changing their votes after the result has been announced. But frequently, hours, days, or months after a vote has been taken, a Member announces that he was "incorrectly recorded" and requests -- and almost always receives -- unanimous consent to have the vote corrected in the permanent edition of the Congressional Record. This occurs more frequently in the House than in the Senate. Errors in the text of the Record may be corrected in the same manner.

Custody of the Papers -- To reconcile differences on a bill between the House and Senate, a conference may be arranged. The chamber in "custody of the papers" -- the engrossed bill, engrossed amendments, messages of transmittal -- is the only body empowered to request the conference. That body then has the advantage of acting last on the conference report when it is submitted.

Deficiency Appropriation -- An appropriation to cover the difference between an agency's regular appropriation and the amount deemed necessary for it to operate for the full fiscal year. Regular appropriations normally are passed in one fiscal year for the ensuing fiscal year. Deficiency appropriations are for use in the same fiscal year in which they are passed. (See Supplemental Appropriation.)

Dilatory Motion -- A motion, usually made upon a technical point, for the purpose of killing time and preventing action on a bill. The rules oulaw dilatory motions, but enforcement is largely within the discretion of the presiding officer.

Discharge a Committee-- Relieve a committee from jurisdiction over a measure before it. This is rarely a successful procedure, attempted more often in the House than in the Senate.

In the House, if a committee does not report a bill within 30 days after the bill was referred to it, any Member may file a discharge motion. This motion, treated as a petition, needs the signatures of 219 members. After the required signatures have been obtained, there is a delay of seven days. Then, on the second and fourth Monday of each month, except during the last six days of a session, any Member who has signed the petition may be recognized to move that the committee be discharged. Debate on the motion to discharge is limited to 20 minutes, and, if the motion is carried, consideration of the bill becomes a matter of high privilege.

If a resolution to consider a bill (see Rule) is held up in the Rules Committee for more than seven legislative days, any Member may enter a motion to discharge the Committee. The motion is handled like any other discharge petition in the House.

Occasionally, to expedite non-controversial legislative business, a committee is discharged upon unanimous consent of the House, and a petition is not required. (For Senate procedure, see Discharge Resolution.)

Discharge Calendar -- The House calendar to which motions to discharge committees are referred when they have the necessary 219 signatures and are awaiting action.

Discharge Petition -- In the House, a motion to discharge a committee from considering a bill. The motion, or petition, requires signatures of 219 House members. (See Discharge a Committee.)

Discharge Resolution -- In the Senate, a special motion any Senator may introduce to relieve a committee from consideration of a bill before it. The resolution can be called up on motion for approval or disapproval, in the same manner as other matters of Senate business. (For House procedure, see Discharge a Committee.)

Division vote -- Same as Standing Vote. (See below.)

Enacting Clause -- Key phrase in bills saying, "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives . . ." A successful motion to strike it from legislation kills the measure.

Engrossed Bill -- The final copy of a bill as passed by one chamber, with the text as amended by floor action and certified to by the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate.

Enrolled Bill -- The final copy of a bill which has been passed in identical form by both chambers. It is certified to by an officer of the house of origin (House Clerk or Senate Secretary) and then sent on for signatures of the House Speaker, the Senate President, and the U.S. President. An enrolled bill is printed on parchment.

Executive Calendar -- This is an additional, non-legislative calendar, in the Senate, on which Presidential documents such as treaties and nominations are listed.

Executive Document -- A document, usually a treaty, sent to the Senate by the President for consideration or ratification. These are identified for each session of Congress as Executive A, 84th Congress, 1st Session; Executive B, etc. They are referred to committee in the same manner as other measures. Unlike legislative documents, however, treaties do not die at the end of a Congress, but remain "live" proposals until acted on by the Senate or withdrawn by the President.

Executive Resolution -- A Senate resolution dealing with executive business rather than legislative, i.e., with the handling of a treaty or nomination. A motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a nomination would be made in an Executive Resolution, instead of an ordinary Senate Resolution.

Executive Session -- Meeting of a Senate or a House committee which only the group's members are privileged to attend. Frequently witnesses appear before committees meeting in executive session, and other Congressmen may be invited, but the public and press are not allowed.

Expenditures -- The actual spending of money as distinguished from the appropriation of it. Expenditures are made by the disbursing officers of the Administration; appropriations are made only by Congress. The two are rarely identical in any fiscal year; expenditures may represent money appropriated one, two or more years previously.

Filibuster -- A time-delaying tactic used by a minority in an effort to prevent a vote on a bill which probably would pass if brought to a vote. The most common method is to take advantage of the Senate's rules permitting unlimited debate, but other forms of parliamentary maneuvering may be used. The stricter rules in the House make filibusters more difficult, but they are attempted from time to time through devices such as repeated demands for quorum calls.

Fiscal Year -- Financial operations of the Government are carried out in a 12-month fiscal year, beginning on July 1 and ending on June 30. The fiscal year carries the date of the calendar year in which it ends.

Floor Manager -- A Member, usually representing sponsors of a bill, who attempts to steer it through debate and revision to a final vote in the chamber. Floor managers are frequently chairmen or ranking members of the committee that reported the bill. Managers are responsible for apportioning the time granted supporters of the bill for debating it. The Minority Leader or the ranking minority member of the committee often apportions time for the opposition.

Frank -- A Congressman's facsimile signature on envelopes, used in lieu of stamps for his official outgoing mail, thus postage-free. Also the privilege of sending mail postage-free.

Germane -- Pertaining to the subject matter of the measure at hand. All House amendments must be germane to the bill. The Senate requires that amendments be germane only when they are to general appropriation bills, to those being considered under cloture, or often when proceeding under an agreement to limit debate.

Hearings -- Committee sessions for hearing witnesses. At hearings on legislation, witnesses usually include specialists, government officials and spokesmen for persons affected by the bills under study. Hearings related to special investigations bring forth a variety of witnesses. Committees sometimes use their subpena power to summon reluctant witnesses. The public and press may attend "open" hearings, but are barred from "closed" or "executive" hearings.

The committee announces its hearings, from one day to many weeks in advance, and may invite certain persons to testify. Persons who request time to testify may be turned down by the committee but most requests are honored.

Hopper -- Box on House Clerk's desk where bills are deposited on introduction.

House -- The House of Representatives, as distinct from the Senate, although each body is a "house" of Congress.

House Calendar -- Listing for action by the House of Representatives of public bills which do not directly or indirectly appropriate money or raise revenue.

Immunity -- Constitutional privilege of Congressmen to make verbal statements on the floor and in committee for which they cannot be sued or arrested for slander or libel. Also, freedom from arrest while traveling to or from sessions of Congress or on official business. Congressmen in this status may be arrested only for treason, felonies or a breach of the peace, as defined by Congressional manuals.

Joint Committee -- A committee composed of a specified number of members of both House and Senate. Usually a joint committee is investigative in nature. There are a few standing joint committees, such as the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the Joint Economic Committee.

Joint Resolution -- A joint resolution, designated H J Res or S J Res, requires the approval of both houses and the signature of the President, just as a bill does, and has the force of law if approved. There is no real difference between a bill and a joint resolution. The latter is generally used in dealing with limited matters, such as a single appropriation for a specific purpose or the granting of Congressional approval for executive actions -- for example, international executive agreements.

Joint resolutions also are used to propose amendments to the Constitution. These do not require Presidential signature, but become a part of the Constitution when three-fourths of the states have ratified them.

Journal -- The official record of the proceedings of the House and Senate. The Journal records the actions taken in each chamber, but unlike the Congressional Record, it does not include the verbatim report of speeches, debate, etc.

Law -- An Act of Congress which has been signed by the President, or passed over his veto by the Congress. Laws are listed numerically by Congress; for example, the Hawaii statehood bill (S 50) became Public Law 86-3.

Legislative Budget -- An appraisal by Congress of Federal spending and income for the year ahead. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, 1946, pp. 362, 531) directs four committees -- House Appropriations and Ways and Means and Senate Appropriations and Finance -- to study the President's budget recommendations each year, then by Feb. 15, report their own recommendations. The law directs that the report be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting the budget and fixing a limit on the year's appropriations. In practice, however, Congress has not complied with this law.

Legislative Day -- The "day" extending from the time either house meets after an adjournment until the time it next adjourns. Because the House normally adjourns from day to day, legislative days and calendar days usually coincide. But in the Senate, a legislative day may, and frequently does, extend over several calendar days.

Lobby -- A group seeking to influence the passage or defeat of legislation. Originally the term referred to persons frequenting the lobbies or corridors of legislative chambers in order to speak to lawmakers.

The exact definition of a lobby and the activity of lobbying is a matter of opinion. By some definitions, lobbying is limited to attempts at direct influence by personal interview and persuasion. Under other definitions, lobbying includes attempts at indirect influence, such as stirring members of a group to write or visit Congressmen, or attempting to create a climate of opinion favorable to a desired legislative action.

The right to attempt to influence legislation is based on the First Amendment to the Constitution, which says Congress shall make no law abridging the right of the people "to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Majority Leader -- Chief strategist and floor spokesman for the party in nominal control in either chamber. He is elected by his party colleagues and is virtually program director for his chamber, since he usually speaks for its majority.

Majority Whip -- In effect, the assistant majority leader, in House or Senate. His job is to help marshal majority forces in support of party strategy.

Manual -- The official handbook in each house prescribing its organization, procedures and operations in detail. The Senate Manual contains standing rules, orders, laws and resolutions affecting Senate business; the House Manual is the equivalent for the lower chamber. Both volumes contain previous codes under which Congress functioned and from which it continues to derive precedents. Committee powers are outlined. The rules set forth in the Manuals may be changed by elaborate chamber actions also specified by the Manuals.

Marking up a Bill -- Going through a measure, usually in committee, taking it section by section, revising language, penciling in new phrases, etc. If the bill is extensively revised, the new version may be introduced as a separate bill, with a new number. (See Clean Bill.)

Memorial -- A request for Congressional opposition or an objection from an organization or citizens' group to particular legislation or government practice under the purview of Congress. All communications, both supporting and opposing legislation, from state legislatures are embodied in memorials. They are referred to appropriate committees unless the legislation dealt with in the memorial has been reported to the Senate in which case the memorial is placed on the table. It can be called up for consideration at the time the bill is read for amendments. (See Petition)

Minority Whip -- Performs duties of whip for minority party. (See Majority Whip.)

Morning Hour -- The time set aside at the beginning of each legislative day for the consideration of regular routine business. The "hour" is of indefinite duration in the House, where it is rarely used. In the Senate it is the first two hours of a session following an adjournment, as distinguished from a recess. The morning hour can be terminated earlier if the morning business has been completed. This business includes such matters as messages from the President, communications from the heads of departments, messages from the House, the presentation of petitions and memorials, reports of standing and select committees, and the introduction of bills and resolutions.

During the first hour of the morning hour in the Senate, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the calendar is in order except by unanimous consent. During the second hour, motions can be made but must be decided without debate.

Motion -- Request by a Congressman for any one of a wide array of parliamentary actions. He "moves" for a certain procedure, or the consideration of a measure or a vote, etc. The precedence of motions, and whether they are debatable, is set forth in the House and Senate Manuals.

Nominations -- Appointments to office by the executive branch of the government, subject to Senate confirmation. Although most nominations win quick Senate approval, some are controversial and become the topic of hearings and debate. Sometimes Senators object to appointees for patronage reasons -- for example, when a nomination to a local federal job is made without consulting the Senators of the state concerned. Then a Senator may use the stock objection that the nominee is "personally obnoxious" to him. Usually other Senators join in blocking such an appointment out of courtesy to their colleague.

One Minute Speeches -- Addresses by House Members at the beginning of a legislative day. The speeches may cover any subject, but are limited strictly to one minute's duration.

Override a Veto -- If the President disapproves a bill and sends it back to Congress with his objections, Congress may override his veto by a two-thirds vote in each chamber. The Constitution requires a yea-and-nay roll call. The question put to each house is: "Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?" (See also Pocket Veto and Veto.)

Pair -- A "gentlemen's agreement" between two lawmakers on opposite sides to withhold their votes on roll calls so their absence from Congress will not affect the outcome of record voting. If passage of the measure requires a two-thirds majority, a pair would require two Members favoring the action to one opposed to it.

Two kinds of pairs -- special and general -- are used; neither is counted in vote totals. The names of lawmakers pairing on a given vote and their stands, if known, are printed in the Congressional Record.

The special pair applies to one or a series of roll-call votes on the same subject. On special pairs lawmakers usually specify how they would have voted.

A general pair in the Senate, now rarely used in the chamber, applies to all votes on which the Members pairing are on opposite sides, and it lasts for the length of time pairing Senators agree on. It usually does not specify a Senator's stand on a given vote.

The general pair in the House differs from the other pairs. No agreement is involved and the pair does not tie up votes. A Representative expecting to be absent may notify the House Clerk he wishes to make a "general" pair. His name then is paired arbitrarily with that of another Member desiring a general pair, and the list is printed in the Congressional Record. He may or may not be paired with a Member taking the opposite position. General pairs in the House give no indication of how a Congressman would have voted. (See Record Vote and Stand.)

Petition -- A request or plea sent to one or both chambers from an organization or private-citizens group asking support of particular legislation or favorable consideration of a matter not yet receiving Congressional attention. They are referred to appropriate committees and considered or not according to committee decision. (See Memorial)

Pocket Veto -- The act of the President in withholding his approval of a bill after Congress has adjourned. When Congress is in session, a bill becomes law without the President's signature if he does not act upon it within ten days, excluding Sundays, from the time he gets it. But if Congress adjourns within that ten-day period, the bill is killed without the President's formal veto.

Point of Order -- An objection raised by a Congressman that the chamber is departing from rules governing its conduct of business. The objector cites the rule violated, the chair sustaining his objection if correctly made. Order is restored by the chair's suspending proceedings of the chamber until it conforms to the prescribed "order of business." Members sometimes raise a "point of no order" -- when there is noise and disorderly conduct in the chamber.

President of the Senate -- Presiding officer of the upper chamber, normally the Vice President of the U.S. In his absence, a President pro tempore (President for the time being) presides.

President pro tempore -- The chief officer of the Senate in the absence of the Vice President. He is elected by his fellow Senators. The recent practice has been to elect to the office the Senator of the majority party with longest continuous service.

Previous Question -- In this sense, a "question" is an "issue" before the House for a vote and the issue is "previous" when some other topic has superseded it in the attention of the chamber. A motion for the previous question, when carried, has the effect of cutting off all extraneous debate and forcing a vote on the subject originally at hand. If, however, the previous question is moved and carried before there has been any debate on the subject at hand and the subject is debatable, then 40 minutes of debate is allowed before the vote. The previous question is sometimes moved on a non-debatable question in order to prevent amendments. The motion for the previous question is a debate-limiting device and is not in order in the Senate.

Private Calendar -- Private House bills dealing with individual matters such as claims against the government, immigration and naturalization cases, land titles, etc. When it is before the chamber, two Members may block a private bill, which then is recommitted to committee.

Backers of a private bill thus recommitted have another recourse. The measure can be put into an "omnibus claims bill" -- several private bills rolled into one. As with any bill, no part of an omnibus claims bill may be deleted without a vote. When a private bill goes back to the floor in this form, it can be defeated only by a majority of those present.

Privilege -- Privilege relates to the rights of Congressmen and to the relative priority of the motions and actions they may make in their respective chambers. The two are distinct. "Privileged questions" concern legislative business. "Questions of privilege" concern legislators themselves. (See below.)

Privileged Questions -- The order in which bills, motions and other legislative measures may be considered by Congress is governed by strict priorities. A motion to table, for instance, is more privileged than a motion to recommit. Thus, a motion to recommit can be superseded by a motion to table, and a vote would be forced on the latter motion only. A motion to adjourn, however, would take precedence over this one, and is thus considered of the "highest privilege."

Pro Forma Amendment -- See Strike Out the Last Word.

Questions of Privilege -- These are matters affecting Members of Congress individually or collectively.

Questions affecting the rights, safety, dignity and integrity of proceedings of the House or Senate as a whole are questions of privilege of the House or Senate, as the case may be.

Congressmen singly involve questions of "personal privilege." A Member's rising to a question of personal privilege is given precedence over almost all other proceedings. An annotation in the House Rules points out that the privilege of the Member rests primarily on the Constitution, which gives him a conditional immunity from arrest and an unconditional freedom to speak in the House.

Quorum -- The number of Members whose presence is necessary for the transaction of business. In the Senate and House it is a majority of the membership (when there are no vacancies, this is 51 in the Senate and 219 in the House). A quorum is 100 in the Committee of the Whole House. If a point of order is made that a quorum is not present, the only business in order is either a motion to adjourn or a motion to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of absentees.

Readings of Bills -- Traditional parliamentary law required bills to be read three times before they were passed. This custom is of little modern significance except in rare instances. Normally the bill is considered to have its first reading when it is introduced and printed, by title, in the Congressional Record. Its second reading comes when floor consideration begins. (This is the most likely point at which there is an actual reading of the bill, if there is any.) The third reading (usually by title) takes place when action has been completed on amendments.

Recess -- Distinguished from adjournment in that a recess does not end a legislative day and therefore does not interfere with unfinished business. The rules in each house set forth certain matters to be taken up and disposed of at the beginning of each legislative day. The House, which operates under much stricter rules than the Senate, usually adjourns from day to day. The Senate often recesses.

Recommit to Committee -- A simple motion, made on the floor after deliberation on a bill, to return it to the committee which reported it. If approved, recommittal usually is considered a death blow to the bill. In the House a motion to recommit can be made only by a Member opposed to the bill, and in recognizing a Member to make the motion, the Speaker gives the minority party preference over the majority.

A motion to recommit may include instructions to the committee to report the bill again with specific amendments or by a certain date. Or the instructions may be to make a particular study with no definite deadline for final action.

Reconsider a Vote -- A motion to reconsider the vote by which an action was taken has the effect, until it is disposed of, of suspending the action. In the Senate the motion can be made only by a Member who voted on the prevailing side of the original question, or by a Member who did not vote at all. In the House it can be made only by a Member on the prevailing side.

A common practice after close votes in the Senate is a motion to reconsider followed by a motion to table the motion to reconsider. On this motion to table, Senators vote as they voted on the original question to enable the motion to table to prevail. The matter is then finally closed and further motions to reconsider are not entertained. In the House, as a routine precaution, a motion to reconsider usually is made every time a measure is passed. Such a motion almost always is tabled immediately, thus shutting off the possibility of future reconsideration except by unanimous consent.

Motions to reconsider must be entered in the Senate within the next two days of actual session after the original vote has been taken. In the House they must be entered either on the same day or on the next succeeding day the House is in session.

Record Vote -- This is a roll call of the entire chamber membership, to which each Member on the floor must answer "yea", "nay", or, if he does not wish to vote, "present." The Constitution requires yea-and-nay votes on the question of overriding a veto. In other cases, they can be obtained by the demand of one-fifth of the Members present. In the House, the yeas and nays are required automatically whenever a Member objects to a non-record vote taken when a quorum was not present, if the question is one which requires a quorum. The yeas and nays are not taken in the Committee of the Whole.

Report -- Both a verb and a noun, as a Congressional term. A committee which has been examining a bill referred to it by the parent chamber "reports" its finding and recommendations to the chamber when the committee returns the measure. The process is called "reporting" a bill.

A "report" is the document setting forth the committee's explanation of its action. House and Senate reports are numbered separately and are designated S Rept or H Rept. Conference reports are numbered and designated in the same way as regular House reports.

Most reports favor a bill's passage. Adverse reports are occasionally submitted, but more often, when a committee disapproves a bill, it simply fails to report it at all. When a committee report is not unanimous, the dissenting committeemen may file a statement of their views, called Minority Views and referred to as a Minority Report. Sometimes a bill is reported without recommendation.

Rescission -- An item in an appropriation bill rescinding, or cancelling, funds previously appropriated but not spent.

Resolution -- A simple resolution, designated H Res or S Res, deals with matters entirely within the prerogatives of one house or the other. It requires neither passage by the other chamber nor approval by the President, and does not have the force of law. Most resolutions deal with the rules of one house. They also are used to express the sentiments of a single house, as condolences to the family of a deceased member or to give "advice" on foreign policy or other executive business. (Also see Concurrent and Joint Resolutions.)

Rider -- A provision tacked on to a bill which its sponsor hopes to get through more easily by including in other legislation. Riders become law if the bills embodying them do. Riders providing for legislation in appropriations bills are outstanding examples, though technically they are banned.

Rule -- The term has two specific Congressional meanings. A rule may be a standing order governing the conduct of House or Senate business and listed in the chamber's book of rules. The rules deal with duties of officers, order of business, admission to the floor, voting procedures, etc.

In the House, a rule also may be a decision made by its Rules Committee about the handling of a particular bill on the floor. The Committee may determine under which standing rule a bill shall be considered, or it may provide a "special rule" in the form of a resolution. If the resolution is adopted by the House, the temporary rule becomes as valid as any standing rule, and lapses only after action has been completed on the measure to which it pertains.

A special rule sets the time limit on general debate. It may also waive points of order against provisions of the bill in question or against specified amendments intended to be proposed to the bill. It may even forbid all amendments or all amendments except, in some cases, those proposed by the legislative committee which handled the bill. In this instance it is known as a "closed" or "gag" rule as opposed to an "open" rule which puts no limitation on floor action, thus leaving the bill open to alteration. (See Suspend the Rules.)

Secretary of the Senate -- Chief administrative officer of the Senate responsible for direction of duties of Senate employees, education of pages, administration of oaths, receipt of registration of lobbyists and other activities necessary for the continuing operation of the Senate.

Select or Special Committee -- A committee set up for a special purpose and a limited time by resolution of either House or Senate. Most special committees are investigative in nature.

Senatorial Courtesy -- Sometimes referred to as "the courtesy of the Senate," it is a general practice without written rule applied to consideration of executive nominations. In practice, generally, it means nominations from a state are not to be confirmed unless they have been approved by the Senators of the President's party of that state, with other Senators following their lead in the attitude they take toward such nominations.

Sine Die -- See Adjournment sine die.

Slip Laws -- The first official publication of a bill that has been enacted into law. Each is published separately in unbound single-sheet or pamphlet form. It usually takes two to three days from the date of Presidential approval to the time when slip laws become available.

Speaker -- The presiding officer of the House of Representatives, elected by its Members.

Special Session --A session of Congress after it has adjourned sine die, completing its regular session. Special sessions are convened by the President of the U.S. under his Constitutional powers.

Stand -- A lawmaker's position, for or against, on a given issue or vote. He can make known his stand on a roll-call vote by answering "yea" or "nay," by "pairing" for or against, or by "announcing" his position to the House or Senate. Members also may go on record by answering the Congressional Quarterly Poll of unrecorded Congressmen on roll calls. (See Pair, and Record Vote, above.)

Standing Committee -- A group permanently provided for by House or Senate rules. The standing committees at present are specified by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, which broadly defines their respective jurisdictions.

Standing Vote -- A non-record vote used in both House and Senate. A standing vote, also called a division vote, is taken as follows: Members in favor of a proposal stand and are counted by the presiding officer; then Members opposed stand and are counted. There is no record of how individual Members voted. In the House, the presiding officer announces the number for and against. In the Senate, usually only the result is announced.

Statutes-at-Large -- A chronological arrangement of the laws enacted in each session of Congress. Though indexed, the laws are not arranged by subject matter nor is there an indication of how they affect previous law. (See U.S. Code.)

Strike From the Record -- Remarks made on the House floor may offend some Member, who moves that the offending words be "taken down" for the Speaker's cognizance, and then expunged from the verbatim report to be carried in the Congressional Record.

Strike Out the Last Word -- A move whereby House Members are entitled to speak for a fixed time on a measure then being debated by the chamber. A Member gains recognition from the chair by moving to strike out the last word of the amendment or section of the bill then under consideration. The motion is pro forma, and customarily requires no vote.

Strike the Enacting Clause -- Each bill before Congress starts off with the phrase: "Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That . . ." A Member wishing to kill a bill frequently will move from the floor to "strike the enacting clause" -- that first sentence -- from the bill. If the action carries and the enacting clause is stricken, the bill cannot, of course, be enacted into law.

Substitute -- A motion, an amendment, or an entire bill introduced in place of pending business. Passage of a substitute measure kills the original measure by supplanting it. A substitute may be amended.

Supplemental Appropriation -- An appropriation supplemental to the regular appropriation, but not a deficiency measure. Supplemental appropriations normally are passed after the regular appropriation, but supposedly before the fiscal year to which they apply. Deficiencies are passed in the same fiscal year to which they apply. This distinction is not always adhered to.

Suspend the Rules -- Often a time-saving procedure for passing bills in the House. The wording of the motion, which may be made by any Member recognized by the Speaker, is: "I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (HR 000)..." A favorable vote by two-thirds of those present is required for passage. Debate is limited to 40 minutes and no amendments from the floor are permitted. If a two-thirds favorable vote is not attained, the bill may be considered later under regular procedures.

Table a Bill -- The motion to "lay on the table" is not debatable in either house, and is usually a method of making a final, adverse disposition of a matter. In the Senate, however, different language is sometimes used. The motion is worded to let a bill "lie on the table," perhaps for subsequent "picking up." This motion is more flexible, merely keeping the bill pending for later action, if desired.

Teller Vote -- In the House, Members file past tellers and are counted as for or against a measure, but they are not recorded individually. The teller vote is not used in the Senate. In the House, tellers are ordered upon demand of one-fifth of a quorum. This is 44 in the House, 20 in Committee of the Whole.

Treaties -- Executive proposals which must be submitted to the Senate for approval of two-thirds of the Senators present. Before they act on such foreign policy matters, Senators may refer them to committee for scrutiny. Treaties are read three times and debated in the chamber much as are legislative proposals.

Union Calendar -- Bills which directly or indirectly appropriate money or raise revenue are placed on this House calendar according to the date reported from committee.

U.S. Code -- A consolidation and codification of the general and permanent laws of the United States arranged by subject under 50 Titles, the first six dealing with general or political subjects, and the other 44 alphabetically arranged from Agriculture to War and National Defense. The Code is now revised every six years and a supplement is published after each session of Congress.

Veto -- Disapproval by the President of a bill or joint resolution, other than one proposing an amendment to the Constitution. When Congress is in session, the President must veto a bill within 10 days, excluding Sundays, after he has received it; otherwise it becomes law with or without his signature. When the President vetoes a bill, he returns it to the house of its origin with a message stating his objections. The veto then becomes a question of high privilege. (See Override a Veto.)

When Congress has adjourned, the President may pocket veto a bill by failing to sign it. (See Pocket Veto.)

Voice Vote -- In either House or Senate, Members answer "aye" or "no" in chorus and the presiding officer decides the result. The term also is used loosely to indicate action by unanimous consent or without objection.

Whip -- See Majority Whip.

Without Objection -- Used in lieu of a vote on noncontroversial motions, amendments, or bills, which may be passed in either the House or the Senate if no Member voices an objection.

86th CONGRESS... 2nd SESSION

Membership

Seniority

Committees

Facts and Figures on 1960 Session:

Membership Turnover, Party Leaders, August Session

The second session of the 86th Congress convened at noon, Jan. 6, 1960 and adjourned, temporarily, July 3 at 8:51 a.m. so members could attend the political party conventions. After the conventions, the Senate reconvened at noon Aug. 8 and the House at noon Aug. 15. Final adjournment of the 86th Congress, sine die, came at 11:51 p.m. Sept. 1. In 1960, 6,327 bills and resolutions were introduced. Of these, 417 eventually became public laws and 256 became private laws. In the 86th Congress over-all, including both 1959 and 1960, a total of 20,164 measures was introduced; of these, 800 became public laws and 592 became private laws.

Party Ratios

When Congress convened Jan. 6, Democrats held almost two-thirds of the seats in each chamber. The 1960 session was the sixth consecutive session in which both chambers of Congress and the Presidency were controlled by different parties. Democrats had majorities since the 1955 session.

On opening day in 1960 there were 65 Democrats and 35 Republicans in the Senate. During the session, one Democrat died and was replaced by a member of his own party. Also in 1960, a Democrat was elected to fill the seat of a Republican who had died during the first session, and who had been replaced by temporary appointment by a Republican. This made the party ratio 66 Democrats and 34 Republicans at adjournment Sept. 1.

In the House on opening day there were 280 Democrats, 153 Republicans and four vacancies. Five additional vacancies occurred during the session. Four vacancies were filled during the session; five were still unfilled at adjournment. The party composition Sept. 1, at adjournment, was 280 Democrats, 152 Republicans and five vacancies.

The following chart compares party ratios for the 83rd, 84th, 85th and 86th Congresses:

	SENATE			HOUSE
	GOP	DEM	IND	GOP	DEM	IND
Jan. 3, 1953	48	47	1	221	211[2]	1

[1]One vacancy. [2]Two vacancies. [3]Three vacancies.
†The GOP regained its one-vote margin June 28, 1954.
Rep. Vincent J. Dellay (N.J.) switched parties and Jan. 14 took his seat as a Democrat, making the lineup 199 Republicans, 232 Democrats.*

Senate Leadership

The Senate convened with Vice President Richard M. Nixon, president of the Senate, in the chair. Other officers of the Senate also continued from the first session:

President Pro Tempore -- Carl Hayden (D Ariz.)
Majority Leader -- Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas)
Majority Whip -- Mike Mansfield (D Mont.)
Minority Leader -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.)
Minority Whip -- Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.)

LIBERAL CHALLENGE

Johnson's leadership was reaffirmed Jan. 12, after a week-long challenge by liberal Democratic Senators, in two test votes of the Senate Democratic Conference (the party caucus, consisting of all Senate Democrats). Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) Jan. 11, speaking for the insurgents, said, "It seems to me that a method of formulating party policies that is representative of and responsive to the majority will of the Democratic Senators is necessary to a responsible performance by the party."

The first test came on a Gore motion which embodied the central issue of the insurgent group's position. The motion would have made the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, which at present schedules legislation for floor action, into "an organization for evolving a coherent party policy on legislation." Committee membership would have been increased from nine to 15, with members selected by the entire Senate Democratic Conference instead of by Johnson. The motion was defeated, 51-12. A second motion, to confirm Johnson's power to fill vacancies on the Democratic Steering Committee, which makes Democratic committee assignments, was passed 51-11.

All parties agreed that discussion had been calm and on a "high level." Gore said afterwards, "While we seemed to lose I think we have won a great deal."

Sen. Paul Douglas (D Ill.) said that voting against Johnson on the first vote were: himself, Gore, Sens. Joseph S. Clark (Pa.), John A. Carroll (Colo.), Philip A. Hart (Mich.), Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.), Pat McNamara (Mich.), A.S. Mike Monroney (Okla.), Wayne Morse (Ore.), William Proxmire (Wis.), and Ralph W. Yarborough (Texas). With the exception of Humphrey and Monroney, and the addition of Sen. John F. Kennedy (Mass.), the same Senators formed the minority on the second vote. Kennedy voted with Johnson on the first vote.

Johnson Jan. 13 said he didn't think the votes would "prevent us from working together on the issues that are really important to the country." Clark Jan. 13 said a failure to change the committees by 1961 "will be little short of catastrophic...if, as we hope, we will have a Democratic President urging a liberal legislative program on a Democratic Senate."

The opposition to Johnson began formally at the first Senate Democratic Conference, Jan. 7. There Johnson did not deliver a personal "state of the union" message as he had in past years. Most of the meeting was taken up with an open discussion of how and when conferences would be called in the future. Johnson had been attacked on the infrequency of Democratic conferences during 1959.

At the Jan. 7 meeting Clark made a motion which would have established regulations for the calling of Democratic conferences. He withdrew the motion when Johnson said he would call a conference whenever one Senator asked him to do so. Johnson said after the meeting that he expected there would be more conferences in 1960. He said, however, that there was not a "great deal" to be gained from such meetings. Johnson Jan. 9, apparently before receiving a letter from seven Senators requesting a conference, called the Jan. 12 meeting to discuss the Gore motion which had first been offered Jan. 7.

House Leadership

House leadership in 1960 remained the same as in the first session, with Sam Rayburn (D Texas) as Speaker of the House. Rayburn first assumed the post Sept. 16, 1940 in the waning days of the 76th Congress and continued to hold it except during the Republican-controlled 80th and 83rd Congresses, when he was Minority Leader. As early as Jan. 31, 1951 Rayburn set the record for the most days served as Speaker when he surpassed Henry Clay's figure of 3,056½ days.

Rayburn also added to his House longevity record March 4 when he began his 48th consecutive year in Congress. Only one man has served in Congress longer than Rayburn: Sen. Carl Hayden (D), who was elected as Arizona's first Representative in 1912, when it became the 48th state, and moved to the Senate in 1927.

Other party officers were:

Majority Leader -- John W. McCormack (D Mass.)
Majority Whip -- Carl Albert (D Okla.)
Minority Leader -- Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.)
Minority Whip -- Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.)

Congressional Recess

In an unusual, though not unprecedented move, Congressional Democratic leaders June 29 agreed to recess Congress at the beginning of July and call it back into session Aug. 8, after the Democratic and Republican National Conventions ended. It had been expected previously that Congress would adjourn for the year before the Democratic National Convention began July 11.

The post-convention session was scheduled at the behest of Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas). Johnson said there was not enough time before July 11 to finish all the work that had to be done. A number of GOP Congressmen, including Rep. Thomas M. Pelly (Wash.) and Sen. Thruston B. Morton (Ky.), the GOP national chairman, said the recess was intended, in some way, to aid Johnson's then unannounced candidacy for the Democratic Presidential nomination. Johnson denied the allegation. A number of Senators objected that the post-convention session might produce nothing but politicking, as occurred in 1948 when President Harry S. Truman (D) called a special session. However, the recess plan won the endorsement of Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.).

The Senate June 30, by a 63-26 roll-call vote, adopted a resolution (S Con Res 112) to recess July 2. (For voting, see chart p. 509).. The resolution required the Senate to reconvene Aug. 8 at noon and the House to reconvene Aug. 15 at noon. However, because of the fight over the sugar bill (see story, p. 208), recess did not actually occur, under an amended recess resolution approved by both chambers, until early the morning of July 3.

August Session

After the conventions, the Senate reconvened Aug. 8, the House Aug. 15 for a session that continued to Sept. 1.

Democratic Sens. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) and Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), their party's candidates for President and Vice President, July 31 in Hyannis Port, Mass., had listed five key measures to whose passage, they said, they intended to devote their "full energies" during the August session, and one -- a farm bill -- which they said might be considered. Not one of the six bills was cleared for the President before Congress adjourned. The five key measures were: medical care for the aged, aid to education, minimum wage, common-site picketing, and housing. (See stories, p. 148, 232, 309, 320, 271).

President Eisenhower, in messages to Congress and party leaders Aug. 8 and 23 (for texts, see p. 634, 639), listed 29 specific proposals on which he called for action before Congress adjourned. Most of them were repeats of earlier requests that Congressional Democrats had ignored. Only 6 of the President's 29 requests were approved by Congress (several in a form falling short of what Mr. Eisenhower wanted) in August. The six approved requests were: Antarctic Treaty, Latin-America aid, contingency fund, mutual security funds, helium bill, and mineral leasing. (For stories, see p. 228, 216, 166, 178, 332, 254)

AUGUST ACTION

Although it failed to pass most of the Eisenhower and Kennedy-Johnson programs, Congress in August did complete the following major business:

APPROPRIATIONS -- Action was completed on five major appropriations bills: mutual security (HR 12619), State-Justice-Judiciary (HR 11666), Labor-HEW (HR 11390), Public Works (HR 12326) and Second Supplemental for fiscal 1961 (HR 13161).

OTHER MEASURES -- In addition, these major measures were passed by Congress in August (page references are to this volume);

Antarctic Treaty. (p. 228)

Suspension of equal-time broadcasting requirements for Presidential campaign (H J Res 207). (p. 290)

Lead-zinc subsidies bill (HR 8860). (p. 253)

Stop-gap housing measure (H J Res 784). (p. 271)

$600 million Latin-America aid (HR 13021). (p. 216)

Anti-payola bill (S 1898). (p. 356)

Social Security increases, including aid to "medically indigent" persons (HR 12580). (p. 148)

Helium conservation program (HR 10548) and mineral leasing revisions (HR 10455). (p. 332, 254)

Extension of Mexican farm labor law (HR 12579). (p. 369)

Creation of NATO Citizens Commission (S J Res 170). (p. 348)

Expansion of graduate public health training program (HR 6871). (p. 344)

Increase in dairy supports (S 2917). (p. 324)

Resolution (S Res 334) opposing recess appointments to Supreme Court. (p. 264)

Second Session Turnover

HOUSE -- On Jan. 1, 1960 there were three vacancies in the House in seats formerly held by Reps. James G. Polk (D Ohio, 6th District), who had died April 28, 1959; Charles A. Boyle (D Ill., 12th District), who had died Nov. 4, 1959; and Alvin R. Bush (R Pa., 17th District), who had died Nov. 5, 1959.

On Jan. 1, a fourth vacancy occurred when Rep. Isidore Dollinger (D N.Y., 23rd District) resigned to take office as Bronx County, N.Y., district attorney.

During 1960, three of the four vacancies were filled. The fourth, that caused by Boyle's death, went unfilled.

The other three vacancies were filled as follows:

- Ward M. Miller (R) was elected Nov. 8 to the Ohio 6th District seat formerly held by Polk. Miller did not seek election to the 87th Congress, but only to the remaining two months of Polk's term in the 86th Congress, and was scheduled to leave office Jan. 3, 1961.
- Herman T. Schneebeli (R) was elected April 26 to the Pennsylvania 17th District seat formerly held by Bush. Schneebeli was sworn in May 5.
- Jacob H. Gilbert (D) was elected March 8 to the New York 23rd District seat formerly held by Dollinger. Gilbert was sworn in March 11.

The following additional changes in House membership resulted from deaths or resignations after Congress convened Jan. 6:

- Richard M. Simpson (R Pa., 18th District) died Jan. 7. In a special election April 26, Douglas H. Elliott (R) was chosen to replace Simpson, and he was sworn in May 5. Elliott, however, died June 19 under the exhaust pipe of his car (he apparently committed suicide). J. Irving Whalley (R) Nov. 8 was elected to replace Elliott for the remaining two months of the term. Whalley also was elected to a full term in the 87th Congress.
- David M. Hall (D N.C., 12th District) died Jan. 29. In a special election June 25, Roy A. Taylor (D) was chosen to replace Hall, and he was sworn in July 2.
- Russell V. Mack (R Wash., 3rd District) died March 28. Julia B. Hansen (D) was elected Nov. 8 to replace Mack for the remaining two months of the term. She also was elected to a full term in the 87th Congress.
- Quentin N. Burdick (D N.D., AL) resigned Aug. 8 after his election June 28 to the Senate (see below). The House seat remained unfilled.
- Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass., 5th District) died Sept. 10, 1960. The seat remained unfilled.
- Keith Thomson (R Wyo., AL) died Dec. 9. His House seat remained unfilled.

SENATE -- On Jan. 1, 1960 there were no Senate vacancies although one Senator -- C. Norman Brunsdale (R N.D.) -- was holding his seat on an interim basis, by appointment, pending a special election June 28 to fill the remainder of the term. Brunsdale was appointed Nov. 19, 1959 to fill the seat left vacant by the death Nov. 8, 1959 of Sen. William Langer (R). Brunsdale was sworn in Jan. 6.

In the June 28 special election, Rep. Quentin N. Burdick (D) was chosen as Senator, and he was sworn in Aug. 8, replacing Brunsdale. Burdick won the seat for the remainder of Langer's term, expiring in January 1965.

Other changes during 1960:

Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.) died March 9. He was succeeded temporarily by Judge Hall Stoner Lusk (D), who was appointed March 15 by Oregon Gov. Mark O. Hatfield (R) to fill the seat pending a special election. Lusk was sworn in March 23. In the special election Nov. 8, Maurine Neuberger, widow of the Senator, was chosen to complete the remaining two months of the term (as well as for a full six-year term beginning in 1961).

Sen. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.) died Sept. 13. Missouri Gov. James T. Blair Jr. (D) Sept. 23 appointed Lt. Gov. Edward V. Long (D) to fill the seat until a special election Nov. 8. In the special election, Long defeated Lon Hocker (R) for the remaining portion of Hennings' term, expiring in January 1963.

Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), the U.S. President-elect, resigned his Senate seat Dec. 22. State Gov. Foster Furcolo (D) said he would appoint Benjamin A. Smith II (D) to fill the seat until a special election in 1962.

Seniority

Senate rank generally is determined according to the official date of the beginning of a Member's service, which is Jan. 3 except in the case of new Members sworn in after Congress is in session. For those appointed or elected to fill unexpired terms, the date of appointment, certification or swearing in determines the Senator's rank.

When Members are sworn in on the same day, custom decrees that those with prior political experience take precedence. Counted as political experience, in order of importance, are Senatorial, House and Gubernatorial service. Information on prior experience is given below. The dates following Senators' names refer to the beginning of their present service.

RESIDENT COMMISSIONER

Fernós-Isern, A. (Pop.-Dem. Puerto Rico)

Died or resigned after Jan. 6, 1960.
See changes in membership, page 26.

Seniority

House rank generally is determined according to the official date of the beginning of a Member's service, which is Jan. 3 except in the case of Members elected to fill vacancies, when the date of election determines the rank.

When Members enter the House on the same day, those with prior House experience take precedence, starting with those with the greatest consecutive service. Experience as Senator or Governor is disregarded. Information on prior experience is given below. The dates following Members' names refer to the beginning of their present service.

BASIC FACTS ON CONGRESS

Membership -- 100 Senators, two from each state; 437 Representatives, ranging from 43 from New York to one each from Alaska, Delaware, Hawaii, Nevada, Vermont and Wyoming. The House total is due to revert to 435 after 1962. The latter figure has been constant since 1913 but apportionment of House seats among the various states is revised every 10 years, based on what the national census shows.

Elections -- A Senator's term runs for six years, a Representative's for two years. One-third of the Senatorial seats are up for election every two years. If a Senator dies or resigns, the governor of his state may appoint a successor to serve until an election is held for the Senate seat. A vacancy in the House can be filled only through an election.

Senators and Representatives are elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in even years. Maine voted in 1957 to give up its unique September elections and voted with the rest of the country in November, starting in 1960.

Qualifications -- A Senator, when sworn into office, must be at least 30 years old, a U.S. citizen for nine years, and live in the state from which he is elected. A Representative must be at least 25, a U.S. citizen for seven years, and live in the state from which he is elected.

Under the Constitution, each chamber is the judge of the qualifications of its Members. If the election of a Senator or Representative is challenged and the issue brought to the floor of the chamber concerned before the individual is sworn in, his right to take office is determined by a majority vote of the chamber. Once a Member of Congress is sworn in, he may be expelled only by a two-thirds vote of the Members of the house in which he is serving.

Salaries -- A Senator or Representative receives an annual salary of $22,500, plus specific allowances for office help, stationery, telephones and telegrams, travel, and office rent in his home District or state, if space in a Federal building is not furnished.

Officers -- The presiding officer of the Senate is the Vice President of the United States, called the President of the Senate. The House is presided over by a Speaker who is elected by his fellow Members of the House at the start of each Congress.

86th Congress - Senate: Ages, Professions, Veteran Status

This chart lists the membership of the Senate for the 86th Congress, second session, as of Jan. 1, 1960.

Column 1 shows the age of each Senator as of Jan. 1, 1960; Column 10 shows the Senator's unofficial seniority within his party based both on years served and prior political experience.

86th Congress - House: Tabulation of Ages . . .

The chart on this and the following page lists the membership of the House for the 86th Congress, second session, as of Jan. 1, 1960.

Column 1 shows the age of each Representative as of Jan. 1, 1960; Column 10 shows the Representative's unofficial seniority within his party based both on years served and prior political experience.

Check marks (✓) in Columns 2 through 9 indicate prior profession(s) of each Representative, and whether he is a veteran. See Summary and Key on the next page for description of each numbered column and the number of persons with experience in an indicated profession, with a breakdown by party.

Congress - 1960

Meager Output Reflected Inability of Parties To Pursue Compromise in Fateful Election Year

Leaving behind a record of indifferent accomplishment and spirited partisanship, the second session of the 86th Congress adjourned Sept. 1, 1960 at 11:51 p.m. The sixth year of divided government had been the least rewarding for the nation, for President Eisenhower, and for the Democratic majority in Congress.

Weighed against the slim fruits of the 1960 session were acres of unharvested production, blighted by the rust of political schism. Only a fresh mandate from the voters on Nov. 8 -- confidently sought by both parties -- offered hope of fulfilling the promises made at the party nominating conventions which interrupted the 1960 Congressional session.

When the 1960 session opened Jan. 6, the eyes of party leaders on both sides of the aisle were firmly fixed on two dates six months hence: the nominating conventions of the Democratic and Republican parties. What's more, the three serious candidates for the Democratic nomination and the only contender for the GOP spot were all gathered in the Senate. Under the circumstances, a truce was out of the question and the prospects for compromise severely limited.

What ensued only confirmed this gloomy outlook. It also pointed up the extent of the split between Democratic liberals and Southern conservatives, whose coalition with Republicans proved highly effective in sewing up or watering down some of the majority party's most cherished legislation. Not so strong as to be able to put over disputed portions of the President's program, the coalition was nonetheless able to exert a power of veto fully as strong as that of the Chief Executive.

This became most apparent when Congress resumed work Aug. 8 after recessing July 3 for the conventions. As the Democratic Presidential and Vice Presidential nominees, committed to a vigorously liberal platform, Sens. John F. Kennedy (Mass.) and Lyndon B. Johnson (Texas) found themselves blocked by the coalition on each of the three bills to which they were pledged: medical care for the aged, school aid, and minimum wage. Presiding over their discomfort yet out of reach was their chief antagonist, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, the GOP nominee.

Highlights of the major legislative developments of the year included the following.

Foreign Policy: Congress wound up by cutting the President's mutual security request by about 11 percent -- less than in 1959. Rapidly worsening relations with Cuba helped to put over another of his requests, for authority to cut Cuba's profitable U.S. sugar quota. Congress also authorized a new aid program for Latin America, approved U.S. participation in the International Development Assn., and ratified a new security treaty with Japan.

National Security: After protracted and critical hearings on the nation's defense effort, Democrats agreed that it was inadequate and added more than $600 million to the Administration's $41-billion military budget. But they couldn't force the President to spend the extra money, most of which was frozen by the Budget Bureau.

Economic Policy: Democrats wouldn't hear of granting the President authority to raise interest rates on Government bonds. Nor would they agree to raise postal rates or increase the federal gas tax. But the President won postponement of scheduled tax reductions and a temporary increase in the ceiling on the public debt. Only one of his antitrust requests -- for the regulation of bank mergers -- was approved.

Civil Benefits: Much hullabaloo about extending medical care benefits to the aged through the social security system was boiled down, in the end, to a bill giving the states $200 million to improve their benefit programs for the needy. Both houses passed major school aid programs, but the coalition blocked compromise of the two bills. President Eisenhower vetoed his second area development bill, and the Senate failed to override. Omnibus housing legislation, passed by the Senate, was killed by the House Rules Committee. Nor was action completed on a minimum wage bill; two versions of the measure died in conference. The Senate and the House also acted on different versions of a wheat bill, and neither survived.

General Government: It took the Senate two months to complete its debate, but Congress finally agreed to a limited voting rights bill designed to help Negroes to register. Also enacted -- over the President's veto -- was an $750-million pay raise for federal employees. Payola was outlawed as a popular pastime, but Democrats scenting victory in November wouldn't agree to pass a bill creating a flock of federal judgeships before the election.

Foreign Policy

New Crises Boosted MSP Funds to $3.8 Billion

Criticism of the 10-year-old Mutual Security Program showed no signs of flagging in 1960, but when the shouting was over Congress had given the President substantially more money than in 1959, when a smaller request had been cut by $700 million. The reason: a perceptible increase in East-West tensions (see next page), which also served to spur approval of new programs for economic assistance to Latin America and other underdeveloped areas.

Apart from the sums involved, no great changes were proposed by the President in his Feb. 16 message asking $4,175,000,000 for MSP in fiscal 1961. Of this, almost one-half ($2 billion) was for military aid, for which Congress had voted only $1.3 billion in 1959. Other major items were $724 million for defense support (economic grants to Spain and 11 countries bordering the Sino-Soviet bloc); $268 million for special assistance (economic grants to other areas); $172 million for technical assistance; $700 million for the Development Loan Fund, and $175 million for contingencies.

Authorization: The traditional authorization-appropriation cycle -- giving Congress two whacks at MSP each year -- was modified in 1960, since the legislators had agreed in 1959 to authorize $1.1 billion for the Development Loan Fund in fiscal 1961 and "such sums as may be necessary" for military aid in 1961 and 1962. New authorizations, therefore, were needed for less than $1.5 billion of the President's MSP request.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee started off by cutting $136.5 million from this amount, and the House concurred April 21, by a 243-130 roll-call vote. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee then voted to restore most of the House cuts. In Senate debate starting April 27, critics of MSP offered a batch of restrictive amendments requiring 20 roll calls. The Senate refused, 27-32, to set a ceiling of $1.8 billion on military assistance, but agreed, 48-40, to cut the contingency fund by $20 million. No effort was made to revive the proposal, rejected in 1959, to give the DLF long-term borrowing authority of $1 billion a year.

As passed by the Senate May 2, by a 60-25 vote, the bill authorized $1.4 billion. The two chambers then agreed May 12 to a compromise of $1,366,200,000 which was about $89 million under the President's request. Offsetting this relatively generous sum, however, were a number of new program restrictions, including one designed to penalize the United Arab Republic for its economic blockade against Israel.

Appropriation: Two days before the ill-fated summit meeting of May 16, Rep. Otto E. Passman (D La.), chairman of the House Appropriations Foreign Operations Subcommittee, charged that MSP was riddled with "corruption, scandal and blackmail" and warned that his group would cut up to $1.5 billion from the request. Passman's blast was met with heavy counter-fire by Administration spokesmen, which intensified as the Appropriations Committee June 13 reported a $3.4 billion bill, almost $800 million under the request. One-half of the cut was in military aid, for which $1.6 billion was recommended.

As House debate began June 16, President Eisenhower's impending visit to Japan was cancelled in the face of mass rioting in Tokyo (see below). The House promptly agreed, 212-173, to restore $200 million of the military aid cut. A provision barring aid to the Indus Basin development project in India and Pakistan, was also dropped before the House voted 259-124 to send the $3.6 billion bill to the Senate.

By the time Congress reconvened after its July convention recess, a new crisis had boiled up in the Congo, which gained its independence from Belgium June 30 only to face anarchy when its army mutinied and began terrorizing Belgian and other white residents. Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba first appealed for U.S. troops, which President Eisenhower refused. But the United Nations Security Council voted July 14 to organize and dispatch a UN military force drawn largely from other African nations. When the Senate returned to work Aug. 8, the President asked for another $100 million in MSP contingency funds "to keep America poised for sudden developments such as those in the Congo where a United States airlift and other efforts were needed suddenly and critically."

Supplemental: The Senate Appropriations Committee granted this request and, in addition, approved restoration of all of the House cuts except the $200 million reduction in military aid, bringing the bill reported Aug. 19 up to almost $4 billion. The Senate concurred Aug. 24, with minimum debate, by a 67-26 vote. But in conference the measure was chopped to $3.7 billion, eliciting a plea from the President to Senate and House leaders to reject the compromise. Both chambers, however, approved the report Aug. 26, after assurances that additional funds might be included in a pending supplemental bill, also passed by the House Aug. 26.

Committee amendments adding $190 million in MSP funds to this measure were approved by the Senate Aug. 29, by a vote of 56-31. The House voted 203-193 to accept a $65 million increase for defense support, but rejected the other additions, and the Senate agreed. Congress thus appropriated $3,781,350,000 for MSP, or about $468.7 million less than the revised request of $4,250,000,000. The 11 percent cut was about par for the tricky mutual security course.

Summit Foundered on Wreckage of "Spy Flight"

The American tour of Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev in September 1959 had seemed to herald an era of reduced East-West tension. One year later, however, the "spirit of Camp David" had vanished without a trace, and the United States and the Soviet Union were again at loggerheads across the board. The events of May 1-16 marked the turning point in devastating fashion.

The U-2 Affair: With the long-awaited summit meeting between President Eisenhower, Khrushchev, Prime Minister Harold Macmillan, and President Charles de Gaulle scheduled to open May 16 in Paris, the world was startled when the Soviet Premier announced May 5 that on May 1 an American plane had been shot down over the Soviet Union. In Washington, the Government said the plane might be a missing U-2 on a high altitude weather mission from a base in Turkey. "There was no deliberate attempt to violate Soviet air space and there never has been," said a State Department spokesman.

On May 7, however, Khrushchev let the cat out of the bag. The U-2 pilot (Francis Gary Powers) had been captured and had confessed that he was on a 4,000-mile photo reconnaissance flight from Pakistan to Norway when downed 1,200 miles within the Soviet borders. Powers, said Khrushchev, had admitted that he was employed by the C.I.A. Caught in what looked like a barefaced lie, the State Department said "there was no authorization" from Washington for such a flight.

Two days later, Secretary of State Christian A. Herter did an about-face and announced that at the President's direction the U.S. had engaged in "extensive aerial surveillance by unarmed civilian aircraft" along the borders and over the Soviet Union in order "to overcome this danger of surprise attack." On May 11, President Eisenhower took full responsibility for ordering the overflights as a "distasteful but vital necessity."

The Summit: In a three-hour meeting of the Big Four May 16, Khrushchev denounced the May 1 "spy flight" and laid down his terms: the conference could proceed only on condition that the United States declare that it "will not violate the state borders of the U.S.S.R. with its aircraft, that it deplores the provocative actions undertaken in the past, and will punish those directly guilty of such actions." He proposed a six-to-eight-month postponement, and cancelled his invitation to the President to visit Russia June 10.

The President replied that the overflights had already been suspended and would not be continued. But he told Khrushchev that "his ultimatum would never be acceptable to the United States," and charged that the Soviets had come to Paris "with the sole intention of sabotaging this meeting." The conference promptly collapsed, and the leaders withdrew to their capitals in a hurricane of mutual recrimination. The United Nations Security Council, urged by the Soviets to condemn the "aggressive" U.S. overflights, rejected the resolution May 26, by a 7-2 vote, with two abstentions.

Meanwhile, Democrats and Republicans traded punches over U.S. responsibility for the summit collapse, and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee launched a closed-door inquiry into the U-2 affair. In a report released June 25, the Committee concluded that if it was Khrushchev's purpose to wreck the summit meeting "the U-2 incident made his task easier." Given no "compelling reasons" by the Administration for the May 1 mission, the Committee decided that "there is good reason to conclude that the flight should not have gone." As for the conflicting official statements of May 5, 7, and 9, "what was most lacking in this period" was direction from the top.

Second Incident: On July 11, the Soviet Union announced that on July 1 a second U.S. plane had been shot down over Soviet waters north of Archangel, and that two members of the RB-47's six-man crew had been picked up. Again the UN Security Council was asked to condemn "these continuing provocative activities." The U.S., however, denied that the plane had penetrated Soviet jursidiction, and the Council voted 9-2 to reject the Soviet resolution. The Soviets announced plans to try the two captured crewmen, and proceeded to carry out their intention to try Powers, the U-2 pilot, who was judged guilty Aug. 19 and sentenced to 10 years in prison.

Disarmament: Collapse of the summit conference also signaled the end of disarmament talks, which had been resumed March 15 in Geneva after a two-and-one-half year lapse. As the 10-nation conference opened, there appeared to be little chance of bridging the gap between Soviet and U.S. positions, and the talks were suspended April 29 pending the outcome of the summit meeting. The conference was resumed June 7, only to end June 27 when Communist delegates walked out charging the West with refusal to negotiate. The problem was sent Aug. 16 to the 82-nation UN Disarmament Commission.

Test Ban: Negotiations for a treaty to prohibit further tests of nuclear weapons, begun in 1958 by the U.S., Britain, and the Soviet Union, continued at Geneva in 1960 with limited but perceptible progress. The Soviets March 20 gave conditional approval to a U.S. proposal for a ban on underground tests above a minimum level, as well as all above-ground tests. By the time Congress adjourned, however, the negotiators were still divided regarding the length of any voluntary moratorium on undetectable tests, the quota of annual on-site inspections to be permitted to each side, and the staffing of the proposed international control commission.

Latin America

Relations between the United States and Latin America, soured by a number of disputes in recent years, were further disrupted in 1960 by a bitter quarrel between Fidel Castro's regime in Cuba and the State Department. To demonstrate U.S. sympathy for the economic aspirations of the other American Republics, President Eisenhower visited Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay during a 10-day trip, Feb. 23-March 3. Later he proposed a new program of "social overhead" loans, for which he asked and received Congressional endorsement. But relations with Cuba continued to deteriorate.

Cuba: In a policy statement Jan. 26, the President accused the Castro regime of seeking "to create the illusion of aggressive acts and conspiratorial activities" directed by the U.S. against Cuba, but he expressed hope that a "workable and satisfactory relationship" could be worked out. The hoped-for talks failed to materialize, however, and in his April 8 reply to a critical letter from students in Chile, the President described Castro's increasingly dictatorial actions as "a betrayal" of the ideals of his 1959 revolution against the Batista regime. What bothered Washington most, however, were Castro's growing ties with Moscow and Peking.

When Congress agreed to cut Cuba's sugar quota after Castro had seized most U.S.-owned investments in Cuba (see below), Soviet Premier Khrushchev warned July 9 that he would use rockets if necessary to prevent U.S. intervention in Cuba. President Eisenhower replied at once that the U.S. would neither "be deterred from its responsibilities" by Khrushchev's threats, nor "permit the establishment of a regime dominated by international Communism in the Western Hemisphere." The U.S. and Cuba then took their dispute before the Organization of American States, which proceeded to condemn Communist intervention in hemisphere affairs, in the "Declaration of San Jose, Costa Rica," adopted Aug. 28.

Sugar Act: With about one-third of the U.S. sugar market allotted to Cuba by law, pressure quickly developed in Congress to revise the Sugar Act, due to expire Dec. 31, 1960. The Administration itself asked for a four-year extension, plus Presidential authority to reduce the quota of any foreign producer other than the Philippines. But a simple one-year extension was favored by Rep. Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.), chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, and that was substantially the bill reported June 6. Three weeks later, the Committee reversed itself and voted to grant the President authority to give Cuba whatever quota he decided.

The House passed the bill June 30, 395-0. But the Senate, also by unanimous vote of 84-0 July 2, passed instead a resolution simply empowering the President to determine Cuba's quota for the balance of 1960. House leaders refused to accept it, however, and the Senate, warned that the President would call the recess-bound Congress back into session the following week, then passed an amended version of the House bill. As finally approved July 3, the measure extended the Sugar Act through March 31, 1961 and gave the President full authority to fix Cuba's quota. By proclamation July 6, he cut the original Cuban quota of 3.1 million tons for 1960 by 700,000 tons.

On Aug. 23 the President asked Congress for authority to withhold a 320,000-ton quota allotted under the July 3 law to the Dominican Republic, which had been censured Aug. 20 by the OAS for its actions against Venezuela. Again the House and Senate passed conflicting legislation, but no compromise was found before adjournment.

Aid Program: On Aug. 8 the President requested a $600-million authorization to help "strengthen the social and economic structure" of the nations of Latin America and to help rehabilitate Chile, devastated by earthquakes in May. Although critical of the vagueness of the Administration's aid plan, which the U.S. hoped to present to an economic conference in Bogota Sept. 5, the Senate passed the authorization bill Aug. 19, by a 54-19 vote. House action Aug. 31 sent it to the President.

New Loan Agency

The United States took another major step in 1960 toward the multilateral approach to economic aid, when Congress endorsed U.S. participation in the International Development Association, a concept first proposed in 1956 by Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) and recommended by the Senate in 1958. Following approval of IDA by other members of the World Bank in 1959, President Eisenhower asked Congress Feb. 18 to authorize U.S. membership and provide an initial contribution of $74 million.

Designed to operate as an affiliate of the World Bank but to extend loans on easier terms than those required by its parent agency, IDA was to receive $1 billion in capital subscriptions over a period of five years. Of that amount, $763 million would be supplied by 17 hard-currency countries, with the U.S. contributing $320 million. The remaining sum of $237 million (of which only 10 percent would be in gold or dollars) would be pledged by 51 soft-currency nations, including those most in need of development aid. In economic terms, then, IDA was a device for transferring additional resources from the richer to the poorer countries, while giving the debtors as well as creditors a voice in the plan.

The Senate June 2 approved a bill authorizing the President to accept membership in IDA after voting 39-33 to bar gifts of U.S.-owned foreign currencies to IDA unless specifically approved by Congress. The House, however, deleted this provision before passing the bill June 29 by a 249-158 vote, and the Senate quickly concurred. The initial U.S. payment of $73,666,700 was provided in a supplemental bill approved July 2, and on Aug. 9 the U.S. formally signed up as a member of IDA.

Pact with Japan

President Eisenhower and the United States Senate, often at odds over foreign policy, found themselves sharing the role of innocent bystander in the dramatic events surrounding ratification of a new 10-year security treaty between the U.S. and Japan. Signed in Washington Jan. 19 and all-but-unopposed in Congress, the pact generated such controversy in Japan as to force Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi to cancel the President's visit to Tokyo, and then to resign.

The new treaty, replacing one ratified in 1952 along with the Japanese Peace Treaty, removed remaining traces of Japan's post-war occupation status. Articles permitting the use of U.S. troops to put down riots in Japan and forbidding Japan to grant military rights to a third power without U.S. consent were deleted. The U.S. agreed to consult Japan "whenever the security of Japan or international peace and security in the Far East is threatened," and to aid Japan in the event of armed attack. In turn, Japan granted the U.S. "the use by its land, air and naval forces" of Japanese bases. Japan's ultimate rights to the Ryukyu and Bonin island groups, administered by the U.S. since World War II, were reaffirmed in a separate communique.

In Japan, the treaty was greeted by a barrage of criticism from Socialists and Social Democrats, who objected particularly to the 10-year extension of U.S. base rights. Following approval of the treaty May 19 by the lower house of the Japanese Diet, all 125 Socialist members resigned in an effort to force the Kishi government's downfall and prevent final ratification of the treaty, which was due to take effect June 19 unless disapproved by the upper chamber.

In the face of continued rioting against the treaty by members of the SOHYO labor federation, the Zengakuren student organization and the Socialist party, Prime Minister Kishi concluded that he couldn't guarantee President Eisenhower's safety during his forthcoming visit and withdrew the invitation June 16. Urged by Secretary of State Herter to ratify the treaty without delay, the Senate did so June 22, by a 90-2 vote, over the complaint of Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) that it was "entirely a one-way street." Instruments of ratification were exchanged in Tokyo the same day, whereupon Kishi announced that he would dissolve his government and call for new elections.

Other foreign policy issues raised in 1960:

Antarctic Treaty: The Senate was somewhat less unanimous in supporting a treaty signed Dec. 1, 1959 by the United States, Soviet Union and 10 other countries to ensure permanent use of Antarctica for peaceful purposes. Terms of the treaty prohibited all military activity in the area, opened it to complete inspection at any time by any signatory, and froze all existing territorial claims. Favorably reported June 23 by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the treaty came to the floor in August. Opponents argued that the treaty opened the way for Soviet gains at U.S. expense and moved to defer further consideration until Jan. 25, 1961, after the next President had taken office. But the motion was rejected, 29-56 (D 24-30; R 5-26), and the treaty was approved Aug. 10, by a vote of 66-21.

World Court: The President asked the Senate Jan. 7 to repeal the Connally amendment to the 1946 law authorizing U.S. membership in the International Court of Justice. The amendment reserved to the U.S. the right to determine for itself which matters were of domestic concern and therefore outside the Court's jurisdiction. After hearings, the Foreign Relations Committee March 29 voted 9-8 to postpone further action indefinitely in the face of evidence that a floor fight would split the Senate, and no more was heard of repeal. Another clue to the split on this issue was furnished May 26 when the Senate, for the first time in the Eisenhower Administration, voted to reject a minor law-of-the-sea treaty agreeing to accept Court jurisdiction without the "self-judging" Connally reservation. The vote of 49-30 (D 32-18; R 17-12) for ratification was four short of the required two-thirds majority.

Foreign Investment: An attempt to stimulate private investment abroad by tax incentives was also fated to fail, partly because of rising fears of foreign competition. A bill to permit deferral of taxes on earnings from investments in underdeveloped countries barely passed the House May 18, by a vote of 196-192. But the Senate Finance Committee agreed Aug. 31 to kill the bill, which lacked Treasury approval.

Atlantic Convention: Proponents of a greater integration of interests within the Atlantic community won a minor victory when Congress approved a measure authorizing appointment of a U.S. Citizens Commission of 20 members to meet unofficially with similar groups from other NATO countries in 1961. The resolution, authorizing expenses of $300,000, was passed by the Senate June 15, by a 51-44 vote, and by the House Aug. 23, by a vote of 288-103.

Immigration: In a special message March 17, the President again asked Congress to liberalize the immigration quota system, but the request was again ignored. Instead Congress sent him a bill July 2 authorizing the admission of a limited number of refugees still under United Nations care in Europe. Only one-fourth of the total number resettled in other countries would be admitted to the U.S.

Miscellany: Congress also agreed to extend the Export Control Act of 1949 through June 30, 1962; to amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946, raising personnel standards and expanding retirement and disability programs; and to authorize an agreement for joint U.S.-Mexican construction of the Amistad storage dam on the Rio Grande. But a 1959 agreement with Austria for the return of $6 million in confiscated property was pigeonholed in the Senate.

National Security

Democrats Question Adequacy of Arms Budget

Was $41 billion enough to maintain an adequate deterrent to war, whether general or local? No one could know for certain, but Democrats, convinced that it was not enough, mounted a sustained offensive against the President's defense budget the moment it hit Congress. For weeks thereafter, one committee after another quizzed Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr. and his civilian and military subordinates, searching for evidence to support the indictment of "inadequacy." Months later Congress voted a substantial increase in defense funds; at adjournment, however, the extra money was still frozen and the nation's defense posture had become a major campaign issue.

As in 1959, when Congress also voted more money than the President wanted to spend, Democrats got much of their ammunition from military commanders dissatisfied with their share of the pie. All three service chiefs -- the Army's Gen. Lyman L. Lemnitzer, the Navy's Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, and the Air Force's Gen. Thomas D. White -- swore allegiance to the President's fiscal 1961 request but readily admitted that they had asked for more money to do their assigned jobs. Their subordinates, in many cases, were even more outspoken.

Missile Gap

Much of the 1960 debate concerned the nation's vulnerability to a Soviet missile attack at a time when U.S. Atlas missiles were just beginning to enter the Strategic Air Command's arsenal and no anti-missile defense system was in view. Democrats led by Sen. Stuart Symington (Mo.) insisted that Soviet capabilities would shortly give them a 3-to-1 lead over the U.S. in ocean-spanning missiles, leaving the U.S. open to a devastating blow unless prodigious efforts were made to step up the Atlas, Titan, and Polaris programs, and to assure the survival of SAC's bomber fleets by such means as an around-the-clock airborne alert -- a step urged likewise by Gen. Thomas S. Power, SAC commander, on the premise that the Soviets would soon be able to destroy his force with a single salvo.

Secretary Gates set out to flank this attack by asserting Jan. 13 that new intelligence estimates, based on an appraisal of Soviet intentions as well as "theoretical" capabilities, indicated that the prospective missile gap would be smaller than 3-to-1. In any event, he maintained, "there is no deterrent gap." As for Gen. Power's argument, he said Feb. 1, his estimate "of mathematical probability is unrealistic." The President himself squelched Power Feb. 3 for his "parochial" views, saying "there are too many of these generals who have all sorts of ideas."

Gates' disclosure of new intelligence estimates was greeted by a chorus of caustic comments from Democrats, such as Symington's charge that "the intelligence books have been juggled so the budget books may be balanced." Secret testimony by Allen W. Dulles, Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, failed in their view to confirm any basis for Gates' optimistic appraisal. Democrats agreed instead with Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, retired Army Chief of Staff, who testified Feb. 4 in behalf of a $50 billion defense budget. Said Taylor: "The trend of relative military strength is against us. Our manned bomber force is a dwindling military asset. Our long-range missile force is limited in size, uncertain in reliability, and immobile upon exposed bases. We have no anti-missile defense in being or in sight. There is no effective fall-out protection for our civil population."

Asked Feb. 17 whether his Administration had "misled the American people" on the defense issue, as charged by some critics, President Eisenhower called the accusation "despicable" and asserted that "our defense is not only strong, it is awesome, and it is respected elsewhere." As for the unfavorable trend cited by Taylor, Gates argued March 16 that "we do not foresee a time when the Soviets could launch an attack on us without inviting unacceptable damage to themselves in return."

Whether the Democratic barrage helped to shape the decision or not, the President April 6 gave formal approval to a series of changes in the Air Force and Navy budgets which, although adding up to a net reduction of more than $100 million in requests, were designed to bolster strategic deterrent forces. Proposed increases for the Atlas, Minuteman, Polaris, and Midas warning satellite programs were more than offset by cutbacks in the Bomarc air defense and SAGE communications systems and the elimination of two attack submarines.

Defense Funds

Four months after the onset of debate, the House Appropriations Committee April 29 reported a $39.3 billion money bill -- almost the same amount originally asked (exclusive of military construction funds) and about $120 million more than the revised request of April 6. But in reaching that figure, the Committee had made additions of more than $1.5 billion and reductions of $1.4 billion "in the expectation of better defense for the dollars expended." While boosting funds for Polaris submarines, anti-submarine warfare, an airborne alert, airlift capacity, and Army modernization, the Committee deleted a $293-million carrier, all but killed the "very questionable" Bomarc program, and imposed an across-the-board cut of 3 percent in procurement funds "in an effort to compel prompt remedial action" against waste. On May 5 the House passed the bill without change in amount.

The Senate Appropriations Committee proceeded then to add more than $1 billion to the House bill. As reported June 10, the measure restored the cuts made in carrier, Bomarc, and procurement funds, added another $285 million for development of the 2,000 m.p.h. B-70 bomber, but eliminated amounts added by the House for fighter planes and airborne alert. The Committee's changes won quick approval in the Senate, which passed the bill June 16 after adding another $140 million to step up Army procurement and expand the Marine Corps to 200,000 men.

Conferees then put together a compromise sum of $40 billion, or $661.6 million more than budget estimates and $780.7 million more than the Defense Department's revised requests. As ratified by both chambers June 30, the bill provided these major increases over the budget: $241 million for Polaris subs, $200 million for increased airlift, $190 million for the B-70, $162 million for Army modernization, $85 million for airborne alert, and $50 million for anti-submarine warfare. But the bill retained the 3 percent cut in procurement funds, amounting to $400 million, decreed by the House. It also carried the full $293 million requested for a new carrier and all but $50 million of the $294 million asked for Bomarc. The Senate's amendment restoring Marine Corps strength to 200,000 was dropped, but the Administration's plan to cut the Army National Guard to 360,000 men was countermanded by a provision for a mandatory strength of 400,000.

President Eisenhower maintained silence on the surgery performed by Congress, but on Aug. 8 he informed a reconvened Senate of several steps taken as the result of an "intensification of Communist truculence" during the recess. Included were orders to step up the pace of Army modernization and B-70 development and to build five instead of three new Polaris subs in fiscal 1961 -- all made possible by the additional funds provided by a Democratic Congress.

The President Aug. 10 denied that any of the extra funds voted June 30 had been "frozen" by the Administration, But Majority Leader Johnson promptly took issue, citing correspondence with Secretary Gates. This showed, said Johnson, that of $1.1 billion withheld in a July 7 revision of Defense Department spending plans, only $476 million was subsequently released, leaving $621 million still frozen, or almost as much as Congress had added to the budget request. Another campaign issue was clearly in the making.

In separate action, Congress completed work June 1 on a bill authorizing almost $1.2 billion for military construction projects. But the actual appropriation, approved July 1, was only $995 million, or $193 million less than requested.

Space Program

The 1960 session of Congress proved relatively uneventful for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, created in 1958 in the wake of the Soviet Union's spectacular success in launching the first "sputnik" on Oct. 4, 1957. NASA Administrator T. Keith Glennan got all the money he needed; at the same time, a series of successful U.S. launches of various types of satellites, coupled with the absence of new Soviet "spectaculars," served to keep Congress molified concerning U.S. progress in the space race.

The President opened the year by asking Congress Jan. 14 to amend the 1958 Space Act "so as to place responsibility directly and unequivocably in one agency, NASA, for planning and managing a national program of non-military space activities." He asked the legislators to eliminate provisions in the law that reflected the concept of a single program for military as well as non-military space activities, to free the President of duties of planning and detailed review, and to abolish both the National Aeronautics and Space Council and the Civilian-Military Liaison Committee.

Hearings on the President's proposals during March, before the House Science and Astronautics Committee, revealed considerable criticism of the attempt to draw an even sharper line between civilian and military space programs. But the Committee decided to approve the requests, after adding a controversial provision giving NASA's Administrator the "discretion of acquiring title" to inventions developed by NASA contractors or of waiving title to the developers. Four Democratic members objected that this change in the exclusive patent provision of the 1958 law foreshadowed a campaign to "drive the Government out of the field of patent ownership."

House debate on the bill focused on the patent amendment, but its opponents made no progress, losing a motion to recommit with instructions to delete the amendment by a vote of 120-270 (D 120-129; R 0-141). The House then passed the bill June 9 without change. But the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee, chaired by Majority Leader Johnson, failed to act on the measure before adjournment so it died with the session.

Funds: On Feb.1 the President increased NASA's $802 million budget request by $113 million to speed development of the Saturn booster rocket -- a project transferred in 1960 from the Army Ballistic Missile Agency to NASA, along with Dr. Werner von Braun's rocket team. Congress first authorized the entire $915 million, in action completed May 24, plus another $50 million added by the Senate to exploit "breakthroughs." Only $915 million was actually appropriated, however, in the independent offices bill that was sent to the White House July 1. The amount was still $391 million more than the fiscal 1960 appropriation, and foreshadowed a further jump in the space budget in fiscal 1962.

Economic Policy

"Growth" Issue Colored Fiscal-Monetary Dispute

The unremitting battle between conservatives and liberals over national economic policy raged on without resolution during the 1960 session. Neither camp scored any significant advances in a series of skirmishes over the budget, taxes, and interest rates; each enjoyed and employed enough power to block the other's legislative schemes.

In one respect, however, the liberals achieved a modest success. Caught on the defensive in 1959 by the deceptive but effective "spenders vs. savers" slogan of the conservatives, they redoubled their efforts to shift the focus of the great debate to the broader, more complex ground of "economic growth." This endeavor was rewarded when, in July, the GOP as well as Democratic convention platform embraced the goal of a faster rate of growth.

But this modicum of agreement on the ends of economic policy served also to highlight the intensity of continuing disagreement over means. As Congress adjourned and scattered to the hustings, no issue before the country seemed so much the subject of basic partisan dispute as that of national economic policy in the coming decade.

The Budget

The 1960 debate opened Jan. 18, when President Eisenhower sent Congress an optimistic budget for fiscal 1961. He estimated expenditures at $79.8 billion and receipts at $84 billion, and proposed that the prospective surplus of $4.2 billion be used to cut the public debt to $280 billion. Democrats promptly challenged the adequacy of projected spending and the accuracy of estimated receipts, which were geared to a projected increase in gross national product from $482 billion in calendar 1959 to $510 billion in 1960.

At adjournment, both sides of the fiscal 1961 ledger appeared to be due for extensive revision in the light of Congressional actions and the march of events. (Results for fiscal 1960, announced on July 20, showed expenditures of $77.3 billion, or $1.1 billion under the January estimate, and receipts of $78.4 billion, or $200 million under the estimate, leaving a surplus for the year of $1.1 billion instead of $200 million.)

As finally enacted, regular and supplemental appropriations in 1960 totaled slightly less than the President requested (see box, page 23). This gave no assurance, however, that actual expenditures would run close to the budget estimates. Not only did Congress refuse to approve a $555 million increase in postal rates; it insisted on raising the pay of federal employees by $750 million, over the President's veto. Defense spending, moreover, was almost certain to rise above the $41 billion projected in January. All told, the fiscal 1961 outlay seemed likely to pass the $81 billion mark.

Whether budget receipts would rise to the $84 billion estimated in January appeared questionable in view of the economy's sluggish performance during the first eight months of 1960. After a healthy first-quarter jump in GNP, following settlement on Jan. 4 of a 116-day steel strike, the advance lost momentum, and by adjournment economists were debating whether or not another recession might already be underway. With only weeks remaining before the election, the question had assumed maximum import for the candidates of both parties. (See box on next page for economic indicators.)

Interest Rates

The slackened pace of economic activity had already rendered moot one stormy issue of early 1960. This was the President's request, first voiced in June of 1959, that Congress scrap the legal limit of 4.25 percent on the interest rate that can be offered to buyers of Treasury bonds. Failure to remove "this archaic restriction on flexible debt management," the President said in a special message Jan. 12, had forced the Treasury to resort to short-term issues (on which there was no interest ceiling) at greatly increased interest costs. Congressional action was "imperative," he said.

What had happened was that market money rates had climbed, almost without interruption, for 18 months. From June 1958 to December 1959, yields on three-month Treasury bills rose from less than 1 percent to 4.57 percent, and on Treasury bonds from 3.2 percent to 4.27 percent. Priced out of the long-term money market when yields exceeded the maximum legal coupon rate, the Treasury was confined to one-to-five-year borrowing to meet its heavy refinancing schedule. Interest payments on the public debt shot from $7.6 billion in fiscal 1959 to $9.2 billion in fiscal 1960.

Democrats, who had cold-shouldered the President's request in 1959, were even more adamantly opposed to it in 1960, arguing that the Treasury had created its own problem by helping to force interest rates up and that removal of the ceiling would result in higher rates still. Led by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), as Chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, they called for a series of "major reforms" in Treasury debt management policy. Republicans retorted with a charge of "political blackmail," but were unable to budge the opponents.

The House Ways and Means Committee, after much hauling and pushing, reported a limited measure Feb. 29 that would have permitted the President to authorize the sale of bonds paying more than 4.25 percent interest, provided the amount issued did not exceed 2 percent of the debt, or less than $6 billion. The bill's key provision, however, would have authorized the Treasury to exchange new bonds for outstanding bonds in advance of maturity, computed at face rather than market value. This would have permitted the Treasury to refund outstanding issues while still abiding by the legal ceiling, since the net result of such an exchange would have been to give bondholders a higher yield.

Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson pronounced the bill acceptable, but that was as far as it went. Faced with indications that the bill might be defeated in the House and was, in any event, opposed by most Democrats in the Senate, Speaker Sam Rayburn postponed action indefinitely. However "imperative" the matter had seemed to be in January, its urgency appeared to diminish with each passing week, as the price of money began a slow but steady decline. By the end of July, the yield on Treasury bills was down to 2.3 percent, that on bonds to 3.87 percent. After five successive increases in its rediscount rate -- the last to 4 percent in September, 1959 -- the Federal Reserve reversed field in early June, cutting the rate to 3.5 percent. Two months later, the rate was again cut, to 3 percent.

President Eisenhower, in his Aug. 8 message to the post-convention session, again called for removal of the interest limit. But the heat was off, thanks to the vagaries of an uncertain economy.

Tax Measures

Surprisingly little demand was voiced in 1960 for the traditional election-year panacea -- a generous tax cut. The President, determined to round out his Administration with a surplus, asked Congress for a series of measures designed to maintain or increase federal revenues. The legislators, under the firm hand of Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) of the House Ways and Means Committee, deferred action on a basic revision of the Internal Revenue Code until 1961, and gave only limited support to the President's fiscal program.

Tax Extension: For the seventh year running, Congress complied with the President's annual request for another postponement in the scheduled reduction of the 52-percent corporation income tax by 5 percentage points as well as cuts in certain excise taxes. As in 1959, Senate Democrats put up a spirited fight for certain loophole-closing amendments, only to lose out in conference.

Following its time-honored custom, the Ways and Means Committee waited until one month before the June 30 deadline for action before reporting the extension bill, which also authorized another temporary increase in the ceiling on the public debt to offset a seasonal gap between income and outgo. The measure met the President's request in full, even to countermanding an agreement between House and Senate in 1959 to allow the 10 percent excise on local telephone service to lapse and to cut the tax on passenger transportation from 10 to 5 percent, effective July 1, 1960.

Economic Indicators

- INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION, on the Federal Reserve index (1957=100), dropped from 110 in June 1959 to 102 in October, bounded back to 111 in January 1960, then rocked along with little change for six months, hitting 109 in July.
- UNEMPLOYMENT climbed from 3.2 million in September 1959 to 4.2 million in March 1960 before falling to 3.5 million in May. The jobless total of 4 million in July represented 5.4 percent (seasonally adjusted) of the civilian labor force, up from 5.1 percent a year earlier.
- GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT -- the economy's total output of goods and services -- slumped, at the annual rate, from $487.9 billion in the second quarter of 1959 to $481.4 billion in the third quarter, then climbed to $501.3 billion in the first quarter of 1960 and to $505 billion in the second quarter. The $17.1 billion increase from the second quarter of 1959 came to $6.8 billion measured in 1959 prices.
- CORPORATE PROFITS -- on which the Treasury collects 52 percent -- dropped at the annual rate from $51.7 billion in the second quarter of 1959 to $44.8 billion in the fourth quarter, then moved up to $48.8 billion in the first quarter of 1960. (Corporate income taxes paid in fiscal 1960 amounted to $22.2 billion, or $800 million under the January estimate.)
- CONSUMER PRICE INDEX (1947-49=100) continued its slow rise, moving from 124.5 in June 1959 to 126.5 a year later. From the second quarter of 1959 to the second quarter of 1960, per capita disposable income (measured in 1959 prices) advanced from $1,922 to $1,940.

Presented to the House June 8 under a closed rule barring floor amendments, the bill ran into strong criticism of the provision continuing the telephone and transportation taxes. But the traditional rule was adopted, 204-181 (D 112-133; R 92-48), and the House went on to pass the bill, 223-174.

The Senate Finance Committee, however, voted to repeal both the telephone and transportation levies before reporting the bill June 16. Put to a vote on the Senate floor, both repealers were rejected by bipartisan majorities -- termination of the telephone tax by a vote of 30-54 (D 22-32; R 8-22), and of the transportation tax by a similar margin of 29-55 (D 24-30; R 5-25). Also rejected were floor amendments to apply a 20-percent withholding tax to interest and dividend income, by a vote of 24-62 (D 22-31; R 2-31); to replace the 27.5 percent depletion allowance for oil and gas producers with a scale of allowances ranging from 15 to 27.5 percent, 30-56 (D 22-31; R 8-25); and to tax "windfall" gains from the sale of depreciable assets at ordinary income rather than capital gains rates, 16-69 (D 16-36; R 0-33).

Three other amendments were accepted, however, the revenue effects of which would have been to collect an estimated $1.2 billion in additional taxes. By a vote of 42-41 (D 39-12; R 3-29), the Senate agreed to repeal the 4 percent tax credit allowed on dividend income since 1954. Also approved, 45-39 (D 36-16; R 9-23), was an amendment sharply limiting allowable deductions for business entertainment expenditures. Finally, by a unanimous vote of 87-0, the Senate wrote in a provision, requested by the President, restricting the base for computing depletion allowances to the raw value rather than finished value of clay and other mineral products.

Passed June 20 by unanimous vote, the amended measure went to conference where the House committeemen, led by Rep. Mills, refused to budge in their opposition to the dividend credit and business entertainment amendments. Stripped of these but including a revised version of the Senate's depletion allowance amendment, the final bill cleared Congress June 28 over the protests of a majority of Senate Democrats, on a 61-32 vote (D 27-32; R 34-0), against the failure of their conferees to hold out for all of the Senate's amendments. As enacted, the bill retained taxes worth about $4 billion to the Treasury on a full-year basis, and raised the $285 billion limit on the public debt to $293 billion during fiscal year 1961.

Postal Rates: In a special message to Congress March 11, the President urged a one-cent increase in first-class, postcard, and airmail rates, along with other increases designed to yield some $555 million in additional postal revenue and all but wipe out the Post Office Department's projected operating deficit. Although not a tax matter (since postal receipts do not show up in the budget), the request bore no less directly on the fiscal equation (since a postal deficit does add to budget expenditures).

Extensive hearings by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee in May and June failed to resolve a long-standing dispute over the costs attributable to various classes of postal users. No further action was taken; instead, the Committee reported and the House July 2 passed a bill to prohibit the airlifting of 4-cent letter mail -- an experiment started in 1953 to speed mail delivery. But the Senate failed to act on the measure.

Tax Miscellany: The President found Congress equally unreceptive to his other revenue proposals. No action was taken to raise the federal excise tax on automobile gas from 4 to 4½ cents per gallon, to raise the tax on aviation gas from 2 to 4½ cents, or to levy a similar tax on jet fuels. Brief hearings by the Ways and Means Committee failed to pave the way for tighter rules for taxing the income of cooperatives. The Committee also held hearings, but refused to act, on the President's request that excessive gains on the sale of depreciable property be taxed at ordinary income instead of capital gains rates. (As noted above, the Senate rejected an amendment to the same effect when debating the annual tax extension bill.)

On its own initiative, and over Treasury opposition in most cases, Congress heeded the pleas of various pressure groups for more favorable tax treatment, as follows:

- The Senate March 29 accepted a bill, passed by the House in 1959, cutting the cabaret tax from 20 to 10 percent, effective May 1. Estimated cost to the Treasury: $20 million a year.
- On May 5 the House completed action on a bill permitting unlimited deductions of medical expenses incurred by taxpayers for parents 65 or older. Estimated cost: $50 million a year.
- The Senate June 25 approved another bill passed by the House in 1959, permitting mining companies to deduct up to $400,000 for exploration expenses over an indefinite period, rather than within a four-year period. Estimated cost: "substantial."
- On the eve of adjournment, Congress cleared a bill permitting U.S. firms with holdings in more than one country to take either an overall or a per-country credit for foreign taxes paid. Estimated cost: $20 million a year.
- The Senate Finance Committee June 17 reported a revised version of a bill passed by the House in 1959 to permit self-employed persons to defer payment of income tax on a portion of their income set aside for retirement purposes. Brought to the Senate floor just before the July 3 recess, the measure, involving a revenue loss of $250 million or more, encountered so much criticism that it was shelved. Senate leaders made no effort to reopen the debate during the post-convention session.

Economic Growth

The liberal-conservative duel over economic policy in 1960 was accompanied by increasing talk about the requirements of economic growth.

- The President's Economic Report of Jan. 20 argued that government's major contribution to "Economic Growth in a Free Society" lay in pursuing policies designed to even out the peaks and valleys of the business cycle. But the "major responsibility" for directing the nation's savings into productive investment "rests with private institutions."
- The Joint Economic Committee wound up its 10-month "Study of Employment, Growth, and Price Levels" with a Jan. 26 report charging that Eisenhower Administration "fiscal actions have been a major cause of economic instability" and that Federal Reserve monetary policy had been "excessively restrictive." GOP members refused to sign the "needlessly partisan" majority report, which contained a host of recommendations for administrative and legislative reform, none of which was carried out.
- The Senate's Special Committee on Unemployment Problems, set up in 1959, filed a final report March 30 urging a broad attack on the causes and consequences of chronic unemployment in the interests of a higher rate of economic growth. Although they differed on specifics, Democratic and Republican members agreed on the need for steps to aid depressed areas, improve unemployment benefits, cut down job discrimination, and meet the inroads of foreign competition. But no action ensued.

● The Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth, headed by Vice President Nixon, concluded April 17 that inflation was no longer a pressing problem and that "we can have reasonable price level stability and sustained economic growth in the 60s if we continue to pursue the general policies of the past few years but improve the effectiveness with which we execute these policies."

Talk aside, however, neither Congress nor the Administration displayed much interest in new forms of economic regulation. These were the highlights:

Antitrust: The only significant measure in this area, sent to the President May 6, provided for federal regulation of all mergers between insured banks, comprising 95 percent of the Nation's banks holding 97 percent of total bank assets. But no action was taken on the President's repeated request for a pre-merger notification law. A limited but controversial bill extending antitrust regulation to professional team sports died June 28 when the Senate voted 73-12 to recommit it to committee.

Price Hearings: A Democratic proposal that the President be empowered to order hearings by a federal agency on proposed price increases by major industries made less progress in 1960 than in 1959, when a House bill was reported only to be pickled by the Rules Committee. Senate hearings were held on a companion bill, but it died in committee.

Credit Costs: Hearings were also the end of the road for a Senate bill to require sellers to give buyers a written statement showing total finance charges on any installment purchase and the true annual interest rate on the unpaid amount.

Defense Production: Congress agreed June 28 to extend for two more years the Defense Production Act of 1950, authorizing the President to decree priorities for defense contracts, allocate scarce materials, and guarantee defense loans.

"Socialism" Repulsed in Medical Aid Battle

Against a background of rising public concern with the health problems of the aged, Congress was blanketed in 1960 by a withering and bewildering crossfire of argument in behalf of opposing plans to help "senior citizens" meet the ever-increasing costs of medical care. Liberal Democrats, backed by the AFL-CIO, championed an approach through the social security system, financed by higher payroll taxes. Republicans, by and large, echoed the opposition of the American Medical Assn. to "compulsory" insurance; later they countered with a proposal for an expensive program of federal grants to the states. The plan finally enacted, however, fell considerably short of either approach.

Background: The drive for medical care legislation got underway in 1959 when the House Ways and Means Committee held hearings on the Forand bill. Introduced by Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), it would have provided substantial hospitalization, surgical and other benefits to all retired persons covered by social security, at a first-year cost of $1.1 billion to be financed by a one-quarter of 1 percent increase in payroll taxes for both employer and employee.

As the 1960 session opened, the Forand approach was given a strong endorsement by the Democratic majority of the Senate's Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging, which noted that by 1965 at least 8 million persons over 65 years of age would have no health insurance of any kind. Sen. John F. Kennedy, a Subcommittee member who had just launched his campaign for the Democratic nomination, introduced his own version of the Forand bill Jan. 26, and the matter quickly won recognition as a major election-year issue.

For three months, however, the Administration, while continuing to oppose the Forand bill in any form, failed to come up with an alternative plan. The Ways and Means Committee, meanwhile, agreed to a number of improvements in regular social security benefits, but on March 31 voted 17-8 against including Forand's formula for medical care benefits. Finally, on May 4, Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming outlined the Administration's proposal. It called for federal and state grants for two alternative plans: a "Medicare Program for the Aged," paying from 80 to 100 percent of stipulated medical costs beyond the first $250 for persons over 65 with gross incomes of less than $2,500; or, as an option, a maximum federal-state payment of $60 toward the cost of private health insurance.

With an estimated cost to the Treasury of $600 million a year, the Administration's plan drew pained cries from conservatives as well as liberals, who quickly noted the absence of any financing provisions. Vice President Richard M. Nixon, credited with an active hand in shaping the plan, lauded it as "superior" to the Forand bill, which "would open the door for socialized medicine." But Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R N.Y.) said it could lead to a "very serious fiscal situation" and again endorsed the social security insurance approach.

Floor Action: The Ways and Means Committee then proceeded to write a watered-down version of the Administration plan. As reported to the House June 13, along with other social security amendments, it provided for federal grants, ranging from 50 to 65 percent of costs, to states choosing to participate in paying stipulated medical benefits to needy persons over 65, at an estimated federal cost of $185 million annually. Brought to the floor under a closed rule, the bill was passed June 23, by a vote of 381-23.

Liberal Democrats used the July recess to write a platform plank calling for a social security medical insurance program without a means test as a "first priority" in helping the aged. But the Senate Finance Committee was unimpressed. After rejecting three different plans, each based on the social security approach, the Committee voted 12-4 for a grant program akin to the Administration's plan. It called for federal payments to the states, ranging from 50 to 80 percent, to cover medical benefits for persons already receiving public assistance and for a new class of "medically indigent" persons with incomes too low to meet major medical expenses.

Reported to the Senate Aug. 19, the Committee's plan survived a crucial test when an amendment providing medical benefits for all social security retirees 68 and over, to be financed by increased payroll taxes, was rejected by a vote of 44-51. Sen. Kennedy, deserted by Southern Democrats, had suffered a major setback at the hands of the conservative coalition. On Aug. 23, after voting 51-38 to extend coverage to mental and tuberculosis patients, the Senate passed the bill, 91-2. The amendment was dropped in conference, however; as sent to the President Aug. 29 the medical care provisions were substantially those approved by the Senate Finance Committee. The estimated cost: $200 million.

The omnibus bill also repealed a provision that permanently disabled persons must be 50 before qualifying for disability benefits; liberalized the retirement earnings limitation for all beneficiaries; extended coverage to several groups of workers previously excluded; and increased the earned-income allowance for persons receiving aid to the blind under state programs.

Other Health Issues Congress in 1960 acted on several other important, if less dramatic, health matters, as follows:

- Water Pollution -- Rather than cut back federal grants to communities for sewage plant construction under the Water Pollution Control Act, as proposed by the President, Congress agreed to increase the authorization from $50 million to $90 million a year, but to no avail. A compromise version of bills passed by both chambers in 1959 was approved by the House Feb. 9 and by the Senate Feb. 15, only to be vetoed Feb. 23 by the President on grounds that water pollution "is a uniquely local blight" for which state and local governments must assume responsibility. The veto was sustained when the House, on a 249-157 roll call Feb. 25, fell 22 votes short of overriding.
- Health Funds -- The legislators had greater success when it came to funds. As in 1958 and 1959, the House March 29 agreed to appropriate more money than was requested for the National Institutes of Health, adding $55 million to the $400 million asked. Grants also were increased for hospital construction, from $126 million to $150 million, and for sewage plants, from $20 million to $45 million. On June 17 the Senate added still more funds to the bill, giving NIH $664 million and the hospital program $211 million. As finally approved Aug. 26, the money measure carried $560 million for NIH, $186 million for hospital construction grants, and $45 million for sewage plant grants, for a total increase of 45 percent over the budget.
- Color Additives -- Federal authority to regulate the use of color additives in foods, drugs, and cosmetics was clarified and strengthened in 1960 by a bill sent to the President June 30. Like the Food Additives Amendment of 1958, it shifted the burden of proving the safety of color additives from the Food and Drug Administration to the industries involved, and authorized FDA to establish tolerance limits for all additives except those found to induce cancer when used in any amount. Producers and users of color additives were given up to 30 months in which to secure FDA clearance.
- Drugs -- A probe of drug prices begun in 1959 was continued throughout the 1960 session by the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee, headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), who introduced a bill June 15 to require federal licensing of drug manufacturers and evaluation of the efficacy as well as safety of new drugs. But no action was taken on Kefauver's bill or a proposal by Secretary Flemming for a less drastic law.
- Research -- By a vote of 259-114, the House June 24 passed a revised version of a "Health for Peace Act" passed by the Senate in 1959. On June 30 the Senate accepted the House version, which authorized a broad program of international cooperation in medical research but no new funds. Congress also authorized a five-year, $2 million-a-year program of project grants to public health, nursing, and engineering schools to expand graduate training.

Aid to Education

If liberals were slowed to a walk in the medical care battle, they were stopped dead in their effort to break the long post-war deadlock over a general aid-to-education bill. Both chambers approved bills authorizing substantial grants to the states, only to have the House Rules Committee block resolution of the differences. The victory, if any, went to President Eisenhower, who in 1959 abandoned his earlier support of construction grants and proposed instead a complex bond-subsidy approach.

The Senate opened the 1960 debate when it took up a bill to authorize school construction grants of $500 million a year for two years. An amendment by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) to increase this to $1.1 billion a year, extend it indefinitely, and permit use of the funds for paying teachers' salaries as well, was rejected by a 44-44 vote, then killed when Vice President Nixon broke another 44-44 tie to table a motion to reconsider the vote. The Senate then agreed, 54-35 (D 46-11; R 8-24), to up the Committee bill to $20 per school-age child for two years, or about $917 million each year, for school construction or teachers' salaries, and it was in this form that the bill was passed Feb. 4.

On March 25 the House Education and Labor Committee reported its own bill, providing federal grants of $325 million a year for three years, for construction only. After sitting on it for two months, the Rules Committee sent the measure to the floor, where it was amended to provide a four-year program of matching grants, at $325 million a year. The House then attached an anti-segregation rider to the bill, by a vote of 218-181 (D 100-160; R 118-21), before passing the amended bill May 26, 206-189.

School-aid proponents were prepared to accept a compromise retaining the $1.3 billion, four-year authorization in the House bill and an equalization formula in the Senate bill, while dropping the anti-segregation and teachers' salaries provisions. But on June 22 the Rules Committee, by a 5-7 vote, refused to send the House bill to conference. All efforts to dislodge the measure during the August session were unavailing and both bills died with adjournment, victims of the conservative coalition.

Other education issues debated in 1960:

- Aid to Colleges -- Hearings were held on both sides of the Capitol on several proposals for federal aid to higher education, including an Administration bond-subsidy plan designed to replace a program of college-housing loans which the President asked to be terminated. None of the proposals advanced to the floor, but a stop-gap housing bill cleared Aug. 31 included another $500 million in college-housing loan authority. Also enacted: a bill increasing teaching grants to 68 land-grant colleges from $2.5 million to $12 million a year.

● Impacted Areas -- President Eisenhower's 1959 request that Congress curtail a 10-year-old program of federal grants to 4,000 school districts burdened by the impact of federal activities continued to be ignored in 1960. To the nearly $2 billion appropriated since 1950 for school construction and operation in these areas, the legislators added another $251 million -- $80 million more than the President requested.

● Student Affidavit -- Congress failed in 1960 to repeal a provision in the National Defense Education Act of 1958 requiring student applicants for loans to sign an affidavit disclaiming belief in or support of subversive organizations. A bill by Sen. Kennedy to strike the controversial proviso, which had led numerous colleges to protest or withdraw from the loan program, was passed June 15 by the Senate in amended form, but died in the House.

● Educational TV -- The House Commerce Committee April 7 reported a bill authorizing $39.5 million in grants to the states to help build educational television stations. Modeled on a $52-million version passed by the Senate in 1959, the bill expired when the Rules Committee voted May 12 to bury it.

● Aid to Deaf -- A bill to establish a 10-year program of federal grants, starting with $3.5 million in each of the first two years, to improve training programs for teachers of the deaf, speech pathologists, and audiologists was passed by the Senate May 27 but ignored by the House.

Area Redevelopment

The price of divided government was posted for all to see when, for the fifth year since the program was first proposed, a Republican President and a Democratic Congress refused to come to terms on a plan of federal aid for the nation's so-called depressed areas, beset by chronic unemployment as the result of technological and other changes.

The issue first came to a head in 1958 when the President, who had called for a $50-million loan program, vetoed a $280-million package of loans and grants. The Senate proceeded nevertheless to pass a $390-million bill early in 1959. Trimmed to $251 million by the House Banking and Currency Committee, the measure remained bottled up in the Rules Committee until May 4, 1960 when it was brought to the floor under the Calendar Wednesday rule, last used to bypass the House "traffic cop" in 1950.

Passed by the House by a 202-184 vote, the bill was quickly accepted by the Senate, 45-32, in the hope of forestalling a veto. But on May 13 the President sent it back, saying it was "even more objectionable" than the 1958 version. The veto was sustained when the Senate, by a 45-39 vote May 24, fell 11 "yeas" shy of the number needed to override. The Administration then sought Democratic support for a revised bill of its own, but the August session produced nothing more than a one-day hearing.

Housing

Thanks to the Rules Committee, President Eisenhower was spared the necessity of vetoing a distasteful omnibus housing bill in 1960, as he had twice done in 1959. Passed by the Senate but blocked in the House, the measure never reached his desk. Three programs due to expire were saved, however, by an eleventh-hour stop-gap bill which he signed Sept. 14.

The annual hassle over housing legislation got underway when the House April 28 took up what its sponsors called an emergency bill to stem the decline in new housing starts. Passed by a vote of 214-163, its major provision authorized the Federal National Mortgage Assn. to buy an additional $1 billion in mortgages on low-priced homes under its special assistance program. The Administration, by contrast, had asked for only $150 million.

The emergency bill went no further, however. Instead, the two Banking and Currency housing subcommittees went to work on omnibus bills in the face of Administration objections to most of the Democratic-sponsored proposals. The Senate bill, reported June 14, authorized more than $1 billion in loans and grants for various programs, including $350 million in urban renewal grants and $500 million for college housing loans. The bill also extended the Federal Housing Administration's home improvement loan program for one year, provided a $4 billion increase in FHA authority to insure home mortgages, and added $150 million to Fannie Mae's special assistance program.

Before passing the bill June 16, by a 64-16 vote, the Senate agreed to amendments cutting $134 million from the bill and deleting a provision requiring the President to make an annual estimate of the Nation's housing needs. But the Senate also agreed, against the President's wishes, to extend the expiring veterans' home loan guarantee program and, by a 42-39 vote, to authorize an additional 25,000 units of public housing.

The House bill, carrying provisions similar to those in the Senate version, was reported June 20, only to be denied clearance to the floor by a 6-6 vote of the Rules Committee June 28. Since both veterans' programs -- home, farm, and business loan guarantees for World War II vets, and direct loans for both World War II and Korean war vets -- were due to expire July 25, the House immediately passed a bill extending them for two years and authorizing $150 million for direct loans in each year. The Senate concurred June 30 and the President, although opposed to the extension, signed the bill July 14.

When it became apparent that no omnibus bill would emerge before adjournment, both chambers quickly approved a three-point bill Aug. 31, extending FHA's home improvement loan program for one year, adding $500 million to the college housing loan program, and increasing the public facility loan program by $50 million.

Minimum Wage

When the heavily Democratic 86th Congress took office in 1959, organized labor had every reason to anticipate some lush legislative dividends. Yet at adjournment in 1960 the record showed that of 76 AFL-CIO bread-and-butter requests only seven had eked through, two of which were vetoed. Labor's worst setback occurred in 1959, with enactment of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act. The major defeat of 1960 was the failure of Congress to produce a new minimum wage law. Sharing labor's losses was Sen. Kennedy, a prime mover in both of these battles.

Two major issues were involved in the minimum wage dispute: the amount of increase to be provided in the $1-per-hour minimum (raised from 75 cents in 1955), and the number of new workers to be added to the 23.7 million protected by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, better known as the federal wage-hour law. The AFL-CIO wanted the minimum wage raised to $1.25 and coverage extended to at least 5 million new workers in retail and other enterprises "engaged in activities affecting" interstate commerce. The Administration proposed, instead, that about 3.2 million workers be brought under the $1 minimum, and that the minimum for those already covered be raised by 10 or 15 cents.

After extensive hearings, the House Education and Labor Committee reported a bill adding 3.5 million new workers and increasing the minimum by stages to $1.25 for all covered workers. But on June 30 the House voted 211-203 to substitute a bill raising the minimum to $1.15 for those already covered and extending the $1 minimum to 1.4 million workers in interstate retail chains. It was in this form that the bill was passed, by a vote of 341-72.

Meanwhile, the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee had reported its own $1.25 bill extending coverage to 5 million new workers. When it reached the floor during the post-convention session, Republicans and Southern Democrats made an all-out but largely unsuccessful effort to cut it back. An amendment to limit new coverage to about 280,000 workers was rejected, 39-56. Another amendment, restricting new coverage to retail and service employees of interstate chains, was tabled by a vote of 50-48 (D 42-23; R 8-25). But the Senate agreed to exclude about 1 million of the bill's 5 million newly-covered jobs before voting passage Aug. 18, 62-34.

Senate conferees, headed by Sen. Kennedy, were prepared to fashion a compromise between the two bills, but House members were not. After four fruitless sessions, the conference broke up Aug. 30. Said Kennedy: no bill was better than the House bill.

A lesser, though important, defeat shared by Kennedy and organized labor was the failure of either house to exempt picketing of joint construction sites from the ban on secondary boycotts.

Transportation

The Commerce Department March 14 issued a study of federal transportation policy which, like one sent to Congress in 1955, argued for a return to the free market, with minimum regulations and no subsidies. But Secretary Frederick H. Mueller said there was "nothing of such great urgency" as to require immediate legislation, and Congress agreed, producing little in the way of new transport law.

No effort was made in 1960 to resolve the tangled fiscal problems of the Interstate Highway System, the ultimate cost of which was expected to exceed Trust Fund revenues by $11 billion. Congress ignored the President's call for a half-cent increase in the federal gas tax. Its only action, in fact, was to increase the prospective burden by raising, from $900 million to $925 million, the recommended fiscal 1962 and 1963 authorizations for ABC roads, which get first crack at the Trust Fund. The bill, sent to the White House July 2, was signed July 14.

Railroads weathered a minor crisis when Congress failed to act on bills to restrict their freedom to discontinue unprofitable commuter and other passenger service under authority of the Transportation Act of 1958. A similar fate, however, attended industry-backed bills to permit railroads to enter air, highway, or water transport fields. Another measure favored by the industry, authorizing $100 million in loans to local agencies for developing commuter services and mass transportation systems, passed the Senate June 27 but died in the House.

Administration and industry spokesmen split over the merits of a proposal to stimulate air cargo development through a system of loan guarantees, and no action was taken. The merchant marine fared better, winning a law signed July 7 raising for two years the ceiling on shipbuilding subsidies, from 50 to 55 percent of costs. The law also banned free or cut-rate passage for anyone on the Government payroll -- an "anti-junket" provision urged by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) since 1954.

Other benefits considered by Congress in 1960:

Small Business: Greater flexibility in the type of equity financing open to small business investment companies was provided by a bill, signed June 11, amending the Small Business Investment Act of 1958. But conferees failed to compose differences between Senate and House versions of a bill to increase the Small Business Administration's business loan authority from $575 million. The House had provided $150 million, the Senate $75 million.

Veterans: Although Congress agreed to extend the expiring veterans' loan guarantee and direct loan programs (see previous page), two other benefit bills were blocked in the House. One, passed by the Senate in 1959, would have extended GI Bill benefits to veterans entering the service after 1955; the other, passed by the Senate June 2, would have given veterans a second chance to buy National Service Life Insurance policies.

Natural Resources

Congress took up a batch of resource proposals in 1960 and enacted several. The major items:

San Luis Project: Construction of a $290-million dam and reservoir under a partnership agreement with California was authorized by a bill which President Eisenhower signed June 3 "with pleasure." Passed by the Senate in 1959, the measure won approval of the House May 18, after a controversial provision exempting the state share of San Luis water from federal reclamation laws was deleted by a vote of 214-179 (D 211-37; R 3-142).

Rivers & Harbors: Omnibus bills authorizing new navigation, flood control and river development projects opposed by the President were vetoed in 1956 and 1958, but the 1960 version, authorizing more than $1.4 billion for 130 projects, was signed July 14 without a murmur. A veto had been hinted by Minority Leader Dirksen when the Senate June 17 added more than 80 projects worth $925 million to the bill passed by the House in 1959. The biggest addition -- $115 million for locks on the Illinois Waterway -- was dropped in conference. The President also accepted a public works appropriation bill (after vetoing one in 1959) carrying funds for 55 new water development projects, 23 of which had been added by the Senate and House to his requests.

Lead-Zinc Subsidy: The President refused to cooperate, however, when Congress sent him a bill authorizing federal subsidies for small lead and zinc producers. Passed by the House June 27, by a 197-192 vote, and by the Senate Aug. 19, by a 59-28 vote, the bill was vetoed Sept. 2 on grounds that "it would harm rather than help" the hard-pressed industry. He was spared another certain veto, when Congress adjourned without acting on a minor tax bill to which the Senate Finance Committee had added a provision raising lead and zinc import duties.

Helium: Space-age requirements for helium (used in Atlas, Titan and other missiles) helped to spur passage of a bill enlarging the authority of the Secretary of the Interior under the Helium Act of 1937 and paving the way for construction, by private industry or the Government, of 12 helium-extraction plants costing $225 million over a 20-year period. Sent to the White House Aug. 31, the bill struck one partisan note: its effective date of March 1, 1961 would bar the outgoing Administration from negotiating any of the construction contracts.

Coal: Development of new and more efficient ways of mining and using coal was the objective of a bill, signed July 7, authorizing a $2-million research program by the Interior Department. But the coal industry was unsuccessful in getting Congress to set up a special joint committee to study the need for a national fuels policy.

Oceanography: An ambitious, 10-year program of oceanographic research, involving expenditure of more than $500 million, was approved by the Senate June 23. The House took no action, however.

Agriculture

The farm problem -- low income and big surpluses -- continued to elude a solution in 1960 in the face of clashing commodity and political interests. In a Feb. 9 message, warning that current Government programs might well "collapse under the pressure of public indignation," the President said he would accept "any constructive solution" developed by Congress. But the criteria he proposed followed those long advocated by Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson and rejected by Congress.

The immediate issue concerned wheat. With 1.4 billion bushels worth $3.5 billion in surplus and more on the way, the President again recommended lower price supports, the elimination of acreage allotments and marketing quotas, and expansion of the soil bank to absorb wheat acreage. The major farm organizations were split, as usual, with the Farm Bureau supporting most of the Administration's proposals while the Grange and Farmers Union backed a plan calling for a national wheat quota of 950 million bushels.

Both approaches were rejected, however, by the Senate Agriculture Committee, which reported a bill May 2 raising wheat supports from the current 75 percent to 80 percent of parity and cutting wheat acreage by 20 percent. When the bill reached the Senate floor, Chairman Allen J. Ellender (D La.), who opposed the measure, offered an amendment to reduce wheat supports to 65 percent of parity by 1963. With both parties sharply divided, the Senate first agreed to the amendment, 45-41, then voted to reconsider and rejected it, 39-46. The Senate then voted, 48-34 to freeze supports at 75 percent, before passing the bill June 9, 44-36.

The House Agriculture Committee, meanwhile, reported a bill May 20 giving wheat growers a choice between two plans: a 25 percent cut in acreage with 85 percent supports, or removal of all production controls with supports of 50 percent after 1961. On June 23, the House barely defeated a move to substitute the Senate-passed bill, by a vote of 195-211, then refused to pass the Committee's bill, 171-236.

No further effort was made to pass a wheat bill. On other farm issues, Congress acted as follows:

Tobacco Supports: Having vetoed a bill in 1959 to freeze tobacco supports because it took "a long step backward" by resurrecting an old parity formula, the President demanded and got a new bill to stabilize tobacco supports, sent to him Feb. 15.

Dairy Supports: In last-minute action Aug. 31, Congress cleared a bill raising price supports on milk used for manufacturing and on butterfat from 77 percent to 80 percent of parity. To the surprise of Democrats, the President signed it.

Agricultural Research: Conferees never reached agreement on a bill, passed in 1959, to step up the search for new uses of farm products.

General Government

Congress Labored to Pass Modest Rights Law

The ever-touchy civil rights issue generated a flood of oratory in 1960 and tied the Senate in knots for the better part of two months. From the start, however, it was clear that Congressional leaders of both parties wanted no more than a limited voting rights measure. Backed by a bipartisan majority of similar disposition, they blocked the antagonistic maneuvers of Southern conservatives and Northern liberals with equal ease, and the law that emerged was, by any standard, a modest modification of the Civil Rights Act of 1957.

Beaten on the floor, the liberals went on to write strong civil rights planks into both party platforms during the July recess. When the Senate reconvened in August, however, party unity was restored as Democrats rebuffed GOP attempts to reopen the issue in the brief post-convention session. On the motion of Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), a leading liberal who had characterized the outcome of earlier debate as Grant's surrender to Lee, the Senate voted 54-28 (D 52-4; R 2-24) to table an Administration bill previously rejected. Thus the civil rights issue was preserved for further exploitation during the oncoming political campaign.

Eisenhower Proposals: Early in 1959 the Administration submitted a seven-point bill that would: make it a federal crime to cross state lines to avoid prosecution for bombing a school or church; make it a crime to interfere with a court order for school desegregation; authorize the Justice Department to inspect voting records and require that these be preserved for three years; authorize emergency schooling for armed forces' children deprived of schools by integration disputes; authorize federal technical and financial aid to areas faced with school desegregation problems; grant statutory authority to the President's Committee on Government Contracts, and extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission.

Only this last request was enacted in 1959, continuing the Commission until Nov. 8, 1961. Of the remaining six points, the first four were contained in modified form in a bill reported Aug. 20, 1959 by the House Judiciary Committee. Pigeonholed by the Rules Committee, the bill was finally turned loose Feb. 18, 1960 when a discharge petition was just ten shy of the needed 219 signatures. Meanwhile, Senate Leaders Johnson and Dirksen, fulfilling a pledge made in 1959, called up a minor House bill Feb. 15 and invited Senators to attach civil rights amendments to it, thus bypassing the Senate Judiciary Committee and provoking a full-blown Southern filibuster. Johnson countered by holding the Senate in continuous session from Feb. 29 through March 9, to the tune of 50 quorum calls.

Floor Action: On March 10, just as the House was taking up its own bill, Senate liberals sought to stop the filibuster by invoking cloture, but their motion was rejected, 42-53. They then tried to revive Part III of the Administration's 1957 bill, authorizing the Attorney General to seek injunctions against the deprivation of any civil right, whether in housing, employment, or education. The amendment was promptly tabled by a vote of 55-38.

Attention then turned to the central legislative issue -- how to ensure the voting rights of qualified Negroes barred from registering by local officials. The Civil Rights Commission had recommended in 1959 that the President be empowered to appoint temporary federal registrars on a showing of discrimination. On Jan. 26, Attorney General William P. Rogers proposed instead that the job be given to referees appointed by the court following the successful prosecution of civil suits under the 1957 law.

With opinions at wide variance concerning the effectiveness of the two proposals, the House March 23 approved a modified version of the referees plan by a vote of 295-241. The Senate next day rejected a proposal to authorize either court-appointed referees or Presidentially-appointed enrollment officers, tabling the amendment by a vote of 51-43. The Senate Judiciary Committee was then given five days to act on the House bill, sent to the Senate March 24, by a 311-109 vote. Reported back with amendments, most of which were accepted, the bill was passed April 8 by a vote of 71-18 after the Senate had once more rejected a series of strengthening and weakening changes. On April 21 the House agreed to the Senate's amendments, sending the bill to the President.

Provisions: The 1960 Civil Rights Act --

- Made obstruction of any federal court order by threats or force punishable by a fine of $1000 or imprisonment of one year, or both.
- Prescribed criminal penalties for false bomb reports, for possessing or transporting explosives across state lines for bombings, and for bombing or burning any building, facility, or vehicle.
- Required preservation of all voting records for federal elections for 22 months, and gave the Attorney General the right to inspect them.
- Authorized provision of schooling for armed forces' children where their regular schools are closed to avoid integration.
- Authorized federal courts to appoint referees to help Negroes register, after a court finding of a "pattern or practice" of discrimination against persons otherwise qualified to vote.

D.C. Suffrage

If the voting rights' bill was a modest gain for civil libertarians, it was also their biggest gain in 1960. Congress approved, for submission to the states, a constitutional amendment to give voteless citizens of the District of Columbia a voice in electing the President. But a concerted drive to bring home-rule to the Nation's capital fell short of the mark, as did an attempt to pass a new "clean elections" law.

Steps to extend the national franchise to the District began when the Senate took up a proposed constitutional amendment to authorize governors to fill vacancies in the House of Representatives in the event of a national disaster. Approved by the Senate in 1954 and again in 1955 but never by the House, the amendment was reported by the Judiciary Committee in 1959 and taken to the floor Jan. 26.

Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) promptly moved to add another amendment to outlaw the poll tax, still levied by five states. A counter-proposal, made by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), would have outlawed the poll tax by statute -- an approach approved five times by the House but never by the Senate. Put to a vote, Holland's amendment was accepted, 72-16; the Javits proposal, offered as a substitute, was then tabled by a 50-37 vote.

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) then moved to add a third constitutional amendment, authorizing the District of Columbia to elect four Presidential electors and two Delegates to the House. Keating's amendment was accepted, 63-25, and the three-part measure was sent to the House Feb. 2 by a vote of 70-18, or 11 more than the required two-thirds.

In the light of known opposition to the poll tax amendment, the House Judiciary Committee decided to strip the measure of all possible encumbrances. As reported May 31, it provided for a single amendment permitting District of Columbia citizens to choose three Presidential electors but no Delegates. Passed by the House by voice vote, the one-item resolution was accepted by the Senate June 16. Whether the District would help to pick a President in 1964 or 1968 was up to the states, 38 of which must ratify the amendment within seven years. The first to do so: Hawaii, the 50th state.

The drive to restore home-rule to the District, governed since 1876 by three commissioners named by the President, began when the Senate passed a bill in 1959 providing for an elected mayor and a nine-member city council. The House District Committee held hearings on another plan, backed by the Administration, to give the District the status of a territory, with a Governor appointed by the President and an elected 15-member legislative assembly. Neither bill was reported to the House, however, and on July 30, 1959 Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) filed a discharge petition to bring the territorial bill to the floor. Subsequently revised, the petition was reportedly signed at various times by as many as 216 Members. But it never garnered the necessary 219 signatures at one time, and both home-rule bills died with adjournment in 1960.

Related issues considered by Congress in 1960:

Clean Elections: The first major legislation of the session to reach the Senate was a bill, authored by Sen. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.), to completely rewrite the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925. As reported in 1959, the bill raised the limits on permissible campaign spending by Congressional candidates and interstate political committees, but fell considerably short of what Hennings had proposed in order to close loopholes in the 1925 law.

In Senate debate starting Jan. 13, Hennings led a successful fight to strengthen the bill. An amendment to bring expenditures in primary elections for federal office under the reporting provisions of the bill was approved, 50-39 (D 34-21; R 16-18). The Senate also agreed to require reports on campaign finances from political committees operating within a single state, by a vote of 53-37. Other strengthening provisions were added before the bill was passed Jan. 25, by a 59-22 vote. But it was never heard from again and expired quietly in the House Administration Committee -- an unfinished epitaph to Sen. Hennings, who died Sept. 13.

Internal Security: The Senate, in turn, was equally unwilling to follow the lead of the House on security matters. The Senate Judiciary Committee reported an omnibus measure June 30 corresponding to four bills passed by the House in 1959, designed to broaden provisions of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, to permit prosecution for espionage committed anywhere in the world, to extend the definition of prohibited activities under the Smith Act, and to authorize denial of passports to Communists and Communist sympathizers on the basis of confidential information. When the Senate failed to act on the bill, Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) won quick House approval Aug. 22 for another version of the 1959 foreign agents bill, but the Senate ignored that as well. Nor did the Senate take up a bill, reported June 24, to legalize the use of evidence obtained through wiretapping, in criminal proceedings in states permitting police to eavesdrop when authorized by court order.

TV Campaigning: Senate hearings on a proposal to require the networks to give free television time to both Presidential nominees during the election campaign revealed greater opposition than support for the scheme. But the networks offered to provide such time to the Democratic and GOP candidates, on condition that Congress amend existing law so that equal time would not have to be furnished to minor candidates. A resolution to that effect, suspending the "equal time" provision of the Federal Communications Act for the 1960 campaign, was approved by the Senate June 27 and by the House Aug. 22. Plans for four joint appearances by Vice President Nixon and Sen. Kennedy on all four television networks were announced Aug. 31.

Pay Raise

President Eisenhower sustained the second such defeat of his Administration when Congress overrode his veto of a bill raising the pay of Government workers by $750 million a year. For technical reasons, neither the raise nor Congress' failure to increase postal rates by $555 million showed up in the final tally of appropriations (see p. 74, 75). Yet the net effect of the two actions was to add more than $1.3 billion to the expenditure side of the fiscal 1961 budget.

During lengthy hearings before the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Administration spokesmen opposed any across-the-board increase in federal pay as unjustified. But on May 23 the Committee reported a bill granting a 9 percent raise to about 1.6 million postal workers, civil service employees, and others on the federal payroll, with a guaranteed minimum increase of $350. When it became apparent that the Rules Committee had no intention of sending the bill to the floor, members of the Government Employees' Council (AFL-CIO), in a dazzling display of lobbying, rounded up the required 219 signatures on a discharge petition in two days, June 2-3, thus bypassing the roadblock.

In an effort to enhance prospects of overriding an expected veto, supporters of the bill agreed to trim the raise to 7.5 percent and strike the guaranteed minimum. The strategy succeeded, for the House passed it in that form June 15, by an overwhelming majority, 378-40. All attempts to modify the bill in the Senate were rejected by decisive margins, and on June 17 it was sent to the President, also by a topheavy margin of 62-17.

As expected, the President vetoed the bill on June 30, saying it represented "fiscal and legislative irresponsibility." He characterized as "utterly without foundation" the argument that the raise was needed to keep pace with the cost of living, pointing out that the price index had advanced only 2.1 percent since 1958 when a 10-percent pay raise had been approved. But his sharpest rebuke was levelled at the "unconcealed political pressure exerted flagrantly and in concert on Members of Congress" by the employee lobbies. Were the public to know the true facts, he said, "their indignation and outrage in all its power would be quickly felt."

The President's peroration had no discernible effect on Capitol Hill. With the help of a majority of Republicans in both chambers, the bill was passed over his veto July 1, by a vote of 345-69 in the House and 74-24 in the Senate.

Annuities: Congress also completed action June 30 on a bill permitting civil service employees and Members of Congress, when eligible for maximum retirement benefits, to continue annuity fund payments in order to liquidate contributions payable for service prior to 1946, when Members were brought under the civil service retirement program.

Broadcast Controls

No vested interest came quite so close as the broadcasting industry to being severely penalized in 1960 for malpractice. Indicted on the basis of disclosures, beginning in 1959, of rigged TV quiz shows, galloping payola, and deceptive advertising, the industry was threatened with a most dreaded punishment -- a law permitting the Federal Communications Commission to suspend the license of any station that misbehaved. That tooth was pulled, however, before Congress passed a relatively mild bill designed to ban deception on the air waves.

Hearings before the House Legislative Oversight Subcommittee, headed by Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.), had established the fact that neither the FCC nor the networks had made any serious effort to clean house before the roof fell in, revealing a shoddy maze of fix and payoff. The only real question concerned the appropriate remedy: whether to rely on the industry to police itself under the fairly benevolent eye of the FCC (as broadcasters urged), or to assign the job to the Commission, along with the tools to do it.

At the President's direction, Attorney General Rogers came up with a report Dec. 31, 1959 recommending a series of new FCC procedures and regulations, and two specific changes in current law: making payola a criminal offense for employees of radio and TV stations, and giving FCC authority to suspend licensees for prohibited practices or failure to serve the public interest. Empowered only to revoke a broadcaster's license, FCC was reluctant to use its "death penalty" authority.

In a report based on its own investigation, released Feb. 6, the Harris Subcommittee went well beyond these recommendations, proposing in addition that FCC's authority to license and regulate individual stations be extended to the networks, and that strict controls be exercised over transfers of licenses -- a large, lucrative, and casually regulated side of the broadcasting business.

Neither of these provisions was contained in a bill reported June 13 by the House Commerce Committee, also headed by Rep. Harris. But the measure included stiff penalties for deceptive practices and authorized the FCC to suspend any license for 10 days, as well as levy fines up to $1,000 a day, for stipulated misconduct. After four days of debate, much of it directed at the "tyrannical" and "oppressive" suspension authority, the House passed the bill June 28 with minor revisions.

Following the exhaustively-broadcast political conventions in July, the Senate Commerce Committee approved the House bill after deleting the FCC's authority to suspend licenses and putting a $10,000 ceiling on the fines it could impose. The Senate passed the bill as amended Aug. 25, and the House concurred in the changes Aug. 30. Payola would be taboo henceforth, but the industry had been spared a worse fate at the hands of a divided Congress.

Regulatory Agencies

Devising a legislative remedy for the tangible evils of fix and payola in broadcasting was one thing. It was quite another matter, however, to prescribe an antidote for the smog of "influence" blanketing the decisions of the powerful federal regulatory agencies -- particularly the FCC, the Federal Power Commission, and the Civil Aeronautics Board, each of which exercises make-or-break authority over vast economic domains.

With millions of dollars riding on the agencies' rate-making, licensing, and certification rulings, the regulated industries had never made a secret of their efforts to assure the appointment of commissioners sympathetic to their causes. How much further they would go to protect their own interests was rarely subject to proof, as for example in the 1958 scandal over Miami's Channel 10 award. Yet it was clear from the continuing investigations of the Harris Subcommittee that "influence" was a pervasive and debilitating virus in the world of the so-called "independent" agencies.

Pointing up the problem in 1960 were such items as the resignation March 10 of FCC Chairman John C. Doerfer in the wake of a yacht trip as the guest of a major broadcaster, and the disclosure of private talks between Attorney Thomas G. Corcoran and FPC members concerning a pipeline rate case. Both episodes bore directly on the central issue of "ex parte" or off-the-record contacts between the regulators and regulated.

The remedy proposed by Rep. Harris, and reported July 1 by the House Commerce Committee, was a bill to proscribe as "improper" any attempt to influence agency decisions through "secret and devious means," including pressure, the spreading of false information, and pecuniary or other inducements. To that end, off-the-record communications on pending matters would be subject to criminal penalties of fine and imprisonment. Agency personnel having improper relations with the regulated industries would be disciplined by their agencies.

A complex measure on a complicated problem, the bill failed to reach the floor before adjournment. It marked the beginning, however, of what promised to be a growing interest in tackling some long-neglected issues in the regulatory field.

Conflict of Interest: The closely related problem of dealing with conflicts of interest on the part of any Government official or employee won new attention when a special committee of the New York City Bar Assn., headed by Roswell B. Perkins, issued a report Feb. 22 of its two-year study of federal law on the subject, together with the text of a proposed Executive Conflict of Interest Act. House hearings were held, but further action was deferred until 1961. The House did pass a bill April 7, to bar retired officers from negotiating procurement contracts within two years of their release from service, but the Senate took no action.

Other general matters considered in 1960:

Judgeships: No one disputed the need to create additional federal judgeships to handle a rising volume of litigation (some of it backed up for years on overcrowded dockets), but for the third year in a row a Democratic Congress refused to give a Republican President the opportunity to fill these additional lifetime jobs. On the basis of Administration assurances that the appointments would be split 50-50 between Democrats and Republicans, the House Judiciary Committee reported a bill June 15 to create 35 new judgeships -- 10 fewer than asked by Attorney General Rogers but 10 more than provided in a bill reported to the Senate late in 1959. Neither measure came to a vote, however. With all bets riding on the outcome of the 1960 election, Democrats rejected a half-loaf in hopes of winning the whole loaf.

Obscene Mail: Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield's long campaign for tighter laws against the traffic in pornography inched forward when Congress completed action July 2 on a bill authorizing the courts to permit the Post Office to detain obscene mail until the conclusion of legal proceedings -- a longer period than the 20-day detention permitted under previous law. The Senate also passed a bill June 30 creating a Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials to study the entire problem, but the House took no action.

Juvenile Delinquency: Congress also failed to complete action on a measure designed to combat a rising tide of juvenile delinquency. The Senate passed a bill Jan. 26 to authorize a five-year, $25-million program of federal aid to state, community, and non-profit agencies, to develop improved methods and trained personnel for dealing with delinquency. A similar bill was reported May 18 by the House Education and Labor Committee, but it never reached the House floor.

Drivers' Licenses: A bill approved July 2 directed the Department of Commerce to maintain a register of persons whose driver permits are revoked for drunken driving or conviction of traffic offenses involving death. The names would be furnished voluntarily by state and local authorities, who in turn would be authorized to consult the register.

Hazardous Substances: Congress also enacted a bill June 28 requiring manufacturers of household products to so label them if hazardous, to list the ingredients in the products and, if necessary, an antidote. It was designed to encourage establishment of "uniform, adequate, modern labeling requirements by the various states."

Freedom Commission: "One of the most important bills ever to be introduced in Congress," according to sponsor Sen. Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), was passed by the Senate Aug. 31, establishing a Freedom Commission to operate a Freedom Academy for research and training in cold-war activities. Opposed by the Justice Department on grounds of duplication of effort, the bill failed to win House approval.

Summary of 20 Key Votes in Senate and House

Members of Congress enjoy ample opportunity to influence the course of legislation in a variety of ways. Only by the roll-call vote, however, is it possible to establish beyond question the public record of a Member on the issues. Three hundred such votes were tallied during the second session of the 86th Congress -- 207 in the Senate and 93 in the House. From this number Congressional Quarterly selected 20 as Key Votes, ten from each chamber. The issues at stake are summarized below. For Members' votes, see next page.

Senate

1. An ambitious, long-term proposal for federal aid to education was barely defeated when, on a motion to reconsider the matter, Vice President Nixon broke a 44-44 tie by voting to table the motion.

2. The determination of Senate leaders to limit the scope of civil rights legislation in 1960 was first attested when a bipartisan majority voted 55-38 to table a strong injunction provision.

3. The prevailing mood was then confirmed when the Senate refused to strengthen the voting rights provision, voting 51-43 to table an amendment to permit either court-appointed referees or Presidentially-appointed enrollment officers to register persons discriminated against.

4. A five-year deadlock between Congress and the President over depressed area legislation was continued when the Senate, by a 45-39 vote, failed to override his veto of a $251 million bill.

5. After first accepting, then rejecting, a sharp reduction in price supports to stem a mounting tide of surplus wheat, the Senate voted 44-36 for a bill freezing supports at 75 percent of parity while cutting acreage by 20 percent.

6. Major tax revision was not on the agenda in 1960, but the partisan cleavage over "loopholes" was pointed up when the Senate voted 42-41 to repeal the 4 percent dividend credit granted in 1954.

7. The President's veto of a $750 million pay raise for postal and other federal workers proved to be the second and last of his eight-year Administration to be overridden, when the Senate seconded the earlier House vote, 74-24.

8. With opposition to Sen. Kennedy's minimum wage bill focused on the extension of coverage to 5 million additional workers, more than the raise to $1.25 in the hourly minimum, an amendment limiting the extension to 280,000 new workers was rejected, by a vote of 39-56.

9. Liberal Democrats lost a key election-year battle when Republicans voted solidly with Southern Democrats to reject a plan for providing medical care benefits to the aged under the Social Security system, on a 44-51 roll call.

10. Bipartisan support for the much-criticized Mutual Security Program was demonstrated once more on adjournment eve, when the Senate voted 56-31 to restore $190 million cut from the program earlier on House insistence.

House

1. The effectiveness of President Eisenhower's veto power, despite the 2-to-1 Democratic majority in the 86th Congress, was again demonstrated when the House, by a 249-157 vote, failed to override his veto of a water pollution bill.

2. The voting rights provision of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 was shaped largely by the House when it voted 295-124 for an amendment, modeled on the Administration's plan, providing for appointment of referees to register voters where a "pattern or practice" of discrimination was found.

3. Both parties were split by a bill (HR 5) granting tax incentives to private investment in underdeveloped areas. Passed by the House, 196-192, the bill died in the Senate.

4. The House version of an aid-to-education bill, calling for $1.3 billion in federal grants to the states for school construction over a four-year period, skinned through by a vote of 206-189 only to die in the Rules Committee.

5. In a rare display of independence, the House voted 212-173 to restore one-half of a $400 million cut ordered by its Appropriation Committee in the President's $2-billion request for military aid under the Mutual Security Program.

6. Hopes for a workable wheat bill vanished when Eastern Democrats joined Republicans in opposing a measure offering price supports at 85 percent of parity in return for a 25 percent cut in acreage, which was defeated 171-236.

7. Barred under a closed rule from offering any amendments, the House agreed reluctantly, 223-174, to pass a bill extending corporate income and excise tax rates for another year without change.

8. Minimum wage legislation, destined to die in conference, was greatly modified by the House, when it voted 211-203 to substitute a bill cutting the proposed minimum from $1.25 to $1.15 and new coverage from 3.5 million to 1.4 million.

9. For the first and last time, a majority of House Republicans deserted the President to help override his veto of a $750 million pay raise for federal workers, on a 345-69 vote.

10. The refusal of the Port of New York Authority (a joint New York-New Jersey agency created under an interstate compact approved by Congress) to produce records subpenaed by a House subcommittee set off a new states' rights fight when the House voted 270-124 to cite the Authority's chairman for contempt.

Senate Key Votes on Aid to Education, Civil Rights, Area Redevelopment, Wheat Bill, Dividend Credit

1. S 8. Emergency Federal Assistance for School Construction. Dirksen (R Ill.) motion to table a motion to reconsider a 44-44 vote rejecting Clark (D Pa.) amendment to authorize $25 per school-age child, or $1.1 billion per year for an indefinite period for school construction and/or teachers' salaries. Tabling motion agreed to when Vice President Nixon voted "yea" to break a 44-44 tie (D 16-40; R 28-4), Feb. 3, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

2. Civil Rights Proposals. Johnson (D Texas) motion to table Case (R S.D.) amendment to the pending Administration bill to add Part III, empowering the Attorney General to seek injunctions to protect any civil right. Tabling motion agreed to 55-38 (D 34-28; R 21-10), March 10, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

3. Civil Rights Proposals. Morse (D Ore.) motion to table a Javits (R N.Y.)-Clark (D Pa.) amendment to the third section of the Administration bill, to provide for court-appointed referees or Presidentially appointed enrollment officers to register Negroes after a court has found a pattern or practice of discrimination. Tabling motion agreed to 51-43 (D 27-35; R 24-8), March 24, 1960. The President did not take a position on the motion.

4. S 722. Area Redevelopment Act of 1960, authorizing federal loans and grants totaling $251 million for the relief of economically depressed areas. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Failed to pass 45-39 (D 40-14; R 5-25), May 24, 1960 (56 "yeas" were required to override the veto). A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

5. S 2759. Wheat Act of 1960. Passage of the bill as amended. Passed 44-36 (D 32-19; R 12-17), June 9, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

6. HR 12381. To extend for one year the existing corporation income and certain excise tax rates. McCarthy (D Minn.) amendment to repeal the 4 percent tax credit allowed since 1954 on dividend income. Agreed to 42-41 (D 39-12; R 3-29), June 20, 1960. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

Senate Key Votes on Pay Raise Veto, Minimum Wage, Medical Care Benefits, Mutual Security Funds

7. HR 9883. Postal and Federal Employees' Salary Increase Acts of 1960, providing an across-the-board 7½ percent pay increase for 1.6 million postal, classified and other federal employees. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Passed 74-24 (D 55-9; R 19-15), July 1, 1960 (66 "yeas" were needed to override). A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

8. S 3758. Fair Labor Standards Act amendments, increasing minimum hourly wage to $1.25 and extending coverage to an additional 5 million workers. Holland (D Fla.) amendment to reduce the number of new workers to be covered to about 280,000. Rejected 39-56 (D 19-44; R 20-12), Aug. 17, 1960. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

9. HR 12580. Social Security Amendments of 1960. Anderson (D N.M.) amendment providing medical benefits for all Social Security retirees 68 and over, to be financed by an increase in the Social Security payroll tax. Rejected 44-51 (D 43-19; R 1-32), Aug. 23, 1960. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

10. HR 13161. Second Supplemental Appropriation Act for fiscal 1961. Committee amendments providing $190 million for the Mutual Security Program. Agreed to, en bloc, 56-31 (D 31-23; R 25-8), Aug. 29, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

House Key Votes on Pollution Grants Veto, Civil Rights, Foreign Investment, School Bill, Military Aid, Wheat

1. HR 3610. Amend the 1948 Water Pollution Control Act by raising to $90 million annually the federal contributions for sewage plant construction. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Failed to pass 249-157 (D 234-27; R 15-130), Feb. 25, 1960. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

2. HR 8601. Civil Rights Act of 1960. McCulloch (R Ohio)-Celler (D N.Y.) amendment embodying the Administration's proposal for court-appointed referees to help Negroes register and vote where a "pattern or practice" of discrimination exists. Agreed to 295-124 (D 172-100; R 123-24), March 23, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

3. HR 5. Foreign Investment Incentive Tax Act of 1960, deferring tax payments on earnings of U.S.-owned Foreign Business Corporations in underdeveloped countries until the money is returned to this country. Passed 196-192 (D 130-115; R 66-77), May 18, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

4. HR 10128. School Construction Assistance Act of 1960, authorizing $325 million a year for four years in federal matching grants to the states for public school construction. Passage of the bill. Passed 206-189 (D 162-97; R 44-92), May 26, 1960. The President did not take a position on the bill.

5. HR 12619. Mutual Security and related agencies appropriations for fiscal 1961. Taber (R N.Y.) amendment to restore $200 million of a $400 million cut in the President's request for military assistance. Agreed to 212-173 (D 105-139; R 107-34), June 17, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

6. HR 12261. Farm Surplus Reduction Act of 1960. Passage of the amended bill, which offered wheat growers a choice between a 25 percent cut in production, with supports at 85 percent of parity, or unrestricted production with supports at about 60 percent. Rejected 171-236 (D 162-100; R 9-136), June 23, 1960. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

House Key Votes on Tax Extension, Minimum Wage, Federal Pay Raise Veto, Contempt Citation

7. HR 12381. Public Debt and Tax Rate Extension Act of 1960. Passed 223-174 (D 140-114; R 83-60), June 8, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

8. HR 12677. Increase minimum wage protection under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. Kitchin (D N.C.) substitute amendment for the Committee bill, extending $1-an-hour wage protection but no overtime protection to employees of interstate retail chains and raising the hourly minimum for previously covered workers to $1.15. Agreed to 211-203 (D 90-176; R 121-27), June 30, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

9. HR 9883. Postal and Federal Employees' Salary Increase Acts of 1960, providing an across-the-board 7½ percent pay increase for 1.6 million postal, classified and other federal employees. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Passed 345-69 (D 256-13; R 89-56), (276 "yeas" were needed to override), July 1, 1960. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

10. H Res 607. Citing S. Sloan Colt, chairman of the Port Authority of New York, for contempt of Congress for refusing to furnish subpenaed documents to the House Judiciary Antitrust Subcommittee. Adopted 270-124 (D 207-44; R 63-80), Aug. 23, 1960. The President did not take a position on the citation.

PREDICTED FISCAL 1961 SURPLUS LOWERED TO $1.1 BILLION

As expected, the midyear review of the fiscal 1961 budget, issued Oct. 4 by the Bureau of the Budget, resulted in substantial changes in the estimates of income and outgo presented to Congress in January. Net effect of these revisions was to cut the estimated surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961 from $4.2 billion to $1.1 billion. Two-thirds of this reduction stemmed from a $2-billion drop in the Treasury's estimate of anticipated receipts from the corporation income tax, reflecting the slackened pace of economic advance in the first nine months of 1960.

Summary: According to the revised estimates, fiscal 1961 expenditures would total $80.4 billion, or $600 million more than was originally estimated and $3.2 billion more than was actually spent in fiscal 1960. Receipts were placed at $81.5 billion, or $2.5 billion under the January estimate, although still $3.1 billion more than was collected in fiscal 1960. The projected surplus was thus trimmed to $1.1 billion, compared to an actual surplus of $1.2 billion in fiscal 1960. In sum, the revised estimates indicated that income and outgo each would rise by more than $3 billion in fiscal 1961.

The foregoing revisions were also reflected in new estimates of receipts from and payments to the public, which measure the flow of money between the Government and the public by consolidating budget, trust fund, and other accounts. Projected receipts were shaved from $102.2 billion to $100.6 billion, while payments were increased from $96.3 billion to $98.1 billion. As a result, the excess of receipts over payments (which amounted to $800 million in fiscal 1960) was estimated at $2.5 billion, compared with $5.9 billion in January. Federal fiscal operations thus promised to have less of a deflationary impact than was first projected.

Receipts: In lowering estimated budget receipts by $2.5 billion, the Budget Bureau attributed only $200 million of the reduction to Congressional action or inaction over Administration objections. About $100 million of that loss was ascribed to reduction of the cabaret tax, added medical deductions for aged dependent parents, and other tax measures enacted. The other $100 million was traced to the failure of Congress to approve certain revenue proposals, including an increase in the aviation gas tax, a new tax on jet fuels, and revised rules for taxing cooperatives and gains from the sale of depreciable personal property.

The only other major reduction, amounting to $345 million, was more apparent than real, and stemmed from a change in bookkeeping. The January estimates included expenditures as well as receipts in this amount, covering grants and collections for administering state employment and unemployment compensation programs, although the President at the same time asked Congress to transfer both accounts from the budget to the unemployment trust fund. Congress complied, and the revised estimates of budget income and outgo were accordingly reduced by $345 million. Normal budget practice, however, is to assume the enactment of proposed legislation in drawing up the January estimates. Strictly speaking, therefore, the October estimates overstated the reduction in receipts and understated the increase in expenditures by $345 million.

Although the estimate for corporation income taxes was reduced from $23.5 billion to $21.5 billion -- the same amount collected in fiscal 1960 -- no change was made in the estimate of $43.7 billion from individual income taxes -- a sum $3 billion greater than was paid in 1960. This increase was said to reflect "continuing high levels of employment and income."

Expenditures: Revised estimates of budget expenditures in fiscal 1961, although adding up to a net increase of only $600 million, reflected substantial cuts as well as additions to the January estimates. Major increases were: $637 million for the pay raise enacted over the President's veto; $566 million for postal operations (because Congress refused to raise postal rates); $305 million for defense, added by Congress over Administration objections; $241 million for medical research, aid to schools in impacted areas, and medical care for the aged, also added by Congress; $121 million for direct housing loans to veterans, added by Congress; $109 million for the Forest Service; and $100 million for space activities, initiated by the Administration.

Partially offsetting these increases in estimated expenditures were the following reductions: $500 million for interest on the public debt, originally estimated at $9.5 billion, reflecting a drop in interest rates; $345 million for the unemployment program (because of the bookkeeping change described above); $203 million for various veterans benefits; and $200 million for the Commodity Credit Corporation, because of lower interest and storage costs. In addition, the allowance for contingencies, estimated at $200 million in January, was cut to $75 million -- a normal midyear revision.

Compared with actual expenditures in fiscal 1960, however, the revised estimates for 1961 showed substantial increases for most functions, adding up to a net advance of $3.2 billion. Major increases included $390 million for major national security programs, $362 million for foreign affairs, $1 billion for commerce and housing, $593 million for agriculture, $312 million for natural resources, $266 million for veterans, and $296 million for general government activities.

Spending Authority: Actual spending rarely matches new obligational authority -- the amount Congress decides may be spent for new and existing programs -- because of lags in the fiscal pipeline. But new authority suggests the trend in budgetary expenditures, whether up or down, for succeeding fiscal years. Thus, in January, new obligational authority was estimated at $79.4 billion, or $400 million less than estimated expenditures in fiscal 1961, pointing to a possible slight reduction in spending in fiscal 1962. The midyear review, however, placed new obligational authority at $82 billion, of which $80.4 billion had been enacted and $1.6 billion was forecast in supplemental requests.

Put another way, the January estimate of a $400 million reduction in spending authority (under projected 1961 expenditures) was revised to allow for a $1.6 billion increase in spending authority (over revised estimates of 1961 expenditures). The new figure of $82 billion was the highest of the Eisenhower Administration; new obligational authority dropped from $80.3 billion in fiscal 1953 to $57.1 billion in fiscal 1955, then climbed to $81.4 billion in fiscal 1959, receding to $79.6 billion in fiscal 1960. Actual spending in fiscal 1962 appeared certain to exceed $81 billion.

CONGRESS GIVES IKE 30.6%, LOWEST IN 8-YEAR TERM

President Eisenhower's 1960 legislative program was the least successful one of his eight-year Administration when Congress Sept. 1 ended its 1960 session. The President during the session made 183 specific legislative requests. Congress approved only 56, or 30.6 percent of them.

The lowest previous Presidential Boxscore, compiled by Congressional Quarterly, was in 1957 when Congress approved 76 of 206 legislative requests, or 36.9 percent, a sharp drop from his 1953 boxscore of 72.7 percent and 1954 boxscore of 64.7 percent. Congress in 1959 approved 40.8 percent of the Eisenhower program. (1959 Almanac p. 93)

Mr. Eisenhower did best in his foreign policy program in 1960; Congress approved 22 of 41 requests, or 53.7 percent. Congress gave the President most of the money he asked for in nine of ten foreign aid requests (90 percent), and his Mutual Security program got the most Congressional support of all the President's programs, though Congress only partially heeded the President's Aug. 26 letter to Congressional leaders asking that his Mutual Security requests for fiscal 1961 be completely funded.

The parts of the Eisenhower program that failed most obviously were his agriculture, education and welfare and labor requests. Only two of 20 agriculture requests (10 percent), two of 21 education and welfare requests (9.5 percent) and one of seven labor requests (14.3 percent) were approved by Congress.

The President's power to block key Democratic proposals by use of the veto slipped in 1960 when Congress overrode his veto of a federal pay raise (HR 9883), rejecting his request that it wait until a comprehensive comparison of wage scales in private industry and Government was finished. Though the President's veto of the Water Pollution Control Act (HR 3610) was sustained Feb. 25 by the House, Congress appropriated for fiscal 1961, in the Labor-Health, Education and Welfare Appropriation Bill (HR 11390), almost the full amount that would have been provided by the pollution act for fiscal 1961, against the President's request for a reduced appropriation.

The President's veto of the Area Redevelopment bill (S 722) resulted in a stalemate; the Senate failed by 11 votes to override the veto and the President's initial program was rejected and a revised plan ignored by Congress.

Over-all score for the President's eight years in office: 1,559 requests submitted, 716 requests approved by Congress, for a percentage of 45.9.

Following is the over-all status of the President's requests at the 86th Congress's adjournment sine die on Sept. 1, 1960. See next page for specific action on individual requests. The figure following each listing shows what percent it comprises of the total of 183 Presidential requests.

- 56 requests had been approved by Congress -- 30.6 percent.
- 2 requests were passed by the Senate and House in different forms and died awaiting compromise agreement -- 1.1 percent.
- 18 requests were passed by either the House or the Senate but not by both -- 9.8 percent.
- 6 requests were reported from a committee to the floor of either chamber but had not come up for a vote -- 3.3 percent.
- 17 requests received committee hearings but were not reported -- 9.3 percent.
- 43 requests received no action at all -- 23.5 percent.
- 41 requests received unfavorable action through rejection in committee or on the floor -- 22.4 percent.

Boxscore Ground Rules

Only specific requests for legislative action submitted to Congress by the President were tabulated for the Boxscore. Excluded from the list of legislative requests were proposals advocated by officials of the Executive Branch, but not specifically by the President; measures that the President endorsed but did not request; suggestions that Congress consider or study particular topics, if no legislative action was requested; nominations.

Almost all appropriation requests were excluded because they are a yearly occurrence and provide the funds necessary to carry out regular functions of the Government. But CQ included any appropriation requests the President designated as key points of certain programs, and which were submitted in special messages (rather than in the budget).

Because requests for approval of treaties carry over from one Congress to the next, CQ listed all unratified treaties sent to the Senate by Mr. Eisenhower from 1956 on.

The number of requests is a fair, but necessarily somewhat arbitrary, count of the Presidential proposals. Requests can be totaled in many ways. Though not all the President's proposals were equally important, CQ makes no attempt to weigh them. But a rough, automatic weighting results from major requests usually having several points.

Congress does not always vote "yes" or "no" on a Presidential proposal. CQ evaluates compromises to determine if the request is closer to approval or to rejection of the President's request.

CQ'S PRESIDENTIAL BOXSCORE THROUGH SEPT. 1 ADJOURNMENT

Following is a list of President Eisenhower's 1960 legislative requests and action taken on them through Sept. 1, the date Congress adjourned sine die. A letter in parentheses following each request indicates the principal and most definitive sources of the request. A key to the letters is given in the box on the preceding page. Treaty requests are followed by the date the treaty was sent to the Senate.

CQ

HOW CQ MEASURES CONGRESS' PERFORMANCE

The legislative record of the individual Senator or Representative is composed of actions -- or inactions -- many of which are not a matter of public record. As a member of one or more standing committees and their several subcommittees, where the shape of legislation generally is determined, the legislator participates in the making of important decisions, often behind closed doors. As bills move to the floor, he may be busy rounding up supporters -- again out of public view -- for an amendment that will be offered. On the floor he may or may not participate in the recorded debate. The only official record by which the actions of any legislator may be compared with those of his colleagues is the roll-call vote.

The great bulk of proposed legislation that reaches the floor is disposed of by voice vote -- without a record of each legislator's position. For example, Congress in 1958 passed 2,718 bills, yet recorded only 293 roll calls. Some of the legislation accepted or rejected by voice vote is important. Conversely, some of the matters disposed of by roll-call vote are relatively unimportant. Nevertheless, most roll calls involve substantial issues, and they provide, in the final analysis, the only indisputable record of each legislator's actions.

For these reasons, Congressional Quarterly publishes the results of all roll calls in specially designed voting charts. These show summaries of the proposals put to a vote and the positions recorded by the Members. CQ's roll-call charts present the individual Member's complete voting record, in so far as it is available.

This voting record, covering a wide span of legislative issues during any session, is inevitably open to partisan analysis and interpretation by the two major parties and other interested groups. In an attempt to provide students of Congress with a meaningful yet nonpartisan analysis of record voting, Congressional Quarterly conducts six separate and distinct studies, each under a specific system of ground rules, as follows:

• PRESIDENTIAL SUPPORT and OPPOSITION: This study is designed to show the extent to which each Member of Congress supports or opposes the specific legislative requests or stands of the President. Key step is the choice of roll calls for inclusion in the tabulation. Only those votes are included on which it is possible to say that the President, were he a Member of Congress, would have voted "yea" or "nay" on the basis of his personal messages and statements issued before the vote was taken. This method results in the inclusion of some non-controversial votes as well as the exclusion of certain important roll calls on which the President's own position was not publicly clear at the time the vote was taken. Any departure from the method used, however, would lead to a subjective weighting of issues, the results of which would be open to serious challenge.

• FEDERAL ROLE: This study measures the positions of Members with respect to the nature, scope and extent of the role of the Federal Government. Votes are chosen in which Members are presented with a choice between a larger and a smaller federal role. Sometimes the alternative is between maintaining or enlarging an existing program; sometimes between initiating a smaller or a larger program; sometimes between maintaining the status quo or diminishing the federal role. Only one roll call on any single issue is included in the Federal Role study. This type of study is considered less open to misinterpretation than CQ's former Economy Support study.

• PARTY UNITY: This study is designed to show the extent to which each Member votes with the majority of his party when that majority is opposed by a majority of the other party. Thus, by definition, roll calls included in the tabulation of Party Unity scores are selected automatically according to the numerical outcome of the vote. While this is an inherently arbitrary division, since the majority in question may range from unanimity to one more than the minority, it is the only method available that is free of bias. Any approach based on a yardstick determined by the votes of the respective party leaders runs into the fact that these leaders occasionally are to be found voting with a distinct party minority. In the absence of any more reliable method of determining party positions when they are in opposition, the system used by CQ provides the best index to a Member's support of his party relative to that of his party colleagues.

• BIPARTISAN SUPPORT: This study, in contrast to Party Unity, is designed to show the extent to which each Member votes with his party's majority when both party majorities are in agreement. All roll calls thus are classified automatically either as Party Unity or Bipartisan Support votes, according to the mathematical outcome. As in the case of the former, the size of the majorities may vary widely on Bipartisan Support votes, although they tend to be large in the case of votes on relatively non-controversial issues.

• VOTING PARTICIPATION: This study is designed to show the extent to which each Member actually casts "yea" or "nay" votes -- the only kind that can determine the legislative outcome -- on roll calls for which he is eligible. Relatively few Members score 100 percent since absences due to illness, committee sessions and travel are common. Voting Participation is not, however, a record of absenteeism as such. It is a measure of the relative extent to which Members make effective use of their voting privilege.

• ON THE RECORD: Members who, for one reason or another, do not cast "yea" or "nay" votes on roll calls are generally recorded as being for or against the measure voted upon. These recorded positions are added to the "yea" and "nay" votes in tabulating On The Record, which is a measure of the extent to which each Member makes his position on all roll-call votes a matter of public record.

Each of the foregoing studies is subject to the qualifications set forth in the Ground Rules for each study. Full understanding of these qualifications is essential to any interpretation placed upon the group and individual scores derived from the methods employed.

CQ Fact Sheet On Voting Participation

CONGRESSMEN VOTED ON 87% OF 1960 ROLL CALLS

The average Member of the 86th Congress voted "yea" or "nay" on 87 percent of the roll calls in 1960, and went "on the record" on 96 percent of the votes -- about the same, in both cases, as in the 85th Congress. Congressional Quarterly's tabulation was based on all 207 roll calls in the Senate and all 93 in the House in 1960. CQ's scores measure two things:

- Voting Participation -- The percentage of total roll calls on which a Member cast "yea" or "nay" votes.
- On the Record -- The percentage of total roll calls on which a Member made his position known by casting "yea" or "nay" votes, entering live pairs, announcing his stands, or answering CQ polls. (For full definitions see box on next page.)

Party Scores

Composites of Democratic and Republican scores for Voting Participation and On the Record for 1960 and for the 86th Congress (1959-60):

	1960		86th Congress
	DEM.	GOP	DEM.	GOP
VOTING PARTICIPATION
Both Chambers	85%	89%	87%	89%
Senate	80	86	84	87
House	87	91	89	90
ON THE RECORD
Both Chambers	95%	97%	96%	97%
Senate	96	95	97	96
House	95	97	96	97

The composite Voting-Participation score of all Members of the House was 89 percent; that for all Members of the Senate was 82 percent. For both chambers, the composite On-the-Record score of all members was 96 percent.

Absences

Voting Participation and On the Record scores for each Member of Congress are shown in the charts. Failures to vote usually may be traced to valid causes, including conflicting official duties and illnesses. Among those absent for a day or more in 1960 because of their illness or illness or death in their families were:

Senate Democrats: Hennings (Mo.), McNamara (Mich.), Eastland (Miss.), Dodd (Conn.), Church (Idaho) and Thurmond (S.C.); Senate Republicans: Capehart (Ind.) and Martin (Iowa).

House Democrats: Doyle (Calif.), Moulder (Mo.), Forand (R.I.), Udall (Ariz.), Sullivan (Mo.), Mitchell (Ga.), Barr (Ind.) and Blitch (Ga.); House Republicans: Scherer (Ohio), Kilburn (N.Y.) and Younger (Calif.).

Definitions

• VOTING PARTICIPATION -- Percentage of roll-call votes on which Congressman votes "yea" or "nay." Failures to vote "yea" or "nay" lower scores -- even if the Congressman votes "present." enters a pair, announces his stand in the Congressional Record, or answers the CQ Poll. Only votes of "yea" or "nay" directly affect the outcome of a roll call. Voting Participation is the closest approach to an attendance record, but it is only an approximation. A Congressman may be present and nevertheless decline to vote "yea" or "nay" -- usually because he has entered a pair with an absent Member.

• ON THE RECORD -- Percentage of roll-call votes on which Congressman makes his position known by voting "yea" or "nay," entering a live pair, announcing his stand, or answering the CQ Poll. Scores are lowered by votes of "present" and by general pairs -- as well as by complete silence on the issue. Votes of "present" and general pairs are not expressions of opinion. On the Record does not measure the effectiveness of a Congressman in determining the outcome of roll calls, but it does show how frequently he tells his constituents and the general public where he stands on specific issues. Even if he must be absent, a Congressman can go On the Record.

Pairs are used to cancel out the effect of absences. A Congressman who expects to be absent for a roll call pairs off with another Congressman, both of them agreeing not to vote. A live pair concerns one or several specific issues. A Congressman who would vote "yea" pairs with a Congressman who would vote "nay." Thus, both announce their stands. A general pair is a more arbitrary matching of absent Congressmen, not involving announcement of their stands.

The CQ Poll gives absent Congressmen the opportunity to announce their stands on roll calls. On all roll calls, CQ sends out ballots asking Congressmen how they would have voted if they had been present.

Voting Participation - On the Record Scores

Senate Voting Scores - 1960 and 86th Congress

1. VOTING PARTICIPATION, 1960. Percentage of 207 roll calls on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay."

2. ON THE RECORD, 1960. Percentage of 207 roll calls on which Senator made his position known by voting "yea" or "nay", entering a live pair, announcing his stand or answering the CQ poll.

3. VOTING PARTICIPATION, 86th Congress. Percentage of 422 roll calls in 1959 and 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay."

4. ON THE RECORD, 86th Congress. Percentage of 422 roll calls in 1959 and 1960 on which Senator made his position known by voting "yea" or "nay", entering a live pair, announcing his stand, or answering the CQ poll.

CQ Fact Sheet — On Eisenhower Support-Opposition

CONGRESS BACKS PRESIDENT ON 65% OF 1960 TESTS

The 1960 session of the Democratic-controlled 86th Congress backed President Eisenhower on 84 of 129 roll-call votes that presented clear-cut tests of support for his views. This margin of victory -- 65 percent -- was substantially higher than in 1959, when Congress backed him up on only 52 percent of 175 test roll calls. In 1958, by contrast, his views prevailed on 76 percent of 148 test votes.

As in 1959, two-thirds of the President's test-vote victories were provided by bipartisan majorities. Of the remaining one-third, however, 18 found a majority of Republicans supporting him and a majority of Democrats opposing him, while 11 found these majorities reversed. Bipartisan majorities also accounted for 17 of the President's 45 test-vote defeats. But of the remaining 28, all but two found a majority of Republicans supporting him, a majority of Democrats opposing him.

The 129 test votes of 1960 (listed by roll-call number below) were selected on the basis of a clear indication, as revealed in the President's own messages and public statements prior to the vote, that the President would have supported or opposed the proposal put to a vote. (For ground rules, see 1959 Almanac p. 125). The votes selected numbered less than one-half of all 1960 roll calls -- 86 of 207 in the Senate, and 43 of 93 in the House.

Details of this study show that:

- The Senate backed the President's stand on 56 of the 86 test roll calls, or 65 percent of the time (up from 50 percent in 1959).
- The House backed the President's stand on 28 of 43 test roll calls -- also 65 percent of the time (up from 55 percent in 1959).

Democrats, on the whole, supported the President just as often as they opposed him on the test votes of 1960. Their composite Support score was 44 percent, their Opposition score 44 percent. By contrast, Republicans as a group scored 61 percent in Support, 30 percent in Opposition. (See next page.)

On domestic policy matters alone, the average Democrat opposed the President more often than he supported him. On foreign policy questions, Democratic support fell off from 1959, when both the average Democrat and the average Republican supported the President about 62 percent of the time and opposed him 25 percent of the time. (In each instance, scores add to less than 100 percent because of failures to vote. For list of members absent for a day or more in 1960 because of illness, see p. 101)

- On Domestic Policy matters, Congress backed the President's stand on 53 of 93 test roll calls, or 57 percent of the time (up from 44 percent in 1959).
- On Foreign Policy matters, Congress backed the President's stand on 31 of 36 test roll calls, or 86 percent of the time (up from 76 percent in 1959).

The pattern of voting on the Eisenhower-issue roll calls in 1960 shows:

BIPARTISAN -- 72 of the 129 roll calls found Democratic and Republican majorities in agreement. The President won 55 of these votes, lost 17. Six of the losses came on the federal pay raise bill, enacted over his veto. (See Senate RC 57, 58, 82, 107, 128, 133, 135, 136, 137, 138, 146, and 167; House RC 52, 59, 60, 73 and 78.)

REPUBLICAN -- 44 of the 129 roll calls found the GOP majority supporting the President's stand while the Democratic majority opposed it. The President won 18 of these tests and lost 26. This was a marked improvement over 1959, when the President won only 25 of 95 such tests, and attested to the greater effectiveness of the "conservative coalition" in 1960.

DEMOCRATIC -- Only 13 of the 129 roll calls found a majority of Democrats supporting the President's stand while a majority of Republicans opposed it. The President won 11 of these, lost only two. (Senate RC 8, 9, 122, 172, 179; House RC 6, 22, 34, 43, 44, 46, 49, 50.)

Eisenhower Support-Opposition Score

House Foreign Policy -- 1960 & 86th Congress

1. FOREIGN POLICY SUPPORT Score, 1960. Percentage of 11 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in the field of foreign policy in 1960 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. FOREIGN POLICY OPPOSITION Score, 1960. Percentage of 11 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in the field of foreign policy in 1960 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

3. FOREIGN POLICY SUPPORT Score, 86th Congress. Percentage of 20 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in the field of foreign policy in 1959 and 1960 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

4. FOREIGN POLICY OPPOSITION Score, 86th Congress. Percentage of 20 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in the field of foreign policy in 1959 and 1960 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Headnotes

*Not eligible for all Eisenhower-issue foreign policy roll calls in 1959 or 1960; percentage score is based on number of votes for which a Representative was eligible.
--Not a Representative in 1959.

Eisenhower Support-Opposition Scores

Senate Domestic Policy -- 1960 & 86th Congress

1. DOMESTIC POLICY SUPPORT Score, 1960. Percentage of 61 Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. DOMESTIC POLICY OPPOSITION Score, 1960. Percentage of 61 Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

3. DOMESTIC POLICY SUPPORT Score, 86th Congress. Percentage of 153 Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1959 and 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

4. DOMESTIC POLICY OPPOSITION Score, 86th Congress. Percentage of 153 Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1959 and 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Headnotes

*Not eligible for all Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1959 or 1960; percentage score is based on number of votes for which Senator was eligible.

CQ Fact Sheet — On 'Conservative Coalition'

'CONSERVATIVE COALITION' APPEARED IN 22% OF ROLL CALLS

The "conservative coalition" of Republicans and Southern Democrats demonstrated its continued potency during the 1960 sessions of the Senate and the House of Representatives. (For definitions, see box)

Number of Coalition Votes

The conservative coalition appeared on 65, or 22 percent, of the 1960 session's 300 roll calls. (For coalition votes see p. 120-122.) The coalition appeared on 17 percent of the 1959 roll calls and 18 percent of the 1958 roll calls. The number of coalition roll calls for 1960, however, was inflated by a series of 10 House roll calls on a single measure, the Area Redevelopment Act.

The results for the last three years:

	Total Roll Calls	Coalition Roll Calls	Percentage of Coalition Roll Calls
Both chambers	300	65	22%
Senate	207	46	22
House	93	19	20
1959
Both Chambers	302	51	17
Senate	215	40	19
House	87	11	13
1958
Both Chambers	293	52	18
Senate	200	38	19
House	93	14	15

Victories and Defeats

The 1958 election had cut into the coalition's potential strength in Congress. In 1957 and 1958, Southern Democrats and Republicans held 311 of the 435 House seats and 71 of the 96 Senate seats. During most of the 86th Congress (with slight variations because of deaths, resignations and special elections) Southern Democrats and Republicans held 59 of the 100 Senate seats and 261 of the 437 House seats.

The percentage of coalition victories in coalition roll calls in the Senate remained relatively steady between 1959 and 1960 (from 65 percent in 1959 to 67 percent in 1960). These figures were substantially lower than the percentage of Senate coalition victories in past years: 86 percent in 1958 and 100 percent in 1957.

In the House, the percentage of coalition victories dropped sharply from 91 percent in 1959 to 35 percent in 1960. A major reason for the drop, however, was the large number of votes on the Area Redevelopment Act, a measure which appealed to many normal coalition supporters because of its offer of federal funds to aid their districts. The coalition was defeated 10 times in a series of 10 votes during parliamentary maneuvering on the Area Redevelopment Act. Of the other 9 coalition votes during the year, the coalition won 7, or 78 percent. The coalition's percentage of success in the House has dropped in the last two election years. The pattern runs: 1957, 81 percent success; 1958, 64 percent success; 1959, 91 percent success; 1960, 35 percent success (or 78 percent, excluding Area Redevelopment votes).

The coalition's won-lost record from 1957 through 1960 is shown in these tables:

Definitions

- CONSERVATIVE COALITION -- As used in this study, the term "conservative coalition" means a voting alliance of Republicans and Southern Democrats against the Northern Democrats in Congress. This meaning, rather than any philosophic definition of the "conservative" position, provides the basis for CQ's selection of coalition roll calls.

- CONSERVATIVE COALITION ROLL CALL -- Any roll call on which the majority of voting Southern Democrats and the majority of voting Republicans oppose the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats. Roll calls on which there is an even division within the ranks of voting Northern Democrats, Southern Democrats or Republicans are not included.

- The Southern states are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. The other 37 states are grouped as the North in this study.

- CONSERVATIVE COALITION SUPPORT SCORE -- Percentage of conservative coalition roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote, even if a Member announces his stand, lower his score.

- CONSERVATIVE COALITION OPPOSITION SCORE -- Percentage of conservative coalition roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Support and Opposition scores add to 100 percent only if a Member votes on all coalition roll calls.

	Coalition Roll Calls	Coalition Victories	Percentage Of Victories

Coalition Scores

CQ prepared Coalition Support and Coalition Opposition scores for each Member of Congress on the basis of the coalition votes. The scores measure the percentage of times each Member voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement and in disagreement with the position taken by the conservative coalition.

Composite Scores

The Coalition Support and Coalition Opposition scores below are a composite of the individual scores of Southern Democrats (SD), Republicans (GOP) and Northern Democrats (ND).

	1960			86th CONGRESS
	SD	GOP	ND	SD	GOP	ND
COALITION SUPPORT
Both Chambers	61%	68%	11%	66%	72%	13%
Senate	69	65	17	66	68	17
House	57	70	7	66	75	10
COALITION OPPOSITION
Both Chambers	26	22	75	23	19	72
Senate	21	23	65	24	21	60
House	29	21	81	23	18	80

The figures above indicate that during the 86th Congress, the average Republican Senator and the average Southern Democratic Senator backed the coalition with about equal consistency (68 and 66 percent respectively), while the average Republican Representative tended to support the coalition with slightly more frequency than the average Southern Democratic Representative (75 and 66 percent respectively).

Regional Scores

The parties' composite Coalition Support scores, by region, for 1960:

	East	West	South	Midwest
DEMOCRATS
Both Chambers	11%	14%	61%	8%
Senate	22	20	69	7
House	7	5	57	9
REPUBLICANS
Both Chambers	58%	77%	70%	75%
Senate	60	66	52	73
House	57	84	79	76

The parties' composite Coalition Opposition scores, by region, for 1960:

DEMOCRATS
Both Chambers	75%	71%	26%	79%
Senate	60	63	21	73
House	80	82	29	82
REPUBLICANS
Both Chambers	33%	14%	24%	14%
Senate	34	21	38	11
House	32	10	16	16

The figures above indicate that:

- Among Democrats, Southerners were, of course, the most consistent backers of the conservative coalition. Democrats from all other sections tended to oppose the coalition.
- Among Republicans, there was general support for the coalition. The weakest support among Republican House Members was from the East, and among Republican Senators, from the East and the South. The only Republican Senators from the South were John Sherman Cooper and Thruston B. Morton of Kentucky.

Coalition Issues

Listed below are the major issues, mostly domestic welfare questions, on which the conservative coalition voted in 1960. The roll call (RC) numbers refer to the list of roll calls beginning on the next page.

SENATE

In the Senate, the coalition took these positions:

Campaign Spending: Voted against an amendment to require reports on campaign contributions and spending in primary elections; the coalition lost (RC 1).

Aid to Education: Defeated an amendment to authorize $1.1 billion per year for an indefinite period for school construction and teachers' salaries and nailed down the victory with the help of a tie-breaking vote by Vice President Nixon (RC 10,11).

Civil Rights: Defeated a motion to invoke cloture on the filibuster (RC 34). Defeated two attempts to add Part III, empowering the Attorney General to seek injunctions to protect any civil right (RC 35, 59). On four votes, defeated attempts to add alternatives to the Administration plan for court-appointed voting referees or to ease the process for Negroes seeking registration from the referees (RC 42, 44, 60, 61). Defeated an amendment to establish a Permanent Commission on Equal Job Opportunity (RC 57). Defeated an amendment that provided technical assistance to areas desegregating their schools and endorsed the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision (RC 58). Won all nine votes.

Depressed Areas: Voted against a bill authorizing $251 million in federal loans and grants for the relief of economically depressed rural and industrial areas and against overriding the President's veto of the bill; lost on the first, won on the second (RC 98, 103).

Housing: Voted against an amendment to authorize construction of an additional 37,000 public housing units and against one to authorize 25,000 units; won on the first, lost on the second (RC 125, 126).

Taxes: Defeated an attempt to repeal the 10 percent passenger transportation tax (RC 141). Voted against repeal of the 4 percent tax credit on dividend income; lost (RC 142). Defeated establishment of a 20 percent withholding tax on income from interest and dividends (RC 144). Voted against an amendment to prohibit tax deductions for business entertainment expenses, limit business gift deductions and prohibit deduction of club dues and initiation fees; lost (RC 145). Defeated reduction of oil depletion allowance (RC 147). Won three, lost two.

Minimum Wage: Voted for four amendments to reduce the number of new workers to be covered and lower the proposed minimum wage; lost on all four (RC 179, 182, 183, 184). Voted against passage of the bill, raising the minimum wage to $1.25 and extending coverage to about 4 million workers; lost (RC 187).

Medical Aid to the Aged: Defeated an amendment to provide medical benefits for all Social Security retirees 68 and over, to be financed by Social Security taxes; won (RC 192).

HOUSE

In the House, the coalition took these positions:

Urban Renewal: Voted against appropriation of $50 million for urban renewal grants; won (RC 6).

Depressed Areas: Voted against passage of a bill authorizing $251 million in federal loans and grants to economically depressed areas; lost (RC 36).

Aid to Education: Voted for a substitute measure in an attempt to kill the bill authorizing $325 million a year for four years for school construction grants and against passage; lost on both (RC 50, 53).

Patents: Voted to relinquish Government ownership of patents under NASA research contracts; won (RC 58).

Minimum Wage: Voted to cut the proposed minimum wage raise and extension of coverage; won (RC 75).

65 VOTES IN 1960 WHICH IDENTIFY THE 'CONSERVATIVE COALITION'

The following are the Senate and House votes for 1960 on which a majority of voting Southern Democrats joined a majority of voting Republicans to oppose the position taken by a majority of voting Northern Democrats, thus forming the "Conservative Coalition" which is the subject of this study. For a listing of the coalition votes during 1959, see 1959 Almanac, p. 136, those roll-call votes with an asterisk (*).

The roll calls are listed in their chronological order by the Congressional Quarterly roll call number.

Note that 10 of the 19 House coalition votes for 1960 were cast May 4, during parliamentary maneuvering on a single measure, the Area Redevelopment Act.

Senate Roll Calls (46)

RC 1 -- S 2436. Prevent corrupt practices in federal elections by limiting campaign funds and requiring certain reports. Hennings (D Mo.) and Keating (R N.Y.) amendment to require reports on campaign contributions and spending for candidates and committees in primary elections (including preferential primaries) and conventions or caucuses. Agreed to 50-39 (SD 4-17; ND 30-4; R 16-18), Jan. 19, 1960. The President did not take a position on the amendment; a "nay" was a vote supporting the coalition's position.

RC 2 -- S 2436. Hennings (D Mo.) amendment to require political committees operating within one state to report contributions and expenditures in federal elections which exceed $2,500 annually. Agreed to 53-37 (SD 5-16; ND 34-2; R 14-19), Jan. 20, 1960. The President did not take a position on the amendment. A "nay" was a vote supporting the coalition's position.

RC 5 -- S J Res 39. Amend the Constitution to authorize Governors to fill temporary vacancies in the House of Representatives under emergency conditions. Holland (D Fla.) motion to lay on the table a Javits (R N.Y.) amendment, in the nature of a substitute for S J Res 39, to prohibit use of the poll tax or property requirements as qualifications for voting in federal elections through statute rather than constitutional amendment. Tabling motion agreed to 50-37 (SD 21-1; ND 11-21; R 18-15), Feb. 2, 1960. The President did not take a position on the motion. A "yea" was a vote supporting the coalition's position.

RC 10 -- S 8. Emergency Federal Assistance for School Construction. Clark (D Pa.) amendment to Committee bill to authorize $25 per school-age-child, or $1.1 billion, per year for an indefinite period for school construction and teachers' salaries. Conservative Support-Opposition Scores

Senate Conservative Coalition - 1960 and 86th Congress

The chart below shows how often individual Senators voted "with" and "against" the conservative coalition. The figures are based on Senate roll calls on which the majority of voting Republicans and the majority of voting Southern Democrats, forming a conservative coalition, opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats.

1. CONSERVATIVE COALITION SUPPORT, 1960. Percentage of 46 conservative coalition roll calls on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

CONSERVATIVE COALITION 1960

Democrats in this type; Republicans in Italics

Conservative Support-Opposition Scores

House Conservative Coalition - 1960 and 86th Congress

The chart below shows how often individual Representatives voted "with" and "against" the conservative coalition. The figures are based on House roll calls on which the majority of voting Republicans and the majority of voting Southern Democrats, forming a conservative coalition, opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats.

1. CONSERVATIVE COALITION SUPPORT, 1960. Percentage of 19 conservative coalition roll calls on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. CONSERVATIVE COALITION OPPOSITION, 1960. Percentage of 19 conservative coalition roll calls on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

3. CONSERVATIVE COALITION SUPPORT, 86th Congress. Percentage of 30 conservative coalition roll calls on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

4. CONSERVATIVE COALITION OPPOSITION, 86th Congress. Percentage of 30 conservative coalition roll calls on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

*Not eligible for all coalition roll calls during the period of the study.
-Not a Member of the House during the period of the study.

EXTENT OF NORTH-SOUTH DEMOCRATIC SPLIT ANALYZED

How deep is the division within the Democratic party? On what issues do Northern and Southern Democrats disagree?

In an effort to answer those questions, Congressional Quarterly since 1957 has analyzed the roll-call votes on which Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by Northern Democrats. This study, the fourth in the series, covers the 1960 session of Congress. (For 1957, 1958 and 1959 studies, see 1957 Almanac p. 813; 1958 Almanac p. 764; and 1959 Almanac p. 135. For an analysis of "conservative coalition" votes in which a majority of voting Southern Democrats joined a majority of voting Republicans against the position of a majority of voting Northern Democrats, see this volume p. 117)

Number of Splits

The majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats on 119, or 40 percent, of the 1960 session's 300 roll calls.

Northern and Southern Democrats split on 27 percent of the 1959 roll calls, 29 percent of the 1958 roll calls and 31 percent of the 1957 roll calls. The large number of Senate votes on civil rights and House votes on area redevelopment legislation tended to increase the percentage of North-South Democratic split votes in 1960.

For this survey, Congressional Quarterly grouped 13 states as the South -- Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. The other 37 states were grouped as the North.

In 1960, the Southern states had 24 Democratic Senators and 111 Democratic Representatives; the Northern states had 41 Democratic Senators and 169 Democratic Representatives.

To determine the number of roll calls on which there were North-South splits in the Democratic party, CQ checked all 1960 roll calls to see when the majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats. Roll calls on which either Northern or Southern Democrats divided evenly were not counted as "splits".

The results are shown in this table:

1960	Total Roll Calls	North-South Democratic Splits	Percentage of Splits
Both Chambers	300	119	40%
Senate	207	85	41
House	93	34	37

The roll calls on which the Democrats split, and the breakdown of votes on each, are listed on the next page.

The table below shows how the number and percentage of splits in both chambers in 1960 compare with the previous three years.

Year	Total Roll Calls	North-South Democratic Splits	Percentage of Splits
1957	207	64	31

Of the 119 roll calls in 1960 on which the North-South Democratic split occurred, the Southern majority was on the winning side 41 times -- 33 in the Senate and eight in the House. All but three of the Southern Democratic victories resulted from a "coalition" with a majority of voting Republicans. The remaining three resulted from splits in the Republican and Northern Democratic votes in which the minorities were sufficiently large to form a winning margin when combined with the vote of the Southern Democrats. (See Senate RC 107, 122, House RC 93.

More important than the number of roll calls on which Northern and Southern Democrats differed are the issues that divided them. In 1960, as in the previous three years, splits showed differences between the two groups on many issues in addition to the hotly debated civil rights question.

Issues That Divide Democrats

Civil rights legislation was the most prominent point of contention between Northern and Southern Democrats during 1960. The two wings of the party split on 27 Senate roll-call votes and six House roll-call votes relating to civil rights. (Senate roll calls 16, 21, 23-7, 31, 34-5, 42, 44-5, 54, 56-66, 68-9; House roll calls 11, 13-15, 19, 49)

Foreign aid figured in 18 of the 119 splits. The majority of Southern Democrats in both houses voted against both authorization and appropriation bills for the Mutual Security Program, and in favor of cuts in the program. A majority of Southern Democrats in the House voted against U.S. participation in the International Development Assn. (Senate RC 75, 82-3, 87, 89-90, 92, 110, 189, 195, 198; House RC 20, 40, 61-2, 72, 92-3)

Depressed areas legislation caused two North-South Democratic splits in the Senate and ten such splits in the House. A majority of Southern Democrats in both House and Senate voted against the $251 million measure which was vetoed by the President. (Senate RC 98, 103; House RC 26-34, 36)

Taxes figured in nine of the roll-call differences. Southern House Democrats voted for a closed rule, barring the introduction of amendments planned by Northern Democrats, to legislation extending the current corporate income tax rate, extending certain excise tax rates and taxes on local telephone and passenger transportation, and temporarily increasing the national debt. After the closed rule and the bill itself had been adopted in the House, Southern Democrats in the Senate opposed unsuccessful amendments, proposed by Northern Democrats, to reduce depletion allowances on oil and gas products and to establish a withholding tax on income from interest and dividends. They also opposed amendments, which were approved, to repeal the 4 percent tax credit on dividend income and to curtail tax deductions for business entertainment. After a House-Senate conference committee had eliminated the Senate-approved amendments from the bill, Southern Democrats voted for the bill's final passage in opposition to the position of a majority of Northern Democrats. (Senate RC 139, 141-2, 144-7, 160; House RC 145)

Minimum wage legislation was responsible for North-South Democratic splits on eight roll-call votes. Southern Senators and Representatives voted for a new minimum wage of $1.15 or lower (as opposed to the $1.25 figure favored by Northern Democrats), and for a minimum extension of coverage. (Senate RC 178-9, 182-4, 186-7; House RC 75)

Aid to education provoked seven splits as Southern Democrats opposed federal aid, either for school construction or for teachers' salaries. (Senate RC 10-11, 13; House RC 49-51, 53)

Housing was the issue in four North-South splits. Southern Democratic Senators opposed increased public housing authorizations, while Southern Democratic Representatives voted against urban renewal and slum clearance grants. (Senate RC 125-7; House RC 6)

Farm price supports caused three North-South splits in the Senate as Southerners backed reduced price supports for wheat. (Senate RC 117, 121-2)

'Clean elections' legislation caused three North-South splits in the Senate. Southerners resisted increased federal supervision of campaign expenditures. (Senate RC 1-3)

Medical care for the aged caused one North-South split in the Senate as Southern Senators voted against the proposal to give Social Security retirees medical benefits financed through an increased Social Security payroll tax. (Senate RC 192)

Individual Stands

The score chart shows how often each individual Southern Democrat voted with and against the Southern position on the party-splitting issues.

Most 'Southern' Senators -- The Southern Democratic Senators who voted most frequently with the majority of Southerners on the 85 party-splitting issues in 1960 were: John Stennis (Miss.) 78; Sam J. Ervin Jr. (N.C.) 76; John L. McClellan (Ark.) 73; Harry Flood Byrd (Va.)72; Strom Thurmond (S.C.) 72; and Allen J. Ellender (La.) 72.

Least 'Southern' Senators -- The Southern Democratic Senators who voted most frequently against the majority of Southerners on the 85 party-splitting issues in 1960 were: A.S. Mike Monroney (Okla.) 63; Albert Gore (Tenn.) 59; Ralph W. Yarborough (Texas) 57; Lyndon B. Johnson (Texas) 55; Estes Kefauver (Tenn.) 39; and Robert S. Kerr (Okla.) 32.

Most 'Southern' Representatives -- Six Southern Democratic Representatives voted with the majority of Southerners on 33 of the 34 party-splitting issues in 1960: Watkins M. Abbitt (Va.); W.J. Bryan Dorn (S.C.); Robert T. Ashmore (S.C.); Thomas G. Abernethy (Miss.); John James Flynt Jr. (Ga.); and James A. Haley (Fla.).

Least 'Southern' Representatives -- The Southern Representatives who voted most frequently against the majority of Southerners on the 34 party-splitting issues in 1960 were: Frank W. Burke (Ky.) 28; Carl D. Perkins (Ky.) 26; Carl Albert (Okla.) 25; Homer Thornberry (Texas) 24; Frank A. Stubblefield (Ky.) 24; and William H. Natcher (Ky.) 24.

Roll Calls on Which Northern, Southern Democrats Split

Following is a partial list of the 119 Senate and House roll calls in 1960 on which the majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats. This list contains 54 of the 119 votes in this category. The other 65 votes fitting the definition are listed in the Conservative Coalition analysis. (See p. 117)

In this breakdown, Southern Democrats are Members from Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia; Northern Democrats come from the other 37 states.

The roll calls are listed in their chronological order by Congressional Quarterly roll call (RC) number.

For each roll call, the total vote is broken down into three groups: Southern Democrats (SD), Northern Democrats (ND) and Republicans (R).

Senate Roll Calls

RC 3 -- S 2436. Federal Elections Act of 1960, limiting campaign funds and requiring certain reports. Passage of the bill. Passed 59-22 (SD 6-15; ND 32-0; R 21-7), Jan. 25, 1960. The President did not take a position on the bill.

RC 4 -- S J Res 39. Amend the Constitution to authorize Governors to fill temporary vacancies in the House of Representatives under emergency conditions. Holland (D Fla.) amendment to prohibit the use of the poll tax or property requirements as qualifications for voting in federal elections. Agreed to 72-16 (SD 9-13; ND 34-0; R 29-3), Feb. 2, 1960. The President had not yet taken a position on the amendment, but later endorsed it.

RC 6 -- S J Res 39. Keating (R N.Y.) amendment to authorize residents of the District of Columbia to elect Delegates to the House of Representatives and vote in Presidential elections; and to divide S J Res 39 into three separate constitutional amendments to submit to the states. Agreed to 63-25 (SD 7-14; ND 30-4; R 26-7), Feb. 2, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

RC 7 -- S J Res 39. Passage of the joint resolution (two-thirds majority required). Passed 70-18 (SD 9-12; ND 34-0; R 27-6), Feb. 2, 1960. (59 "yeas" were required). The President had not yet taken a position on the resolution, but later endorsed it.

RC 16 -- Civil Rights Proposals. Russell (D Ga.) motion to postpone further consideration of civil rights proposals until Feb. 23, 1960. Rejected 28-61 (SD 22-2; ND 2-32; R 4-27), Feb. 16, 1960. The President did not take a position on the motion.

RC 21 -- Civil Rights Proposals. Morse (D Ore.) test motion that the Senate adjourn at 8 p.m. on March 1. Rejected 6-55

Stands of Individual Southern Democrats

The chart below shows how often individual Southern Democrats voted "with" and "against" the Southern position on party-splitting issues. The first two columns are based on the 85 Senate roll calls and the 34 House roll calls on which the majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats in 1960. The last two columns combine the 1960 figures with the votes on 63 similar Senate roll calls and 20 similar House roll calls in 1959. (For list of 1960 roll calls, see preceding page. For 1959 roll calls, see 1959 Almanac p. 138.)

- COLUMN 1 gives the number of roll calls on which the Member voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the majority of voting Southern Democrats in 1960.
- COLUMN 2 gives the number of roll calls on which the member voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the majority of voting Southern Democrats in 1960.
- COLUMN 3 gives the number of roll calls on which the Member voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the majority of voting Southern Democrats in the 86th Congress.
- COLUMN 4 gives the number of roll calls on which the member voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the majority of voting Southern Democrats in the 86th Congress.

Failure to vote kept the figures for most Senators and Representatives below the maximum possible.

(SD 6-5, ND 0-23; R 0-27), March 1, 1960. The President did not take a position on the motion.

RC 23 -- Civil Rights Proposals. Johnson (D Texas) motion to direct the Sergeant at Arms to request attendance of absent Senators in order to produce a quorum. Agreed to 62-7 (SD 5-6; ND 30-1; R 27-0), March 2, 1960. The President did not take a position on the motion.

RC 24 -- Civil Rights Proposals. Johnson (D Texas) motion to table an Ellender (D La.) motion that the Senate adjourn until noon on March 2. Agreed to 64-6 (SD 5-6; ND 31-0; R 28-0), March 2, 1960. The President did not take a position on the motion.

RC 25 -- Civil Rights Proposals. Johnson (D Texas) motion to table Ervin (D N.C.) motion that the Senate adjourn until noon the following day. Agreed to 65-7 (SD 5-7; ND 31-0; R 29-0), March 2, 1960. The President did not take a position on the motion.

RC 26 -- Civil Rights Proposals. Johnson (D Texas) motion to table Long (D La.) amendment specifying that the Dirksen (R Ill.) amendment on obstruction of courts' school desegregation orders could not be interpreted as preventing freedom of speech to advocate separation of the races. Tabling motion agreed to 64-8 (SD 3-8; ND 31-0; R 30-0), March 2, 1960. The President did not take a position on the motion.

CQ Fact Sheet On Federal Role

VOTE STUDY SHOWS PARTIES SPLIT ON FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY

The role of the Federal Government is one of the few constants of American political controversy. From the beginnings of the Republic down to the present, public issues ranging from slavery to subsidies have found men divided on the question of federal responsibility and power. It was perhaps the central question posed in the 1960 electoral campaign.

That being so, Congressional Quarterly undertook a study of roll-call voting in the 86th Congress, in an attempt to provide both a qualitative and quantitative yardstick by which to measure the positions of Members with respect to the nature, scope, and extent of the federal role. Such an analysis was deemed to be potentially more meaningful and less open to misinterpretation than CQ's former study of Economy Support. (1959 Almanac, p. 147)

TEST VOTES

A total of 602 questions were put to a roll-call vote in 1959 and 1960 -- 422 in the Senate and 180 in the House. Few of the questions were simple although many, in practice, were pro forma. The issues raised required anywhere from one roll call to 45 (in the case of civil rights) to be resolved. Rarely was the alternative presented as one of doing something or nothing.

It was clear, nevertheless, that a number of questions put to a record vote presented a choice between a larger and a smaller federal role. Sometimes the alternative lay between maintaining and enlarging an existing program; sometimes between initiating a smaller or a larger program; sometimes between maintaining the status quo and diminishing the federal role.

For its Federal Role study, CQ selected 14 Senate roll calls (eight in 1959, six in 1960) and 12 House roll calls (seven in 1959, five in 1960) that offered a choice, as described above, between a larger and a smaller federal role. While additional votes might have been selected, it was decided to include no more than one roll call per "issue." Each of the test votes selected is described in detail on following pages.

Most, but not all, of the test votes involved the question of federal expenditure. These included roll calls bearing on such major legislative controversies as federal aid to housing, airports, depressed areas, and schools, as well as lesser disputes concerning subsidies for the fishing industry and lead and zinc producers. Some of the test votes involved no question of money, but rather federal-state relations. This was the case with roll calls dealing with the doctrine of federal preemption, the handling of labor disputes, and the extent of federal authority to prevent the denial of civil rights.

No attempt was made to select votes of equal importance, or to weight those selected to reflect their relative importance. Thus the quantitative results of the analysis, set forth below, are only indicative of a broad situation; to describe accurately the position taken by an individual Member respecting the federal role, account must be taken of his position on each of the test votes.

All but two of these 26 roll calls, incidentally, found a majority of Democrats opposing a majority of Republicans; party loyalty may thus have been an important factor in determining the positions taken by some Members on one or more of the test votes.

SUPPORT SCORES

To derive scores for each Member, CQ determined, for each of the test votes, whether a "yea" or "nay" constituted support for a larger federal role or for a smaller federal role, relative to the alternative presented. (This "key" is noted following the description of each roll call.) Members were then credited with support for a larger or smaller role, for each of the test votes. To achieve maximum coverage, announced stands as well as "yea" and "nay" votes were counted. These were then added to derive the number of times each Member supported a smaller and/or larger role, and the numbers were translated into percentages. Both number and percentage scores for each Member are shown on the charts appearing on following pages.

Averaging of these individual scores showed that Democrats, as a whole, supported a larger federal role almost four times as often as Republicans as a group. Conversely, Republicans supported a smaller federal role more than three times as often as Democrats. The overall percentage figures were as follows:

	Democrats	Republicans
LARGER FEDERAL ROLE
Both chambers	74%	19%
Senate	74	27
House	74	17
SMALLER FEDERAL ROLE
Both chambers	23%	78%
Senate	25	71
House	23	80

SENATE SCORES

These averages appear to be less significant, however, when the scores of individual Members are examined. In the Senate, for example, 16 Democrats supported a larger federal role (or opposed a smaller one) on each of the 14 test votes; altogether, 48 of the Senate's 66 Democrats (as of adjournment) supported a larger federal role or opposed a smaller one on at least 11 of the 14 test votes. Of the remaining 18 Democrats, only three supported a smaller federal role or opposed a larger one on each of the test votes.

Conversely, no GOP Senator supported a larger federal role on all of the test votes; only nine of the 34 did so on as many as one-half of the votes. Of the remaining 25 Republicans, five failed to support a larger federal role even once; none did so more than five times in 14 chances.

Senate Democrats scored as follows:

Supported a larger federal role, or opposed a smaller one, on all 14 test votes (100 percent): Bartlett (Alaska), Carroll (Colo.), Hartke (Ind.), Kennedy (Mass.), Hart (Mich.), McNamara (Mich.), Humphrey (Minn.), McCarthy (Minn.), Hennings (Mo.), Symington (Mo.), Burdick (N.D.), Morse (Ore.), Moss (Utah), Jackson (Wash.), Magnuson (Wash.), and Randolph (W.Va.). (Burdick's score based on both House and Senate votes.)

Supported a larger federal role on 13 of the 14 test votes (93 percent): Gruening (Alaska), Church (Idaho), Mansfield (Mont.), Cannon (Nev.), Williams (N.J.), Young (Ohio), Clark (Pa.), Green (R.I.), Johnson (Texas), Yarborough (Texas), Proxmire (Wis.), and McGee (Wyo.).

Supported a larger federal role on 12 of the 14 test votes (86 percent): Hill (Ala.), Sparkman (Ala.), Engle (Calif.), Dodd (Conn.), Murray (Mont.), Bible (Nev.), Anderson (N.M.), Pastore (R.I.), Kefauver (Tenn.), Byrd (W.Va.), O'Mahoney (Wyo.), and Long (Hawaii).

Supported a larger federal role on 11 of the 14 test votes (79 percent): Hayden (Ariz.), Douglas (Ill.), Muskie (Maine), Chavez (N.M.), Kerr (Okla.), Monroney (Okla.), Johnston (S.C.), and Gore (Tenn.).

Supported a larger federal role on nine or fewer of the 14 test votes: 64 percent -- Long (La.); 57 percent -- Fulbright (Ark.); 50 percent -- Lusk (Ore.); 43 percent -- Ellender (La.), Smathers (Fla.); 36 percent -- Jordan (N.C.), Ervin (N.C.); 21 percent -- Lausche (Ohio), Eastland (Miss.), Talmadge (Ga.), Russell (Ga.); 14 percent -- Stennis (Miss.), Holland (Fla.), Frear (Del.), McClellan (Ark.); 0 percent -- Robertson (Va.), Byrd (Va.), and Thurmond (S.C.).

Senate Republicans scored as follows:

Supported a larger federal role on seven or more of the 14 test votes: 64 percent -- Smith (Maine), Javits (N.Y.); 57 percent -- Cooper (Ky.), Case (N.J.), Wiley (Wis.); 50 percent -- Kuchel (Calif.), Fong (Hawaii), Young (N.D.), Aiken (Vt.).

Supported a larger federal role on five or fewer of the 14 test votes: 36 percent -- Allott (Colo.), Keating (N.Y.), Scott (Pa.), Mundt (S.D.); 29 percent -- Case (S.D.), Prouty (Vt.); 21 percent -- Beall (Md.), Saltonstall (Mass.); 14 percent -- Dworshak (Idaho), Capehart (Ind.), Martin (Iowa), Carlson (Kan.), Schoeppel (Kan.), Cotton (N.H.); 7 percent -- Bush (Conn.), Butler (Md.), Curtis (Neb.), Hruska (Neb.), Bridges (N.H.), Bennett (Utah); 0 percent -- Goldwater (Ariz.), Williams (Del.), Dirksen (Ill.), Hickenlooper (Iowa), and Morton (Ky.)

As these scores show, Senators grouped at both ends of the test-vote spectrum -- the 16 Democrats who scored 100 percent, and the three Democrats and five Republicans who scored 0 percent -- together comprise only one-quarter of the Senate membership. Some indication of the variety of positions taken by the remaining 76 Senators is shown by a study of those Members whose scores show a single "deviation" from either extreme.

Five separate issues accounted for the 93 percent score of 12 Democrats. A position supporting a smaller federal role or opposing a larger role was taken on the civil rights test by Sens. Mansfield, Johnson, Yarborough, and McGee; on price supports by Gruening, Cannon, and Williams; on lead-zinc subsidies by Green and Clark; on fishing vessel subsidies by Young and Proxmire; on veterans' benefits by Church.

Similarly, four separate issues accounted for the 7 percent score of six Republicans. A position supporting a larger federal role or opposing a smaller one was taken on fishing vessel subsidies by Sens. Butler and Bridges; on price supports by Curtis and Hruska; on lead-zinc subsidies by Bennett; on civil rights by Bush. Regional considerations apparently played a major part in determining most of these "deviations." Similar influences may be found in the test-vote position of the other Members.

HOUSE SCORES

As in the Senate, the "100-percenters" comprised only one-quarter of the entire House membership. Of the 280 Democrats seated at adjournment, 63 supported a larger federal role or opposed a smaller one on each of the 12 test votes. Of 152 Republicans, 48 took up the opposing position just as consistently.

No Democrat scored 0 percent; no Republican scored 100 percent in support of a larger federal role. High marks for "deviation" went to five Virginia Democrats (Abbitt, Gary, Harrison, Smith, and Tuck) who supported a smaller federal role or opposed a larger one on all but one of the 12 test votes -- that dealing with direct housing loans to veterans. Among Republicans, the late Rep. Edith Nourse Rogers (Mass.) supported a larger federal role on all but two of the test votes. Four other GOP Members did so on all but three of the 12 votes, scoring 75 percent: Bennett (Mich.), Fulton and Corbett (Pa.) and O'Konski (Wis.).

Democrats who scored 100 percent were as follows: Rivers (Alaska); Johnson, McFall, Saund, Sheppard, Sisk, Doyle, Holifield, Kasem, King, and Roosevelt (Calif.); Aspinall and Rogers (Colo.); Bowles (Conn.); Inouye (Hawaii); Pfost (Idaho); Gray, Mack, Price, Libonati, O'Brien, and O'Hara (Ill.); Brademas, Hogan, and Madden (Ind.); Coad, Smith, and Wolf (Iowa); George and Hargis (Kan.); Burke (Ky.); Oliver (Maine); Foley (Md.); McCormack (Mass.); Diggs, Dingell, Griffiths, and Lesinski (Mich.); Blatnik and Karth (Minn.); Bolling, Randall, Karsten, and Sullivan (Mo.); Metcalf (Mont.); Anfuso, Healey, Keogh, Multer, and Santangelo (N.Y.); Burdick (N.D.); Ullman (Ore.); Flood, Holland, and Morgan (Pa.); McGovern (S.D.); Bailey, Kee, and Slack (W.Va.); Flynn, Kastenmeier, Reuss, and Zablocki (Wis.).

Republicans who scored 0 percent were as follows: Hiestand, Lipscomb, McDonough, and Smith (Calif.); Budge (Idaho); Chiperfield, Hoffman, Michel, Simpson, and Springer (Ill.); Hoeven (Iowa); Cederberg, Ford, and Johansen (Mich.); Quie and Nelsen (Minn.); Becker, Derounian, Kilburn, Miller, Ostertag, Goodell, Robison, St. George, Wharton, Bosch, and Ray (N.Y.); Jonas (N.C.); Short (N.D.); Betts, Bow, Brown, Devine, Henderson, Hess, McCulloch, Minshall, Schenck, and Scherer (Ohio); Schneebeli, Dague, and Mumma (Pa.); Alger (Texas); Poff (Va.); Byrnes, Laird, and Van Pelt (Wis.); and Thomson (Wyo.).

As in the Senate, Southerners accounted for the lowest scores in support of a larger federal role and the highest scores in support of a smaller federal role, among Democrats. Ranking after the five Virginians named above were the following: 83 percent support for a smaller role -- Downing (Va.), Murray (Tenn.), Williams (Miss.), Forrester (Ga.), Haley (Fla.), and Burleson (Texas); 75 percent support for a smaller role -- Davis and Flynt (Ga.), Herlong (Fla.), McSween (La.), Winstead (Miss.), and Dowdy (Texas).

TEST VOTES ON 'FEDERAL ROLE' IN 86TH CONGRESS

Following are brief descriptions of the 14 Senate and 12 House roll calls in 1959 and 1960 selected by CQ for its Federal Role study. Each one is further identified by its CQ Roll Call (RC) number. All votes, which are listed in chronological order, appear in the 1959 Almanac on the designated pages or in this volume.

SENATE ROLL CALLS

1. Urban Renewal. President Eisenhower proposed in 1959 that the federal share of net costs under the urban renewal program be reduced from two-thirds to one-half, and that the program be continued for six years at the rate of $250 million in grants for each of the first three years and $200 million a year thereafter. But Senate Democrats reported a bill authorizing $350 million a year for six years and retaining the current cost-sharing formula. A move to substitute the President's proposals was rejected, 34-56 (D 14-47; R 20-9), Feb. 5, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 9, 1959 Almanac, p. 399)

2. Airports. The President urged an "orderly withdrawal" of federal grants for airport construction by 1964. But Democrats reported a bill increasing the existing authorization of $63 million to $100 million a year for four years. Before passing the measure, the Senate rejected a substitute continuing the $63-million figure for four years, 35-53 (D 7-51; R 28-2), Feb. 6, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 13, p. 400)

3. Depressed Areas. Senate Democrats reported a bill authorizing $390 million in federal loans and grants to help redevelop economically depressed rural and industrial areas. But the President wanted the program held to $53 million for loans to industrial areas only. Offered as a substitute, the smaller program was rejected, 43-52 (D 14-47; R 29-5), March 23, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 25, p. 402)

4. Labor Relations. Among the President's proposals for labor "reform" legislation was one to amend the Taft-Hartley Act so as to permit state labor relations agencies or state courts to handle labor disputes declined by the National Labor Relations Board -- the so-called "no man's land" cases. Opposed by organized labor on grounds it would deprive small unions of the protections of federal labor law, the amendment was rejected by the Senate, 39-52 (D 16-43; R 23-9), April 23, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 38, p. 405)

5. Veterans Benefits. Senate Democrats supported, and the President opposed, a proposal to extend home loan, education and other benefits offered to veterans of World War II and later the Korean war under GI bills, to peacetime veterans who entered service after Jan. 31, 1955 and before July 1, 1963. The new GI bill passed the Senate, 57-31 (D 48-10; R 9-21), July 21, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 130, p. 427)

6. Youth Corps. Senate Democrats likewise supported, and the President opposed, a plan to create a 150,000-member federal Youth Conservation Corps patterned after the Civilian Conservation Corps of the New Deal era, to work on federal and state conservation projects at an estimated cost of $375 million a year. The Senate passed the bill, 47-45 (D 45-15; R 2-30), Aug. 13, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 153, p. 433)

7. Water Pollution. As with the airports program, the President urged Congress to terminate a program of federal grants to communities for construction of sewage-disposal plants, authorized at $50 million a year. But the Senate passed a bill increasing the authorization to $80 million a year, 61-27 (D 48-8; R 13-19), Sept. 9, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 207, p. 444)

8. Fishing Vessels. In an effort to rehabilitate the domestic fishing industry, the Senate passed (over Administration opposition) a bill authorizing $15 million in federal subsidies over three years to help pay the difference between higher U.S. ship construction costs and lower foreign costs. The measure passed 55-30 (D 40-16; R 15-14), Sept. 11, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 209, p. 445)

9. School Aid. The long struggle to enact a general aid-to-education bill was resumed in 1960 when the Senate, rejecting Administration proposals for a bond-subsidy approach, passed a bill authorizing $1.8 billion in federal grants to the states over two years, to be used for school construction or teachers' salaries. The bill passed 51-34 (D 42-12; R 9-22), Feb. 4, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 15, this volume.)

10. Civil Rights. A key "liberal" proposal to strengthen federal power to prevent the denial of civil rights at the state and local level was to give the Attorney General authority to seek injunctions to protect any civil right -- the so-called Part III of the Administration's 1957 bill which was not enacted. When offered as an amendment to the 1960 voting rights bill, the provision was tabled (killed) by a vote of 55-38 (D 34-28; R 21-10), March 10, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 35.)

11. Wheat. When the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee reported a bill raising price supports for wheat from 75 percent of parity to 80 percent, in return for a 20 percent cut in wheat acreage, the Senate agreed to an amendment cutting price supports to 65 percent by 1963. Later rejected on reconsideration, the amendment was first agreed to, 45-41 (D 25-28; R 20-13), June 9, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 117.)

12. Minimum Wage. With Democrats backing a bill to increase the minimum wage from $1 per hour to $1.25 and to extend protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act to an additional 5 million workers, an amendment to restrict new coverage to about 280,000 additional workers was rejected, 39-56 (D 19-44; R 20-12), Aug. 17, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 179.)

13. Lead-Zinc Mines. Overriding arguments that it would set a precedent for federal responsibility to rescue failing industries, the Senate passed a bill (later vetoed) authorizing subsidies to small lead and zinc producers, to cover the difference between a "stabilization price" and a lower market price. The measure passed 59-28

(D 48-10; R 11-18), Aug. 19, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 188.)

14. Medical Care. When the Finance Committee reported a bill authorizing federal grants to the states to assist needy persons over 65 to pay the costs of medical care, Democrats moved to add provisions extending medical benefits to all Social Security retirees 68 and over, regardless of need, and raising payroll taxes to finance the program. But the amendment was rejected, 44-51 (D 43-19; R 1-32), Aug. 23, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 192.)

HOUSE ROLL CALLS

1. Veterans Loans. First major bill to reach the House in 1959 was an "emergency" measure raising the interest rate ceiling on GI housing loans (at Administration request) and authorizing an additional $300 million for direct housing loans to veterans (over Administration protest). A motion to recommit the bill to committee, with instructions to delete the provision for additional loan authority, was rejected, 123-277 (D 2-257; R 121-20), Feb. 4, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 2, 1959 Almanac, p. 348)

2. Airports. House Democrats declined either to endorse an "orderly withdrawal" of federal grants for airport construction, as the President wanted, or to authorize an increase in grants, as had the Senate. Instead they proposed extending the existing program for four years, at $63 million a year, and providing a $45 million emergency fund in addition, for a total of $297 million. Before passing the bill, the House rejected an amendment trimming $100 million from the bill (by cutting in half the authorizations for the last three years), by a vote of 194-214 (D 57-209; R 137-5), March 19, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 9, p. 352)

3. Housing. An omnibus housing bill reported to the House authorized, among other things, $1.5 billion for urban renewal grants over three years and federal subsidies for an additional 140,000 units of public housing. Opponents moved to recommit the bill with instructions to substitute a measure providing only $600 million for urban renewal and no new public housing. But the motion was rejected, 189-234 (D 60-215; R 129-19), May 21, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 22, p. 360)

4. Water Pollution. House Democrats initiated the effort to enlarge the program of federal grants for sewage plant construction, which the President urged be terminated. A bill to double the existing annual authorization, from $50 million to $100 million, was passed by a vote of 255-143 (D 228-28; R 27-115), June 9, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 30, p. 364)

5. States' Rights. Southern Democrats and Republicans joined forces in support of a bill to limit applicability of the doctrine of federal preemption to matters concerning which Congress had specified an intention to exercise exclusive federal jurisdiction. Variously described as a "states' rights" and "anti-Court" bill, the measure was opposed by the Administration and others on grounds it would unsettle long-established federal-state relations and invite endless litigation. Destined to die in the Senate, the bill passed the House by a vote of 225-192 (D 111-162; R 114-30), June 24, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 47, p. 372)

6. Food Stamps. Before voting to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act (PL 480) -- the channel through which American farm surpluses are disposed of abroad -- the House agreed to authorize a $1 billion annual program to distribute surplus food to needy persons at home through a food stamp system. The amendment, opposed by the Administration, was agreed to, 232-127 (D 210-28; R 22-99), Aug. 20, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 64, p. 384)

7. Fishing Vessels. Efforts to rescue the ailing fishing industry started in the House with passage of a bill authorizing $3 million over three years for fishing vessel construction subsidies, to bridge the gap between costs of domestic and foreign shipyards. The measure was approved, 272-108 (D 225-23; R 47-85), Aug. 26, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 67, p. 386)

8. Depressed Areas. A Senate-passed bill carrying $390 million for loans and grants to help redevelop economically depressed areas in the U.S. was trimmed to $251 million in committee before being offered to the House. (The Administration wanted no more than $53 million for loans only.) The Committee's bill passed by a vote of 202-184 (D 179-69; R 23-115), May 4, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 36, this volume.)

9. School Aid. As with the airports and depressed areas bills, the House refused to follow either the Senate or the Administration aid-to-education proposals. It passed instead a bill authorizing $325 million a year for four years for federal grants to the states for school construction only. Passage was by a vote of 206-189 (D 162-97; R 44-92), May 26, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 53.)

10. Wheat. To raise farm income and cut the wheat surplus, the Agriculture Committee reported a bill which offered wheat growers a choice between two plans: a 25 percent cut in acreage, in return for an increase in price supports from 75 percent of parity to 85 percent, or unrestricted production with supports at about 60 percent. Since no one expected the growers to choose lower supports, the bill was generally regarded as a high-supports measure. Put to a vote of the House, it was rejected, 171-236 (D 162-100; R 9-136), June 23, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 65.)

11. Lead-Zinc. The House took the initiative in proposing federal aid for domestic lead and zinc producers, by passing a bill (later vetoed) authorizing subsidies to small mine owners to cover the spread between a "stabilization price" and a lower market price affected by foreign imports. The measure was approved by a vote of 197-192 (D 173-70; R 24-122), June 27, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a larger federal role. (RC 70, this volume.)

12. Minimum Wage. Democrats supported a bill to raise the minimum wage from $1 per hour to $1.25 in stages and to extend protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act to an additional 3.5 million workers. But the House voted to substitute a bill raising the minimum to $1.15 for workers already covered and extending a $1 minimum, without overtime protection, to about 1.5 million additional workers in retail trades. The substitute was approved by a vote of 211-203 (D 90-176; R 121-27), June 30, 1960. A "yea" was a vote supporting a smaller federal role. (RC 75, this volume.)

Senate Support For Larger or Smaller 'Federal Role'

1. LARGER FEDERAL ROLE SUPPORT Score, 86th Congress. Number of 14 test roll calls in 1959 and 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" or otherwise took a position in support of a larger federal role or in opposition to a smaller federal role.

2. SMALLER FEDERAL ROLE SUPPORT Score, 86th Congress. Number of 14 test roll calls in 1959 and 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" or otherwise took a position in opposition to a larger federal role or in support of a smaller federal role.

Democrats in this type; Republicans in Italics

CQ Fact Sheet On Party Unity

PARTIES OPPOSED ON 42 PERCENT OF 1960 ROLL CALLS

Despite the usual election-year tendency to close ranks and display more partisanship in Congress, an opposite trend appeared in Congressional Quarterly's study of Party Unity in 1960, as follows:

- The percentage of roll calls on which a majority of Democrats in both chambers opposed a majority of Republicans decreased from 50 percent in 1959 to 42 percent in 1960. In the previous Presidential election year, 1956, party majorities disagreed on 50 percent of the roll calls.
- Democrats, with two-to-one majorities in the 86th Congress, prevailed on 88 of the 125 partisan showdowns in 1960 -- on 53 in the Senate and 35 in the House. Republican majorities were on the winning side -- always with the help of substantial Democratic defections -- on 23 roll calls in the Senate and 14 in the House.
- The average Republican Member voted with his party majority 68 percent of the time in 1960; the average Democratic Member, 64 percent of the time, when the two majorities were opposed.

Party Discipline

Party discipline in Congress is buffetted by "conservative" and "liberal" cross-currents as well as sectional interests. Often a "party line" is known on a roll-call vote, but just as often Members find reasons to ignore it. Leaders themselves sometimes stray from their majority. For example, in 1960 Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), the Vice Presidential nominee of his party, found himself in the Democratic minority on 12 of the 76 Senate Party Unity roll calls. Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) voted against his party's majority on 11 of the 76 showdown roll calls.

For this reason CQ uses the automatic device of selecting, as Party Unity roll calls, all votes in which the result shows a majority of one party in opposition to a majority of the other party. The respective majorities, of course, may and do range from unanimity to one more than one-half of the party members present and voting.

Defections

Of the 76 roll calls in the Senate where a Democratic majority opposed a Republican majority, the Democrats prevailed 53 times and the Republicans 23 times. All 23 of the Democratic losses could have been avoided if one or more Democratic Senators had not defected from the majority. Half (26) of the Republican losses might have been avoided but for the defection of Republican Senators from their majority.

Similarly, in the House, 16 of the 36 Republican majority's losses could have been avoided if there were fewer Republican defectors. All of the 14 Democratic losses could have been victories were strict party discipline maintained.

The first important loss by the Republican majority in the Senate occurred Feb. 4 when nine Republicans failed to join 22 of their colleagues in voting against passage of a bill to provide federal aid to school construction and teachers' salaries. As a result the bill passed 51-34 (D 42-12; R 9-22). Had the nine voted "nay" with their 22 colleagues, the bill would have failed, 42-43. President Eisenhower opposed the bill.

On the Democratic side, just enough Democratic defectors appeared on two important aid-to-education roll calls Feb. 3 to cause a tie, 44-44, on each, thus frustrating the intent of the majority of Democratic Senators. In the first case, a majority of the Democratic Senators voted in favor of an amendment to the school bill to authorize $1.1 billion per year for an indefinite period for school construction and teachers' salaries. The amendment was rejected, 44-44 (D 39-17; R 5-27). Immediately following that vote, a motion was made to reconsider it, whereupon Sen. Dirksen moved to table, or kill, the motion to reconsider. Again a 44-44 (D 16-40; R 28-4) tie developed and Vice President Richard M. Nixon nailed down the tabling motion by casting the necessary "yea" to break the tie. Had any one of the 16 Democrats who voted for the motion cast his vote with the majority of Democrats, it would have been rejected.

In the House, as many as 77 to 112 Democrats left the majority of Democrats to join the majority of Republicans to carry roll calls on a variety of issues. For example, on June 8, 112 Democrats voted with a majority of Republicans to restrict debate on a debt ceiling and excise tax bill. The majority of Democrats -- 133 -- had wanted to keep the debate open for amendments, but the limiting rule passed 204-181 (D 112-133; R 92-48).

On the other side, a majority of House Republicans lost a roll call on passage of a depressed areas bill May 4 when 23 Republicans joined a majority of Democrats on the vote. It passed 202-184 (D 179-69; R 23-115).

Definitions

- PARTY UNITY ROLL CALLS -- Roll-call votes that split the parties, a majority of voting Democrats opposing a majority of voting Republicans. Roll calls on which either party divides evenly are excluded.
- PARTY UNITY SCORES -- Percentage of Party Unity roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party. Failures to vote, even if a Member announces his stand, lower his score. (For names of Members missing one or more 1960 roll calls because of their illness or illness or death in their families, see CQ Week Report p. 1685.)
- OPPOSITION TO PARTY SCORES -- Percentage of Party Unity roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party. A Member's Party Unity and Opposition to Party scores add to 100 percent only if he voted on all Party Unity roll calls.

House Party Unity -- 1960 and 86th Congress

1. PARTY UNITY, 1960. Percentage of 49 House Party Unity roll calls in 1960 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party. (Party Unity roll calls are those on which a majority of voting Democrats opposed a majority of voting Republicans. Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.)

2. PARTY OPPOSITION, 1960. Percentage of 49 House Party Unity roll calls in 1960 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party.

3. PARTY UNITY, 86th Congress. Percentage of 97 House Party Unity roll calls in 1959 and 1960 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the majority of his party.

4. PARTY OPPOSITION, 86th Congress. Percentage of 97 House Party Unity roll calls in 1959 and 1960 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party.

Senate Party Unity -- 1960 and 86th Congress

1. PARTY UNITY, 1960. Percentage of 76 Senate Party Unity roll calls in 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party. (Party Unity roll calls are those on which a majority of voting Democrats opposed a majority of voting Republicans. Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.)

2. PARTY OPPOSITION, 1960. Percentage of 76 Senate Party Unity roll calls in 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party.

3. PARTY UNITY, 86th Congress. Percentage of 179 Senate Party Unity roll calls in 1959 and 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party.

4. PARTY OPPOSITION, 86th Congress. Percentage of 179 Senate Party Unity roll calls in 1959 and 1960 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party.

CQ Fact Sheet On Bipartisan Support

PARTY MAJORITIES AGREED ON 58% OF ROLL CALLS IN 1960

More than half the issues which came down to roll-call votes in Congress in 1960 were ones on which the majority of both parties agreed. This fact sheet measures the extent of bipartisanship by parties as a whole and individual Members of Congress.

Party Scores

Bipartisan Support and Bipartisan Opposition scores are composites -- the percentage of the time the average party Member voted with or against a bipartisan majority of the Senate or House. Failures to vote tend to lower both Support and Opposition Scores.

Individual Scores

Highest Bipartisan Support scorers -- those who voted with bipartisan majorities most consistently -- in 1960:

Senate

Democrats		Republicans
Johnson (Texas)	94%	Prouty (Vt.)	89%
Jackson (Wash.)	83	Smith (Maine)	89
Bible (Nev.)	82	Aiken (Vt.)	85
Randolph (W.Va.)	81	Mundt (S.D.)	84
Church (Idaho)	81	Kuchel (Calif.)	84

Definitions

- BIPARTISAN ROLL CALLS -- Roll-call votes on which a majority of voting Democrats agreed with a majority of voting Republicans. Roll calls on which either party divides evenly are included.

- BIPARTISAN SUPPORT SCORES -- Percentage of bipartisan roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the bipartisan majority. Failures to vote, even if a Member announces his stand, lower his score.

- BIPARTISAN OPPOSITION SCORES -- Percentage of bipartisan roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in opposition to the bipartisan majority. A Member's Support and Opposition scores add to 100 percent only if he voted on all bipartisan roll calls. For names of Members who missed one or more 1960 roll calls because of their illness or illness in their families, see p. 101.

HEALTH ISSUE DOMINATES SOCIAL SECURITY DEBATE

HR 12580 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 1799) June 13, 1960.

- Passed by the House by a 381-23 roll-call vote June 23. (See p. 456)
- Reported by the Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 1856) Aug. 19.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by a 91-2 roll-call vote Aug. 23. (See p. 516)
- Conference report (H Rept 2165) agreed to by the House Aug. 26 on a 369-17 roll call and by the Senate Aug. 29 on a 74-11 roll call. (See p. 470, 517)

PL 86-778 -- Signed into law Sept. 13.

The 1960 Social Security amendments bill (HR 12580) covered subjects ranging from retirement age to unemployment compensation, but only one caused major controversy: medical care for the aged, which became one of the top domestic issues of the 1960 session of Congress and the 1960 political campaign.

The medical care issue was initiated in the 86th Congress by Northern Democrats, who introduced proposals similar to ones they had supported in previous years. Although a number of Democratic bills were submitted in 1959-60, varying in detail, all called for the same basic plan of including paid medical care among the benefits provided by Social Security Old Age and Survivors Insurance. This Social Security approach became known popularly as the Forand bill, after one of its chief House sponsors, Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.).

Backers of this approach were temporarily encouraged to hope for Administration endorsement when President Eisenhower, at a Feb. 3 press conference, said the Administration was considering asking Congress to raise Social Security payroll taxes one-quarter of 1 percent to "make greater provision for the care of the aged." However, the President March 30 said "compulsory insurance" was a "very definite step in (the direction of) socialized medicine" and "I don't want any of it."

In May, after nearly a year of study, the Administration offered a counterplan, calling for federal treasury grants to spur action by the states and localities to help the aged with their medical bills. The plan included subsidies for the purchase of private medical insurance policies.

The new Administration plan (the so-called "Medicare" plan) was, in its turn, criticized by backers of the Social Security approach, who said the Medicare program was inadequate because state participation was optional and many states would probably choose not to come in, because the plan involved a dollar windfall to private medical insurance firms, and because it would depend on annual appropriations by Congress and therefore be less soundly financed than a plan that operated through automatic Social Security payroll tax deductions.

A revised version of the Administration plan was sponsored by GOP Presidential nominee Richard M. Nixon. With Democratic nominee John F. Kennedy strongly backing the Social Security approach, the stage was set for a dramatic confrontation in the post-convention session of Congress in August.

In the end, both the Nixon and Kennedy-backed plans were rejected on the Senate floor. The only tangible legislative result of the health-care fight was enactment of a federal-state matching grant program that Democrats and Republicans alike called inadequate. With the Democratic platform endorsing the Social Security approach, the medical-care issue was certain to receive major attention again in 1961.

Other changes made by the 1960 Social Security amendments bill, as enacted, included a one-tenth of 1 percent increase in the net unemployment tax levied on employers; a liberalization of the Social Security retirement test to permit retirees to earn somewhat more money than previously without losing their pension checks; extension of disability coverage to individuals below age 50; and extension of Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance (OASDI) and unemployment compensation coverage to new categories of persons.

It was the sixth straight election year beginning with 1950 in which Congress had improved benefits under the Social Security Act.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 12580 amended the Social Security Act as follows:

MEDICAL CARE FOR THE AGED

Provided increased federal matching for medical care under federal-state old-age assistance programs and authorized a new federal-state matching grant program to cover medical costs of "medically needy" aged persons who were not receiving old-age assistance.

Made both provisions effective Oct. 1, 1960, with participation optional for each state.

Authorized annual appropriation of sufficient sums to cover the programs and established the following limitations on federal participation:

- For old-age assistance recipients:

In states operating old-age assistance programs under which total federally-supported monthly payments averaged more than $65 per recipient (the maximum in which the federal government shared under existing law), the maximum could be increased by an average of $12 per recipient (to $77) for purposes of medical payments, and new federal grants would cover 50-80 percent (depending on state per capita income) of those medical payments authorized (see below). The existing federal matching ratio (four-fifths of the first $30 and 50-65 percent of payments between $30 and $65) would be retained for payments other than medical payments. Where such a procedure would provide more favorable matching, states could receive a flat 15 percent extra payment for medical costs in addition to the 50-65 percent payments, instead of utilizing the new 50-80 percent formula.

In states operating programs under which monthly payments average $65 or less, federal grants would cover 65-80 percent of medical payments.

In all cases, the type and extent of medical assistance would be determined by each state, but the new federal matching provisions would apply only to payments of up to an average of $12 per month per old-age assistance recipient in any state ($6 per month in Guam, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico); the Government would share only in vendor payments (i.e., payments to doctors, hospitals and other providers of services) or in group insurance payments, not in cash payments to individual recipients.

● For the medically needy (aged persons whose income and resources were too high to qualify them for old-age public assistance but were determined by the states to be insufficient to meet the costs of medical care):

Federal grants would cover 50 to 80 percent of medical payments.

The type and scope of the program would be determined by each state, with no limitation on total payments in which the Federal Government would share; the Government would share in vendor or insurance payments only; the state program must include noninstitutional as well as institutional care; there could be no enrollment fees; state plans must make provision for absent residents; there could be no residence requirement that would exclude a person who resided in the state; benefits must be made available to eligible persons at age 65; for purposes of recovering payments, no lien could be made on a recipient's property prior to his death, and no recovery could be made from his estate prior to his death or the death of his spouse.

● Under both categories, the bill:

Barred federal sharing in payments for persons in public institutions other than medical institutions, persons in TB or mental institutions, and more than 42 days of care for persons in medical institutions as a result of a TB or psychosis diagnosis.

Required the states to set "reasonable standards, consistent with the objectives" of the bill, for determining eligibility and extent of assistance.

Required the states to designate an authority or authorities to establish and maintain standards for public and private institutions utilized in the program.

Required the states to have a single state agency to administer or supervise the administration of the program, and required that state programs must be in effect in all political subdivisions of the state.

Required approval of state plans by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, and instructed the Secretary to develop guidelines for the states in operating their medical service programs.

Provided for 50-50 federal state matching to cover administrative costs of the medical programs.

O.A.S.D.I. AMENDMENTS

Liberalized the retirement test (earnings limitation) so that retirees under 72 would have 50 cents of benefits withheld for every $1 of earnings between $1,200 and $1,500 per annum, and $1 withheld for every $1 of earnings in excess of $1,500. (Under existing law, one monthly benefit check was withheld for each $80 in earnings above $1,200.) As under existing law, benefits would not be withheld for any individual month in which earnings were $100 or less.

Liberalized Social Security work requirements so that, to be eligible for Old-Age and Survivors Insurance benefits, a person would need one calendar quarter of coverage for every three elapsed quarters (instead of every two elapsed quarters as required by existing law) between Jan. 1, 1951 and the calendar quarter of retirement age or death. However, no change was made in the existing requirement that a worker must have a minimum of six to a maximum of 40 quarters of coverage (depending on length of work in covered employment) to qualify for benefits.

Authorized payment of benefits to survivors of workers who died before 1940 and had at least six quarters of coverage; increased benefits for surviving children, so that each child would receive three-fourths of the amount the worker would receive had he lived, subject to existing maximum limitations on family benefits; authorized benefit payments to children living with stepfathers; authorized payment of benefits on the basis of certain invalid marriages made in good faith; and authorized payment of benefits to dependents of covered workers after one year of marriage, instead of three years.

Removed the requirement that permanently disabled persons must be 50 years old before they or their dependents could receive disability payments; allowed a 12-month rehabilitation period (during which payments continue) for certain rehabilitation programs under which existing law limited the trial period to three months; eliminated a six-month waiting period for disability payments in the case of recurrence of a disability.

Made the following eligible for Old-Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance coverage: parents employed by their adult children in trade or business; certain workers in Guam and American Samoa; American citizens employed by foreign governments or international organizations (would be covered on the same basis as self-employed persons); and employees of non-profit organizations without the currently required concurrence of two-thirds of present employees. The bill also made changes in coverage provisions for state and local government employees; excluded from coverage domestic workers under age 16; and extended to April 15, 1962 the period during which ministers may elect to be covered.

Changed provisions for investment of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance and Disability Insurance Trust Funds in Government securities so as to bring a somewhat higher yield to the Trust Funds.

MATERNAL AND CHILD WELFARE SERVICES

Increased annual authorizations for the following programs: Maternal and Child Health Services, from $21.5 million to $25 million; Services for Crippled Children, from $20 million to $25 million; Child Welfare, from $17 million to $25 million, with a minimum annual allotment of $50,000 to each state.

AID TO THE BLIND PROGRAM

Liberalized earned income allowance for persons receiving aid to the blind under state programs, so that after July 1, 1962 the first $85 of monthly income plus one-half of monthly income in excess of $85 must be disregarded in determining need; prior to that date states may use criteria under existing law, under which the first $50 of earned income per month must be disregarded.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

Raised the net federal unemployment tax on employers from .3 to .4 percent (of wages paid out) and the gross tax from 3 to 3.1 percent, to cover administrative expenses of the program and an increase in the fund used for loans to the states to help them meet their unemployment compensation obligations; altered administrative financing of the program by establishing an "unemployment security administration account" in the Unemployment Trust Fund; authorized an increase in the loan fund from $200 million to $550 million or more (the fund was currently depleted); tightened the requirements under which states may obtain loans from the fund; provided, for purposes of recovering loaned money from the states, a progressive reduction in credits which are allowed employers in paying their gross federal unemployment compensation tax (these credits are allowed after payment of the net federal unemployment tax and are related to the size of state unemployment compensation programs and the employer's employment record); extended unemployment compensation coverage to employees of certain agencies connected with the Federal Government such as Federal Credit Unions and Federal Reserve Banks, employees connected with overseas operations of American aircraft; employees of "feeder" corporations whose profits are paid to non-profit organizations; employees of certain tax-exempt fraternal and other organizations; and employees in Puerto Rico (previously covered under a separate program).

Background

Social Security Changes

A program for retirement pension insurance was established by the Social Security Act of 1935. Benefits for survivors of insured workers were added in 1939. Amendments in 1950, 1952, 1954, 1956 and 1958 all had the effect of extending the coverage and broadening the scope of the act. (See Almanacs: 1950, p. 165; 1952, p. 140; 1954, p. 188; 1956, p. 392; 1958, p. 156)

The 1954 amendments, the first adopted under a Republican administration, extended coverage to 10 million persons, bringing nine out of 10 workers under the program. The 1956 amendments extended coverage to approximately 250,000 additional persons, increased federal payments to state public assistance programs, and made women eligible for benefits at age 62 instead of 65. In 1956, Congress also established a disability program at age 50. In 1958, Congress increased benefits by about 7 percent with a minimum monthly increase of $3 and an average increase of $4.75, effective Jan. 1, 1959.

Tax increases accompanied the growth of benefits. The 1958 legislation increased social security taxes by one-quarter of 1 percent (to 2.5 percent) for employees and employers and three-eighths of 1 percent (to 3.75 percent) for the self employed, effective Jan. 1, 1959. Congress also speeded up automatic tax increases to one-half of 1 percent every three years until 1969, beginning in 1960. (Existing law had provided for an increase every five years until 1975 when the tax would reach 4.25 percent.) The legislation also increased the annual wage base on which benefits are computed and taxes paid from $4,200 to $4,800, effective Jan. 1, 1959.

No significant floor opposition was recorded to the 1958 amendments. The bill passed the House by a 374-2 roll-call vote and the Senate by 79-0. The House agreed to Senate amendments by voice vote. President Eisenhower signed the bill into law despite misgivings about certain changes in federal public assistance payments to the states.

Several reports affecting Social Security operations appeared after enactment of the 1958 amendments:

Jan. 2, 1959 -- The 13-member Advisory Council on Social Security Financing, following a year-long study, said the financing of the old age, survivors and disability insurance program under the social security law was "sound, and based on the best estimates available, the contribution schedule now in the law makes adequate provision for meeting both short-range and long-range costs."

The advisory council said, however, it anticipated that further changes in the social security program would "be needed as changes occur in the labor force, wage levels and doubtless in other factors" and recommended "periodic scrutiny" of all factors affecting the program's financing, specifically the maximum earnings base for determining benefits and tax contributions.

June 22, 1959 -- The Social Security Administration's trustees reported to Congress that the Old Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund would run an $87 million deficit for fiscal 1960. The board said, however, that the 1960 deficit would be the last in the foreseeable future because of increased income expected from social security tax raises voted by Congress in 1958. The fiscal 1960 deficit would be the third consecutive deficit for the fund. The first, in fiscal 1958, was $216 million. The second, in fiscal 1959, was $1.2 billion. Despite these three deficits, the fund's net assets, accumulated in previous years, were approximately $21.6 billion on June 30, when fiscal 1959 ended. The board estimated the fund's assets would rise to $23.8 billion by 1964.

Dec. 28, 1959 -- The 12-member Advisory Council on Child Welfare Services made a series of broad recommendations for expansion of the federal role in child welfare services. It said the Social Security Act should be amended to permit the Federal Government to participate in programs "dealing with any social problem affecting the well-being of children," eliminating existing restrictions on federal participation. With one member dissenting, the council suggested that the Federal Government provide matching grants to the states to help pay for any phase of total child welfare costs, with the grants to be accompanied "by assurance that federal funds would not be substituted for state and local funds." It suggested a five-year program under which the federal contribution for child welfare services would gradually be increased from 7 percent to 50 percent of the total spent by the states.

The council also recommended more specific requirements for approval by the Federal Government of state child welfare service plans, federal grants both for demonstration and research projects and for training of child welfare personnel, establishment of a permanent Advisory Council on Child Welfare Services and funds for study of the "basic causes of family disruption."

In addition to its broad recommendations, the council recommended several changes in the 1958 social security amendments which Congress should consider if the more extensive proposals were not put into effect immediately. These recommendations included an immediate increase in the annual authorization and appropriation for child welfare services to $25 million, compared to $17 million authorized and $13 million actually appropriated for fiscal 1960. The council also urged Congress "to provide the financial means to enable the Children's Bureau (of the Health, Education and Welfare Department) to carry out its functions and duties."

Dec. 31, 1959 -- The 13-member Advisory Council on Public Assistance headed by Social Security Commissioner William L. Mitchell, recommended that the federal share of public assistance expenditures remain at the current 50-60 percent over-all level provided in the social security amendments of 1958. The 1958 amendments increased the federal share despite President Eisenhower's request for an increase in state and local participation. In his fiscal 1960 budget message the President repeated his request, saying the federal share of public assistance expenditures "runs as high as 80 percent in many cases" and calling this a trend "inconsistent with our American system of government." (1958 Almanac p. 156)

The advisory council said appropriations for public assistance should continue on an "open-end" basis, with no dollar ceiling on federal financial participation. It called for changes in the federal allotment formula to provide greater recognition of differences among the states in fiscal ability and need. It also said the specified maximum benefit payments in which the Federal Government could share should be increased "so as not to hamper state efforts to provide assistance at levels adequate for health and well-being and to meet rising costs of basic living requirements and medical care."

Other public assistance recommendations included: extension of coverage to financially needy persons regardless of the cause of need; elimination of state residence requirements for public assistance aid; federal, state and local efforts to assure adequate levels of assistance payments and medical care; application by the states of the same assistance standards to all categories of needy persons; extension of aid to dependent children to all financially needy children living with relatives, rather than only to children deprived of support or care because of the absence, death or incapacity of one parent; freedom of choice for the states in determining whether to administer public assistance as single or separate programs; increased federal funds for training of public welfare personnel.

"Because of the close relation between any extension or improvement in social insurance and the extent of need for public assistance," the advisory council also recommended: extension of coverage under the old-age, survivors and disability insurance program to "as many additional workers as possible not now covered under any public retirement system" -- especially farm and household workers; payment of disability insurance benefits to disabled persons under age 50, eliminating the existing age requirement; "adequate" OASI benefit levels reflecting increases in wage and price levels both through benefit amounts and maximum earnings considered taxable and creditable toward benefits.

Medical Care Issue

Numerous medical care proposals were studied in Congress from 1940 to 1960. Prominent among early proposals was a plan for compulsory national medical insurance, covering working persons as well as the aged. The plan was proposed by President Harry S. Truman Jan. 5, 1949 in his State of the Union Message and was embodied in the so-called Wagner-Murray-Dingell bills, but was never enacted. (1949 Almanac p. 292)

From 1953-57 the Eisenhower Administration supported proposals either to permit small insurance firms to pool resources to improve health insurance coverage, or to reinsure private carriers against abnormal losses on medical insurance. (1954 Almanac p. 205; 1956 Almanac p. 440) Ultimately, the reinsurance fund was to be financed by the carriers themselves, so that the plan would not have achieved a redistribution of costs in insuring the aged, but it would have protected carriers against losses incurred in experimentation.

FORAND AND KENNEDY BILLS

The Forand bill (HR 4700), focal point of the 1960 health care fight, was first introduced by Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.) in 1957 and was patterned after proposals submitted every year since 1952.

It called for having the Social Security system pay for up to 120 days of combined hospital and nursing home care, with the hospital portion limited to 60 days. No payments would be made for mental and tuberculosis hospitalization. The bill also covered payments for necessary hospital surgery. The Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare was to administer the program, but could use private, nonprofit insurance carriers as his agents -- a provision designed to tap the administrative experience of such groups.

The bill covered persons -- including surviving wives and dependents -- eligible for Social Security Old Age and Survivors Insurance, but made no provision for some 4.2 million of the 15.8 million aged population who, as of Jan. 1, 1960, were ineligible for OASI. Altogether, the number of persons eligible for coverage under the Forand bill as of Jan. 1, 1960 was 11.6 million men and women over 65, 1.6 million woman retirees in the 62-64 age bracket and 2.4 million survivors and dependents -- 15.6 million in all.

The bill would have financed its benefits by increasing the Social Security payroll tax levied on all individual wages up to $4,800 per year. In 1960, the tax was 3 percent for employees, with employers matching the amount, and 4.5 percent for the self-employed. The tax was scheduled to rise to 4.1 percent for employees, 4.1 percent for employers and 6.75 percent for the self-employed by 1969. The Forand bill would have levied an additional .25 percent on both employees and employers (a net increase of .50 percent) and an additional .375 percent on the self-employed.

The medical services provided in the bill would have cost an estimated $1,120,000,000 had the measure gone into effect in 1960, according to HEW estimates. This was .53 percent of the national payroll subject to Social Security taxes -- slightly more than the .50 percent in revenues the bill would have provided. The estimated cost over the years (i.e., on a long-term or "level premium" basis) was somewhat higher -- .73 percent of the taxable payroll. Payments were to go to hospitals, nursing homes and surgeons participating in the program, but individuals were to be able to choose freely among them, with no government control over medical services.

A bill (S 2915) corresponding to the Forand bill was introduced in the Senate Jan. 26, 1960 by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.). The measure was co-sponsored by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D Mich.). Although it utilized the basic Social Security approach of the Forand bill, S 2915 differed in details of coverage, in that it omitted surgical services; extended hospitalization coverage from 60 to 90 days; added home nursing, diagnostic outpatient services and special home care benefits as inducements to relieve the burden on hospitals, and extended coverage to an estimated 60,000 beneficiaries of disability insurance.

ECONOMICS OF PROBLEM

The economics of the medical care problem center in the fact that the aged are a low-income, high-risk segment of the population. The Nation's elderly (persons 65 and older) numbered about 16 million in 1960, according to Census Bureau figures released Jan. 15, 1960, almost three-fifths of the aged population had cash incomes of $1,000 or less in 1958 and only 15 percent to 20 percent had incomes over $2,000.

The trend toward longer life means that the aged are increasing both in numbers and as a percentage of the total population. Advocates of governmental action on medical care pointed out that for many of the aged, the costs of serious illness present an unmanageable burden: they cannot pay the hospital bills out of their own pockets, nor can they afford the insurance premiums which would afford them total protection.

Most experts agree that an effective solution to the problem can be found only in spreading the costs of medical care for the aged among the younger working population, and/or over the life span of the individual recipient. The hard core of the medical care issue in 1960 was how to achieve this cost spread.

The programs advocated by both major parties carried an implicit recognition of the fact that private insurance companies could not achieve the necessary cost spread entirely on their own because of built-in economic factors. (Companies that attempt to load the costs on premiums for younger purchasers are likely to find themselves at a competitive disadvantage with companies that do not.) Because of these built-in factors, private insurance, acting alone, is under pressure either to trim benefits for the aged or charge them high-risk premiums, with the result that the aged cannot buy adequate protection at premiums all of them can afford.

While private insurance, unassisted, was not looked upon for a solution in 1960, neither was it suggested that the answer lay in having the aged turn all their property over to the state and become public wards in order to receive medical care. Nor was it suggested that the burden should be left to fall primarily on the children of old people whom catastrophic illness happened to hit. The uneven hardships of the latter approach, as well as the increasing mobility and separation of American families and the growing costs of medical care, all contributed to pressures for a governmental solution.

The proposals considered by Congress in 1960 all had the essential objective of achieving the cost spread for aged medical care through governmental action, that is, through compulsory taxation. The Democratic proposals involved tying medical benefits to the national compulsory Social Security insurance system, with the new benefits to be financed by an increase in the Social Security payroll tax levied on workers and their employers.

The Republican alternative plans called for grants to the states out of general tax revenues, in order to assist the states in providing programs under which the aged who qualified could have their medical benefits paid for directly, or could, if they preferred, receive subsidies to help them pay for commercial insurance premiums.

Democrats said the primary advantage of their plan was that it would work: would provide uniform benefits across the Nation and would not be dependent on doubtful actions on the part of the states. The Republicans said their plan would continue the tradition of federal-state partnership in the welfare field, would not lead to "socialized medicine" and would be "voluntary" rather than compulsory, since individuals would not be covered unless they chose to be.

The GOP also argued that the private insurance subsidies offered in its plan would stimulate rather than wipe out progress in the commercial insurance field. The Democrats said their plan would "free" the insurance companies of the burdens of insuring the aged so that they could strengthen their coverage in other fields.

Democrats also said that compulsory OASI insurance could give the aged more benefits per premium dollar than subsidized commercial insurance, since none of the payments under OASI insurance would go toward sales commissions, advertising, profits and the buildup of reserves as protection against unanticipated claims.

(Figures made available by HEW for 1958 showed that private insurance companies returned about 48.6 cents on the premium dollar under individual cash indemnity accident and health insurance policies, whereas non-profit group plans, somewhat comparable to the Social Security approach, averaged a return of 94.7 cents on the dollar.)

Lobby efforts in behalf of the Social Security approach were led by the AFL-CIO. The American Medical Assn. led the campaign for its defeat, strongly backed by the insurance industry and other business groups (see below).

FLEMMING ANALYSIS

A comprehensive analysis of various proposals for financing medical care for the elderly was submitted to the House Ways and Means Committee April 3, 1959 by Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Arthur S. Flemming, in compliance with a 1958 committee request. Excerpts from the Flemming report:

On private insurance -- "There is a question...of how far voluntary effort and private industry can go in developing the kind of distribution of costs to assure adequate protection to all or the great majority of the aged."

On subsidies for private insurance: "It would be necessary to establish some kind of cost-norm or basic premium structure that would apply to all participating plans." Furthermore, the requirements would have to be applied "to all policies", not just those for the aged, "to assure that there would not be a loading of costs on subsidized policies," the report said.

"When such requirements are recognized and spelled out in detail, it becomes apparent that the degree of regulation of voluntary health insurance that would be involved would probably be unacceptable and that such a program would be complicated and costly to administer." On the other hand, the report said, "subsidy of private insurance without reasonable requirements as to benefit and cost norms...would open the door to inequitable variations... and it would largely remove all public control on the expenditure of public funds."

On direct federal-state assistance -- "A basic question...would be whether there should be uniform nationwide standards as to the test of need and the medical services to be paid for." Under a uniform standards requirement, states already operating below-average old-age assistance programs would have that many more persons they would be required to assist if they decided to adopt new programs for persons not on old-age assistance, the report said. (Although the report did not make the point explicitly, it implied that the factors inherent in a uniform standards approach might discourage some states from participating.) On the other hand, if the standards were left to the states, great variations could be expected in the programs the states adopted, the report said.

In submitting his report, Flemming said the Administration was "now proceeding with an analysis of the policy issues involved with a view to developing specific recommendations."

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

HEARINGS -- July 13-17, 1959 on the Forand bill. Flemming, appearing July 13, opposed the bill and said it would bring a "virtual halt" to voluntary insurance efforts and would have "farreaching and irrevocable consequences." He said the Administration was searching for an alternative.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Nov. 12, 1959 -- Flemming said the Administration had been unable, so far, to devise an alternative health care plan. In view of this, he said, "we are reviewing our position on the basic principles embodied in such legislation as the Forand bill." The Secretary's statement was released along with a report of the President's Council on Aging, which called for an educational program to promote employment of older workers. Flemming also said he favored boosting minimum old-age assistance payments from $33 to $40, and raising the $1,200 ceiling on outside earnings for recipients of old-age benefits under 72 years of age.

Dec. 5, 1959 -- Ways and Means Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) advised caution on proposed Social Security changes which would raise tax rates. (The medical insurance proposals were in this category.) Mills also questioned the advisability of enacting in 1960 any across-the-board increase in monthly OASDI benefit payments.

The following were listed by Mills as seven examples of improvements which probably could be financed without further taxation (all were subsequently enacted):

- Repeal of the requirement that an otherwise eligible person must be at least 50 years old before he can qualify for disability insurance benefits.
- Removal of the six-month waiting period before benefits can be paid again to a disabled person who has tried unsuccessfully to return to work.
- Payment of monthly insurance benefits to wives and widows who are permanently and totally disabled.
- Extension of the 12-month trial work period so that it would cover not only persons drawing disability insurance benefits but those in all types of rehabilitation programs.
- A provision whereby persons reaching retirement age could qualify for old age insurance benefits with fewer quarters of coverage than required by the law.
- Extension of coverage to various groups which had indicated a desire to be included in the social security program.
- Correction of various minor inequities and administrative matters.

Feb. 3, 1960 -- President Eisenhower said the Administration was considering raising Social Security payroll taxes one-quarter of 1 percent to "make greater provision for the care of the aged" but no conclusion had been reached and he had not made any recommendation.

Committee Executive Meetings

The Ways and Means Committee March 14, 1960 began three months of executive hearings and meetings to consider the Forand bill and other medical care and Social Security proposals. Following were the major developments between March 14 and June 13, when the Committee finally reported a 1960 Social Security amendments bill:

March 22 -- Forand introduced a resolution (H Res 483) to authorize a special rule for considering HR 4700 -- the first step in an effort to get the bill out of the Ways and Means Committee through a discharge petition.

March 23 -- Flemming, in testimony released as he testified, told the Committee: "I want to make it clear that as an Administration, we will oppose any program of compulsory health insurance." He said consideration had been given to using a payroll tax to provide the aged with more protection against risk of catastrophic illness, but that "we have decided that even a restricted program of this kind would be subject to the same fundamental objections...." Flemming said the Administration had been considering a program of federal-state sharing in the cost of private health insurance for the aged, but no conclusion had been reached. A guiding principle in Administration studies, he said, was that "there should be no action taken by anyone that would tend to stifle private initiative in the health insurance field." Another principle was that of no compulsion for anyone to participate in such a program, he said.

On other general changes in Social Security, Flemming recommended: removing the requirement that an otherwise qualified disabled person must be 50 years of age to get disability benefits, thus making about 250,000 more persons immediately eligible for benefits and eventually costing an average of $600 million annually; increasing the benefit for each child of a deceased worker to three-fourths of the worker's benefit had he lived, instead of one-half of what it would have been plus one-fourth of the benefit divided by the number of children; inclusion of self-employed physicians on the same basis as other self-employed.

He also recommended extending coverage to: services, other than domestic ones, performed by a parent for a child; policemen and firemen under local systems in all states; employees and self-employed in Guam, and nonprofit organization coverage for employees desiring it without requiring that two-thirds of all employees consent to coverage.

March 24 -- Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.) said Flemming had been "bullied" by the Administration into dropping a medical assistance program for the elderly.

March 25 -- American Medical Assn. President-elect Dr. E. Vincent Askey said the AMA would increase free treatments of patients a hundred-fold rather than have the Government institute any health insurance plan.

March 26 -- Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) said it was "questionable" whether Administration studies of the old-age health insurance problem "could be consummated before the end of the present session" of Congress.

Republican Senators John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.) and Hugh Scott (Pa.) said they were drafting a plan for a voluntary program of medical insurance for the aged involving federal matching grants to the states, financed out of general revenues.

March 27 -- In a radio interview, Flemming said he was confident the Administration would come up with a proposal in 1960 for old-age medical insurance. He said it was an issue that "cannot be swept under the rug." He said he would move shortly to call in experts for advice.

March 29 -- The Ways and Means Committee tentatively voted, 11-9, to extend Social Security protection to some doctors, policemen, firemen and other persons.

March 30 -- President Eisenhower said at his news conference there was "not a single state that has a program in this field" and the Administration was "trying to develop a program that will show exactly where the... federal responsibility...should begin, and where it should end." He said compulsory health insurance was a "very definite step in socialized medicine" and "I don't want any of it."

The Ways and Means Committee voted tentatively to extend Social Security coverage to about a million persons receiving a basic salary plus tips and to remove the age 50 limitation on payment of disability insurance benefits.

March 31 -- The Ways and Means Committee by a 17-8 vote, with 10 Republicans and seven Democrats joined in opposition, refused to include the Forand bill in its general plan for revising the Social Security Act. By a 16-9 vote, the Committee rejected a compromise plan for hospitalization only.

Voting to include HR 4700 in the over-all bill were Reps. Forand, Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (D Mich.), Eugene J. Keogh (D N.Y.), Thomas J. O'Brien (D Ill.), Cecil R. King (D Calif.), Frank M. Karsten (D Mo.), William J. Green Jr. (D Pa.), and Lee Metcalf (D Mont.). These eight and Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) voted for the compromise plan which was also rejected.

April 6 -- Forand submitted to the House a motion (discharge petition) to discharge from the Rules Committee H Res 483, introduced earlier, which would in its turn discharge HR 4700 from the Ways and Means Committee and bring it to the floor. (Later in the month, Forand said he had stopped pressing for more signatures, after getting "50 or 60 names" on the petition, in view of efforts of the Committee to bring out a compromise plan.)

April 7 -- Javits and seven other Republican Senators introduced a bill (S 3350), without Administration backing, calling for a federal-state program of subsidies for private insurance policies.

Administration Medicare Plan

May 4 -- Flemming announced the Administration's health care proposals before the House Ways and Means Committee.

As outlined by Flemming, the Administration plan provided two simultaneous programs, and the individual could choose between them.

One program called for the establishment of a "Medicare Program for the Aged", administered by the states, under state plans approved by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Persons eligible could participate in the program if they paid an enrollment fee of $24 each year. Public assistance recipients would not have to pay the fee, however.

Under the plan, the states electing to participate in the plan would be required to pay 80 percent (100 percent for public assistance recipients) of the costs of the following services for all participants who had established their eligibility and where such services were determined to be medically necessary:

(a) Hospital care -- 180 days
(b) Skilled nursing home care -- 365 days
(c) Organized home care services -- 365 days
(d) Surgery
(e) Laboratory and X-ray services -- up to $200
(f) Physicians' services
(g) Dental services
(h) Prescribed drugs -- up to $350
(i) Private duty nurses
(j) Physical restoration services

No payments would be made, however, for the first $250, or $400 in the case of a couple, except for public assistance recipients whose full costs would be paid.

The states would be authorized to use private nonprofit or commercial insurance companies as administrative agents for the program, thus tapping their experience in this field. HEW officials explained, however, that this would not include the contracting out of insurance programs to private groups used as administrative agents. They said the proposed Medicare plan was a direct grant program, and not an insurance program. The states themselves would assume the liability risks, and the state and federal program grants would be calculated at a level, when combined with the individual enrollment payments, to meet those risks.

The federal share of the grants would range from one-third to two-thirds under an equalization formula, but would be 50 percent on the average, Flemming said. He estimated the total annual federal-state cost at $1.2 billion, with the federal share running about $600 million, plus some increase in federal public assistance grants possibly reaching $100 million per year. These estimates were based on participation by all states and by 80 percent of the persons eligible.

The second program which the Administration called for, and which eligible individuals could elect as an alternative to the first, would be a federal-state subsidization of private medical insurance policies. Federal-state funds would be used to pay 50 percent of the cost of the policy, up to a maximum federal-state payment of $60. The states would be required to provide this option and would be responsible for establishing the minimum specifications for policies purchased.

Under both programs, eligibility would be limited to persons over 65 who did not pay income taxes in the preceding year, or whose adjusted gross income, plus Social Security, Railroad Retirement benefits, and veterans pensions, in the preceding year did not exceed $2,500 ($3,800 for a couple). Flemming estimated that 12 million of the Nation's nearly 16 million aged would be eligible under these criteria. "We have developed a program that is designed to achieve just one objective," he said, "to provide approximately 12 million persons 65 and over who have limited resources with the opportunity of taking steps which, if taken, will enable them to cope with the heavy economic burden of long-term or other expensive illnesses."

REACTION

The Administration plan immediately ran into opposition from members of both parties. Major criticisms were that it would be costly and would have to await action and commitment of funds by state legislatures. Flemming May 5 said Texas and possibly one or two other states might have to amend their constitutions to participate.

Sen. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) May 5 said, "It can be dressed up, painted, pictured as voluntary, but any way it is put, the plan offered by Arthur Flemming for the aid to the aged is socialized medicine."

AFL-CIO president George Meany the same day said the plan "has evidently been shaped to meet the political demands of an election year.... We want a program built on the proven, sound principle of social insurance, under which a worker, by regular payments based on earnings during his working years, insures his health benefits when he retires."

Rep. Burr P. Harrison (D Va.) called it a "Townsend plan-Rube Goldberg scheme" which was "more socialistic and more unsound and ultimately more expensive" than anything the Democrats had proposed so far.

Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York (R) said the plan could result in a "very serious fiscal situation, very high costs and cumbersome administration". He said he supported medical protection under the Social Security system. Gov. Robert B. Meyner of New Jersey (D) said the Administration plan "sounds absolutely stupid to me."

House Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) said he thought it was "the most fair and comprehensive plan yet offered to provide protection against devastating illness which would wipe out the savings of elderly persons". The 10 GOP members of the House Ways and Means Committee called for "careful and earnest consideration" of the Administration proposal and said it stood as "forceful testimony to the diligence and responsibility that the Republican party is bringing to its endeavors to find a workable solution to the health needs of the aged".

Sen. McNamara said the plan was "confusing and inefficient" and said it showed the contortions the Administration has been going through in an effort to placate those who want either no health insurance for the elderly or just as little as possible." He said the reliance placed on private insurance companies "means compulsory subsidization of these companies by the general taxpayer although he is purchasing no protection".

Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) said the Administration plan would require careful study. He said it demonstrated a recognition that a program for the elderly was needed, and "once a need is recognized, it is usually possible to find a solution". He said Congress, under Democratic control, must work out the details, and he thought a "great deal of credit" was owed to members of both houses "who have brought this situation to public view and who have paved the way for action".

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) a sponsor of the April 7 GOP Senators' proposal for subsidized private insurance, said he thought the essential point was that all sides now recognized there was a need to be met and that appreciable federal aid funds would be required.

Flemming told reporters May 6 that Vice President Richard M. Nixon participated actively in working out the Administration plan and would support it "vigorously". Budget Director Maurice H. Stans told the Committee that he endorsed the Administration plan. He reportedly said the Administration had searched but found no additional tax sources that could be used to finance the program, estimated to cost the federal Treasury $600 million yearly.

SUBSEQUENT DEVELOPMENTS

May 6 -- Harrison, chairman of the House Ways and Means Subcommittee on Administration of the Social Security Laws urged postponement until 1961 of action on aged health care so that an "exhaustive" study" could be made.

McNamara introduced a bill (S 3503) embodying the Forand approach, but including an income test for Social Security recipients and also including a program of benefits for aged persons who were not on Social Security. The measure was co-sponsored by Kennedy and 18 other Democratic Senators (for details, see below).

May 7 -- Nixon said the Administration plan was "superior" to the Forand bill advocated by the Democrats and the difference between the two proposals "goes to the fundamental nature of our free society". He said the Administration plan offered "freedom of choice" and the "best protection against the cost of catastrophic illness" and allowed private insurance companies to continue to expand coverage for the aged. He said the Forand bill "compels all those on Social Security to participate", would "head in the direction of herding the ill and elderly into institutions, whether they desired this or not"; would "threaten the high standards of American medicine"; and "would open the door for socialized medicine".

May 10 -- The Medical Society of the state of New York urged Congress to take no action on financing health care for the aged until the problem had been studied completely, and condemned the "present tendency to make a political football of our elderly patients". Dr. Louis M. Orr, president of the American Medical Assn., told the group legislative action should be deferred until after a White House Conference on Aging in 1961.

May 12 -- Robert R. Neal, general manager of the Health Insurance Assn. of America, urged Congress to undertake further study of various aged health care proposals and avoid "hasty enactment" of a costly new plan.

May 19 -- The Ways and Means Committee voted 13-12 to have an alternate health care plan for the aged drafted in detail for study at a Committee session May 26. The plan, submitted by Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), did not provide for health coverage under the Social Security system as specified in the Democrat-backed Forand bill. Mills' proposal was similar in approach to the federal-state matching grant program introduced May 4 by the Administration, but it gave the states more discretion over the scope of their programs.

Committee Reports Bill

The Ways and Means Committee June 9 approved HR 12580. The Committee bill made various Social Security changes but included neither the Forand nor Administration health programs. The measure did, however, contain the more modest program supported by Chairman Mills. Provisions:

● MEDICAL CARE FOR THE AGED -- The bill authorized annual federal grants to assist the states in providing medical care to persons 65 or older whose income and resources were above a level entitling them to old-age assistance but were nevertheless determined to be inadequate to meet their medical expenses. Such determination would be made under standards set by the states. The program would go into effect after June 1961 and upon approval by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare of state plans meeting the general requirements of the bill. Participation would be optional for each state.

In addition to setting eligibility standards, each state would be allowed to determine its own program of medical benefits. However, these benefits could be no greater than medical benefits provided by the state under other federally aided public assistance programs, must include both institutional and non-institutional care, and could not go beyond the following: inpatient hospital services up to 120 days annually; skilled nursing-home services; physicians' services; outpatient hospital services; organized home-care services; private duty nursing services; therapeutic services; major dental treatment; laboratory and X-ray services up to $200 annually; and prescribed drugs up to $200 annually.

States would not be allowed to reduce existing public assistance programs in order to finance the new medical care program. Other restrictions included prohibitions against the following: imposition of liens on property of recipients prior to their death; enrollment fees for participation in the program; and residence requirements restricting benefits to persons who had resided in the state for some specified period of time.

The federal share of the program's costs would range from 50 to 65 percent and would be paid out of general Treasury funds.

The Committee estimated that about 10 million aged persons would be potentially eligible for help, but only about 500,000 to 1 million annually would actually have sufficient medical costs to receive payments under the means standards expected to be set up by the states. The costs, under these estimates, would be about $325 million a year ($185 million paid by the Federal Government, $140 million by the states).

● OLD AGE ASSISTANCE -- The bill contained a provision for improving federal matching for state old-age assistance medical payments if the states boosted their own programs. Cost was estimated at about $10 million for the Federal Government and $7 million for the states.

The new provision authorized an increase of up to 5 percentage points in federal matching grants to cover the federal share of increased medical benefits up to an average of $5 per month per individual, when the states provided such increased benefits. The share of federal matching thus could range from 55 to 70 percent (depending on state per capita incomes) instead of from 50 to 65 percent as under existing law, for the increased expenditure of states which broadened their programs. However, the federal share of any increased benefits above an average payment of $65 per recipient per month would be limited to 5 percent of any increase up to $5 per recipient.

● DISABILITY INSURANCE -- The bill removed the age 50 requirement for disability benefits -- a change expected to affect 250,000 disabled workers under 50.

● INSURED STATUS -- Without changing the requirement that a worker have a minimum of six and a maximum of 40 quarters for Old Age and Survivors Insurance pension eligibility, the bill made persons eligible who were covered only one quarter annually, instead of two, between Jan. 1, 1951 and the quarter of retirement age or death. About 600,000 additional persons were expected to become eligible under this provision.

● SURVIVORS -- The bill made various changes to give OASI pensions to 25,000 widows of workers who died before 1940, to increase OASI benefits to about 400,000 children already eligible as survivors, and to assure OASI benefits to survivors of certain technically illegal marriage contracts made in good faith and to certain stepchildren and wives.

● COVERAGE INCREASE -- The bill made eligible for OASI coverage: 150,000 self-employed physicians and an undefined number of medical and dental interns; police and firemen in Virginia, at the state's option; workers on Guam and American Samoa; U.S. citizens employed by foreign governments or international organizations; casual and domestic workers, over 16, who earned $25 in a quarter (previously $50 was required for coverage).

● PROGRAM INCREASES -- The bill authorized the following increases in other Social Security programs: Maternal and Child Health Services, raised from $21.5 million to $25 million; Child Welfare, raised from $17 million to $20 million; Services for Crippled Children, raised from $20 million to $25 million.

● FINANCING -- The Committee said none of the above programs would necessitate any increase in Social Security payroll taxes.

● UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION -- The bill raised the federal unemployment tax from 0.3 percent to 0.4 percent, effective 1961, to increase the "loan fund" to the states from $200 million to $550 million or more, brought about 65,000 persons employed by various Federal Government-connected agencies -- mainly banks -- under employment compensation coverage and tax, and extended the unemployment compensation program to Puerto Rico.

The Committee June 13 reported HR 12580 (H Rept 1799).

The report said the changes in the Old-Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance programs would not necessitate any new increase in Social Security payroll taxes, and the programs "for all practical purposes" would remain actuarially sound although there would be an estimated actuarial deficit of .29 percent of payroll, compared to an estimated deficit of .05 under existing law. (An actuarial deficit is the estimated amount of tax increase which would be required to bring the income and outgo of the programs into exact estimated balance over a period of years.) The Committee said that because of the variability of cost estimates and certain elements of conservatism believed to be present in these estimates, "this small actuarial deficit is not significant."

In a separate statement, Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) said a program of medical care for the aged must "ultimately" be worked out under the Social Security system.

Supplemental views in support of an aged medical care program supported by Social Security taxes were filed by Democratic Reps. Forand (R.I.), King (Calif.), O'Brien (Ill.), Keogh (N.Y.), Karsten (Mo.), Machrowicz (Mich.), Metcalf (Mont.) and Green (Pa.) They said retired persons could not pay the price of private insurance premiums, and the problem would not be met by the Committee's medical care program nor by a plan proposed by the Administration. If a self-financed social insurance program were not adopted there would be increasing reliance on direct-grant relief assistance, the group said. Of the nearly 4 million aged persons who would not be covered under a Social Security medical care program, only 750,000 would be without some kind of coverage through public assistance, or veterans', railroad workers' or other retirement programs, they said.

In separate views, Republican Reps. Mason (Ill.) Curtis (Mo.), Utt (Calif.), Alger (Texas) and Lafore (Pa.) said the Ways and Means Committee "has not developed sufficient information pertaining to the nature of the need for Government health care" and there was "neither panic nor crisis to justify a crash program". In further views, Mason, Utt and Alger said no one could rely on the Social Security program because inflation could negate benefits and curtailed employment or a drop in population growth could make the program insolvent.

Floor Action

The House June 23 passed HR 12580 by a 381-23 roll-call vote, without amendment. (For voting, see chart p. 456)

The bill was considered under a closed rule prohibiting all amendments. Debate began June 22.

PROVISIONS -- See Committee section, above.

DEBATE -- June 22 -- Aime J. Forand (D R.I.) -- The bill's health care provisions were "a sham and a mirage for the old folks...a watered-down version of a no-good bill that came from the White House.... I do not (understand) how come so many Members of this Congress, and the Administration from the President down, seem to prefer to...subject themselves to the pressure of the American Medical Assn."

Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) -- "That argument 'socialism' against the Forand bill is just as fallacious as it can be." The Social Security Act was "one of the soundest bills that ever passed any Congress, and legislation now along the line of the Forand bill should be enacted into law."

Victor A. Knox (R Mich.) -- After rejecting the Forand bill and the Administration plan, the Committee agreed on a plan that "is a step in the right direction".

Senate

Jurisdiction over a Social Security bill in the Senate belonged to the Finance Committee because of the revenue provisions; and it was the Finance Committee to which the House bill, HR 12580, was eventually referred after House passage. Long before that occurred, however, the issue received major attention in the Senate. Following were the developments before the Finance Committee took up HR 12580:

Jan. 26 -- Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) introduced a bill (S 2915) corresponding to the Forand bill. (See above, Background section, for provisions)

Feb. 23 -- The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Subcommittee on the Problems of the Aged and Aging issued a report, based on hearings and study during 1959, called "The Aged and Aging in the United States: A National Problem" (S Rept 1121). The report, among other recommendations, called for medical aid to the aged through Social Security. Two GOP Senators on the Subcommittee, Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.), dissented. (For details of report see below, p. 165)

Subcommittee Hearings

The Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging April 4-13 held hearings on general problems of financing health care for the aged.

In an opening statement, Chairman Pat McNamara (D Mich.) said a health insurance program for the aged should include: emphasis on research and the prevention of illness; adequate coverage of hospital costs; treatment and rehabilitation in a skilled nursing home; partial payment for drugs; coverage of the aged who do not qualify for Social Security; and prepaid social insurance to finance the program.

TESTIMONY -- April 4 -- Walter P. Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers (AFL-CIO), in a statement read by Leonard Lesser of the AFL-CIO, Said the vast majority of citizens wanted and expected Congressional action in 1960 "to help our older citizens to pay their medical bills", but the Eisenhower Administration had "revealed its basic opposition toward effective action in this field."

Reuther said, "At his Feb. 3 press conference the President indicated that a Social Security tax hike was being considered to 'make greater provision for the care of the aged'. Since that date, the GOP's Presidential aspirant (Vice President Richard M. Nixon) and Secretary (of Health, Education and Welfare Arthur S.) Flemming have been indulging in some fancy footwork designed to cover a retreat from this Presidential promise with some show of forward movement."

Sen. Dirksen said, "I think that's a stinking statement from Walter Reuther." Dirksen said the Administration was as "interested in doing something for the aged as Walter Reuther or anyone else."

James Z. Appel, American Medical Assn., said "the vast majority of our aged population is neither disabled by illness nor verging on bankruptcy" and "medical care is available to every man, woman and child in the United States regardless of his or her ability to pay for it."

April 5 -- Jerry Voorhis (ex-Rep., D Calif. 1937-1947) of the Group Health Assn. of America said voluntary health insurance programs for the aged could not provide adequate coverage without help from federal, state or local governments. He said legislation similar to the Forand bill (HR 4700) probably would be "necessary if the needs for health care of the aging population are to be met in any adequate way."

In a related development April 5, Dirksen said Republican Congressional leaders and President Eisenhower had agreed on an outline for a voluntary health insurance program for the aged. He said the program should be: voluntary rather than compulsory, of a moderate size, geared to private health insurance systems, somewhat limited in benefit and scope. He said the program must not involve an increase in the Social Security tax and should operate mainly on the state level.

April 6 -- James B. Carey, president of the International Union of Electrical Workers (AFL-CIO), said the Administration's "shameful surrender to the American Medical Assn. and to the insurance companies (was) an outright betrayal of the needs of America's 16 million elder citizens". He supported legislation to add health insurance to other Social Security benefits.

Dirksen, commenting on Carey's statement, said, "Here's another stinking charge." This led to an angry exchange between the two men.

HEW Secretary Flemming said the Administration did not believe "compulsory health insurance constitutes a sound approach" to the problem. He said the Administration was consulting with various experts and he expected the study to be completed within two weeks. He said he then would develop a "specific proposal for consideration within the Executive Branch."

In a related development April 7, eight GOP Senators, without Administration backing, introduced S 3350, providing for a voluntary federal-state health insurance program for those over 65. The state would contract with private firms for the coverage. Sponsors of the bill were Sens. Javits and Keating (both N.Y.), Aiken (Vt.), Case (N.J.), Cooper (Ky.), Fong (Hawaii), Prouty (Vt.) and Scott (Pa.). The bill, estimated to cost the Government $480 million annually, would have subscribers make monthly payments based on income, with no payments required for those earning below $500 a year and a monthly maximum of $13, and federal-state sharing of remaining costs.

April 11 -- Flemming told the Committee S 3350 was a "step in the right direction" but the Administration had not decided whether to support its specific provisions.

Durward D. Ulfers, Mutual of Omaha, said his firm alone insured more than a million persons over 65. Walter M. Foody Jr., Continental Casualty Co., said private health insurance was available for all over 65.

Dr. Ethel Percy Andrus, American Assn. of Retired Persons, said the drug industry was trying to get legislation passed which would break up a mail order prescription service conducted by her organization.

April 12 -- Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), supporting a Social Security health insurance bill he introduced Feb. 23, 1959 (S 1151), said his Congressional colleagues should take action on the program in 1960 "if they want to take out some political health insurance". "If we wait for this Republican go-slow, not-now, veto Administration...we will wait forever."

Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), sponsor of HR 4700, said doctors had spread much false propaganda about his proposal.

Rep. John D. Dingell (D Mich.), supporting the Forand bill, said measures calling for payment to the insurance industry out of Government general revenues, would be "a subsidy and socialization".

Dr. Edward C. Mazique, National Medical Assn., said his organization, composed of 5,000 Negro physicians, supported using the Social Security System to finance health care for the aged.

April 13 -- Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) said the Administration "should support" the Republican Senators' plan (S 3350) because it followed guide lines set forth by Flemming.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- May 4 -- Flemming, testifying before the House Ways and Means Committee, unveiled the Administration's Medicare plan for the aged. (For details of plan, see House section, above)

McNAMARA BILL

Following the Subcommittee hearings and Flemming's explication of the Medicare plan in the House, Subcommittee Chairman McNamara May 6 introduced a new Democratic bill, with numerous co-sponsors, providing medical aid to the aged through the Social Security system (S 3503).

Principal new features of the measure were (1) an income test for Social Security beneficiaries; (2) exclusion of dependents below the retirement age; and (3) a program of medical benefits for aged persons who were not covered by Social Security. (The Democrats quietly dropped the income test in later bills, a move which enabled them to make the point that Social Security benefits would be available as a "matter of right" while all the GOP plans required a "pauper's oath", and enabled GOP candidate Nixon to retort that the Social Security approach made benefits available to wealthy persons who had no need for them.)

The McNamara bill was co-sponsored by the following Democratic Senators: Kennedy (Mass.), Morse (Ore.), Symington (Mo.), Humphrey (Minn.), Clark (Pa.), Randolph (W.Va.), Williams (N.J.), Magnuson (Wash.), McGee (Wyo.), Young (Ohio), Douglas (Ill.), Gruening (Alaska), Long (Hawaii), Murray (Mont.) Hart (Mich.), Hennings (Mo.), Pastore (R.I.), McCarthy (Minn.) and Jackson (Wash.).

- PERSONS COVERED by the bill included:

1. All persons who reached the retirement age (65 for men, 62 for women) and who were entitled to Social Security benefits, and who also met one of the following requirements: (a) had earnings of $2,000 or less in the previous calendar year, or (b) received less than $100 in wages and were not self-employed during any three months in the preceding calendar year, or (c) had reached the age of 72.

2. All persons past the retirement age who were not covered by Social Security but met one of the other three above requirements. These would receive health benefits at a reduced level.

Husbands and wives of individuals in both categories would be entitled to the same benefits as their spouses, provided that the husbands and wives had also reached the retirement age and were dependent on their spouses for more than one-half of their support. The bill thus excluded from eligibility wives, dependents and survivors below the retirement age who would be covered under the Forand bill (HR 4700).

McNamara estimated his bill would cover 11.3 million Social Security recipients, 1.7 million old age assistance recipients and 1.8 million other retired persons, or all but 1 million of the Nation's 15.8 million aged.

- INSURANCE BENEFITS -- Persons eligible for Social Security would receive aid for hospitalization (but not surgery), nursing home care and health services in the recipient's home, or any combination of these services, but total coverage would be limited to a formula of 90 "units of services", with one unit equalling one day of hospitalization, two days of nursing home care or two and two-thirds days of home care. In addition, the bill provided some payment for diagnostic outpatient care and for "very expensive drugs". Portions of the bill would become operative at different times -- within a two-year period from July 1, 1960 to July 1, 1963 -- to give the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare sufficient time to establish the programs.

Maximum benefits would be:

Hospitalization -- 90 consecutive days per calendar year; or

Nursing home services -- 180 consecutive days per calendar year; or

Home health services -- 240 days, provided any time elapsed between home health services did not exceed 30 days; or Any combination of these services, subject to the 90 day "unit of service" maximum.

Diagnostic outpatient services, provided that the time elapsed between such services did not exceed 14 days; and "very expensive drugs" -- both to an extent specified by the Secretary of HEW.

- DIRECT MEDICAL BENEFITS -- Persons not eligible for Social Security would receive the same as the above insurance benefits with two exceptions: (1) nursing home services would be limited to 135 days and one and one-half days would count as one unit of service; and (2) home health services would be limited to 180 days and two days would count as one unit of service.

● COST -- McNamara estimated the cost of the program at $1.1 billion the first year and $1.5 billion when it was in full operation. Of this, he estimated that the share financed out of general revenues for non-Social Security recipients would run to $370 million annually, including $238 million already expended for old-age public health assistance and other governmental medical care programs.

● FINANCING -- Funds for increased Social Security benefits would be derived by increasing Social Security payroll taxes for both employers and employees by one-fourth of one percent. Medical benefits for non-Social Security recipients would be financed by annual appropriations from Treasury funds. S 3503 would establish a Federal Medical Insurance Trust Fund to handle finances for the entire plan.

The bill also would establish a National Medical Insurance Benefits Advisory Council to advise the HEW Secretary.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- June 27 -- Sen. Javits proposed a modified version of his April 7 insurance subsidy plan. The new proposal stipulated a minimum program of benefits to be required in subsidized policies and authorized each participating state to "act as its own insurance carrier" if it so desired, Javits said.

Finance Committee Action

The Senate Finance Committee June 29-30 held hearings on the House-passed bill, HR 12580. Major witness was HEW Secretary Flemming, who urged the Committee to adopt the Administration Medicare plan. Flemming said the medical aid plan in HR 12580 as passed by the House would help meet crises but would not cover long-term illnesses as well as the Medicare proposal.

Following the hearings, Congress adjourned for the national political conventions, to return in August, and the Committee postponed action on the bill until then. These were the developments in the last days of June and through Aug. 8, when the Senate reconvened after Sens. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) and Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) were nominated on the Democratic Presidential ticket, and Vice President Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) and UN Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge (R Mass.) on the GOP Presidential ticket:

June 29 -- A majority of Governors endorsed the Social Security principle when, at the 52nd Annual Governors Conference, they voted 30-13 "that Congress be urged to enact legislation providing for a health insurance plan for persons 65 years of age and over to be financed principally through the contributory plan and framework of the (Social Security) Old-Age, Survivors and Disability insurance system."

Of the 54 Governors invited (those of the 50 states plus Guam, Virgin Islands, American Samoa and Puerto Rico), 11 did not vote or were absent. Of those voting, 24 Democrats and six Republicans voted for; four Democrats and eight Republicans voted against; and one of no party designation (Coleman of Samoa), against.

Governors who voted for the resolution: Patterson (D Ala.), Egan (D Alaska), Fannin (R Ariz.), Faubus (D Ark.), Brown (D Calif.), McNichols (D Colo.), Ribicoff (D Conn.), Collins (D Fla.), Docking (D Kan.), Combs (D Ky.), Reed (R Maine), Furcolo (D Mass.), Williams (D Mich.), Freeman (D Minn.), Blair (D Mo.), Aronson (R Mont.), Brooks (D Neb.), Sawyer (D Nev.), Meyner (D N.J.), Burroughs (D N.M.), Rockefeller (R N.Y.), DiSalle (D Ohio), Edmondson (D Okla.), Del Sesto (R R.I.), Herseth (D S.D.), Ellington (D Tenn.), Daniel (D Texas), Stafford (R Vt.), Rosellini (D Wash.) and Nelson (D Wis.).

Governors voting against the resolution: Boggs (R Del.), Vandiver (D Ga.), Smylie (R Idaho), Stratton (R Ill.), Handley (R Ind.), Powell (R N.H.), Hodges (D N.C.), Hollings (D S.C.), Clyde (R Utah), Almond (D Va.), Underwood (R W.Va.), Coleman (American Samoa) and Merwin (R V.I.)

Governors Loveless (D Iowa) and Lawrence (D Pa.) later endorsed the Social Security approach in letters to Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.).

June 30 -- Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) introduced a bill (S 3784) which put the Administration Medicare program into legislative language for the first time in either chamber.

ANDERSON AMENDMENT

The same day, Sen. Anderson introduced a new Democratic Social Security medical plan in the form of a proposed amendment to the House bill. The new proposal was to become the focal point of Senate debate.

The Anderson plan was pushed to the center of the stage as a measure which was more moderate, with smaller benefits, than the earlier Forand bill (HR 4700), Kennedy bill (S 2915) or McNamara bill (S 3503), but which retained their key feature of financing health benefits for the elderly through the Social Security system.

The customary battle lines formed rapidly around the Anderson plan. The AFL-CIO, "irrevocably committed" to the establishment of the Social Security principle in health care, swung behind the new plan as the one with "the best chance of adoption." The American Medical Assn., on the other hand, was preparing to fight the plan on the grounds that it, like earlier proposals for Social Security health insurance that the AMA had opposed, was a "foot in the door" for socialization of American medicine. Also counted among the opponents were most commercial insurance firms and the Eisenhower Administration.

Democrats were prepared in the August session to stress the argument that the costs of the Anderson bill were carefully tied to an increase in payroll taxes, so that the bill would finance itself every step of the way, while the Administration, which had been arguing for "fiscal responsibility", was supporting a program that would draw on general revenues without making any provision for raising the money.

Both programs were estimated to cost about $700 million at the federal level the first year, with the Administration plan calling for an additional $600 million to be put up by the states.

The Anderson plan was co-sponsored by Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey and Eugene J. McCarthy (both D Minn.). The AFL-CIO said its aim was "to have the Anderson amendment adopted if possible by the Committee and, failing that, by floor action". Some supporters of the measure said frankly they did not care whether the President signed it or not, since they felt a veto would insure a Democratic victory in the fall and certain enactment of the legislation early in 1961.

The chief selling point of the Anderson plan, according to AFL-CIO sources, was that its provisions were more nearly tailored to tax revenues than any of the earlier "Forand-type" bills.

In the long run, the earlier measures would have cost more than the one-half of 1 percent increase in Social Security payroll taxes that their bills provided, these sources said. The long-run, or level premium, cost of the Anderson bill, on the other hand, was estimated to be almost, if not exactly, the one-half of 1 percent of payroll which would be provided by the increased tax. Early year costs would be substantially less, according to Anderson.

Experts on the operations of the Social Security system disagreed on the need to gear any present medical care program to long-term tax revenues, since future scientific discoveries, such as a cancer cure, could alter costs drastically. Nevertheless, the Anderson plan was considered likely to appeal to those who insisted on actuarial soundness every step of the way, and especially so since modifications made in the Social Security system by the House bill themselves tended slightly in the direction of actuarial deficit.

The Anderson plan would hold down costs in these ways, its supporters said:

- By restricting benefits to Social Security beneficiaries 68 or over. "We have selected age 68 because that is the average age of retirement in the United States," Anderson said. The Forand bill took in retirees at a younger age, as well as their younger dependents and survivors. Even with the age 68 cutoff, Anderson estimated his plan would cover 9 million persons.
- By providing a deductible feature whereby the first $75 of hospital costs would be a borne by the patient, as well as $75 of any hospitalization in excess of 24 days.
- By not paying for surgery, physicians' fees or drugs outside the hospital.
- By limiting coverage to one continuous period of treatment per 12-month period -- a feature of most aged medical care proposals. This would prevent a drain on the program resulting from short sporadic hospital visits; the patient would claim benefits only for his most costly treatment period.

Within these limitations, the Anderson plan would, in any 12-month period, pay up to 365 days of hospital care, 180 days of skilled nursing home care following transfer from a hospital, and up to 365 days of visiting nurse service in the home.

PARTY PLATFORMS

The Democratic National Convention July 12 and the Republican National Convention July 27 adopted 1960 platform planks on health care for the aged. (For texts of planks, see p. 782, 800)

The 1960 Democratic platform called for a Social Security medical insurance program, "without a means test", as "first priority" in its program to assist the aged. Formation of the Kennedy-Johnson ticket insured a concentrated drive for the legislation in the August session.

With New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) supporting the Social Security approach and Vice President Nixon specifically backing the Administration plan, the 1960 Republican platform carefully straddled the issue. It called for a health program for the aged financed "on a sound fiscal basis and through a contributory system" for "the aged needing it". The platform thus appeared to endorse a "means test", a provision opposed by Rockefeller, but one that could be included in a Social Security approach if desired. Furthermore, it did not say whether by a "contributory system" it meant Social Security or was referring to individual enrollment fees which would be required under the Administration plan. Nor was it clear, in calling for "state participation", whether the platform proposed the creation of state agencies to handle administration, as envisioned by Rockefeller, or state matching grants, as with the Administration program. Finally, the platform called for the "option of purchasing private insurance" as a "vital distinction" between the Democratic and Republican approaches.

Again, the meaning was not explicit, since both the Administration and Rockefeller called for a choice between medical benefits and cash payments toward private insurance policies, and a provision for optional cash payments could be written into the Anderson bill along the lines suggested by Rockefeller if there was sufficient pressure in Congress to do so.

Bill Reported

The Senate Finance Committee Aug. 13 approved HR 12580 after rejecting the Anderson amendment. The Committee offered a more liberal federal-state medical care program than that approved by the House, and made other changes in the Social Security provisions of the bill.

Final Committee approval was by voice vote after six of the 11 Democratic members joined with the six Republicans to approve the new medical plan and vote down the Anderson proposal.

The Senate Committee adopted its plan by a 12-4 vote with Democratic Sens. Byrd (Va.), Kerr (Okla.), Long (La.), Smathers (Fla.), Talmadge (Ga.) and Frear (Del.) voting in favor along with Republican Sens. Williams (Del.), Carlson (Kan.), Bennett (Utah), Butler (Md.), Curtis (Neb.) and Morton (Ky.). Opposed were Democratic Sens. Anderson (N.M.), Gore (Tenn.), Douglas (Ill.), and Hartke (Ind.). Sen. Eugene McCarthy (D Minn.) voiced his opposition to the plan but abstained from voting.

Earlier the Committee rejected by votes along similar lines three separate plans for providing medical benefits directly through the Social Security system, financed by increased payroll taxes. A plan offered by Gore was defeated 11-4 and proposals by Anderson and Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.) were defeated 12-5.

In other votes, the Committee Aug. 12 rejected 10-5 a proposal by Douglas to curb a practice whereby the Secretary of the Treasury invested Social Security trust funds in Treasury bonds at interest rates below those offered other investors.

The Committee added original amendments increasing from $1,200 to $1,800 the limitation on earnings above which retired persons could not receive Social Security benefits and permitting men the option of receiving retirement benefits at age 62 on a reduced basis instead of age 65 on a full basis.

The Committee deleted the following provisions from HR 12580 as passed by the House: extension of Social Security coverage to physicians, parents in the employ of their child's trade or business, domestic workers in private households making $25 (instead of $50) from one employer during a calendar quarter, certain workers in Guam and American Samoa, U.S. citizens employed within the U.S. by international organizations, U.S. citizens employed by certain labor organizations in the Panama Canal Zone; extension of coverage under unemployment compensation; an increase in the federal unemployment tax; extension of unemployment compensation to Puerto Rico; establishment of a new administrative account in the Unemployment Compensation Trust Fund; reduction of from three years to one year the time needed to acquire dependent benefits as a result of marriage; liberalization of work requirements of Social Security recipients so that only one quarter of coverage would be required in every year since 1950 instead of two; extension of duties of the Advisory Council on Financing after 1963.

MEDICAL CARE CHANGES

The Committee medical care formulas were introduced by Democratic Sens. Robert S. Kerr (Okla.) and J. Allen Frear Jr. (Del.). The Kerr plan utilized the federal-state approach advocated by the GOP and approved by the House, and Kerr said it had Administration backing. (Some Senate sources reported subsequently that President Eisenhower's initial reaction was to veto the Kerr plan when it was shown to him by Secretary Flemming, in view of its unusually liberal federal matching formulas; according to this report the President was persuaded otherwise by his lieutenants, who had "cleared" the Kerr plan prior to Committee approval. Southern Democrats, who voted for the Kerr plan and against the Kennedy program, and whose votes were decisive in the defeat of the Kennedy plan in the Senate, received the most favorable federal matching formulas for their states under the Kerr plan. The workings of the bill also afforded Kerr's state an $8 million "bonus", by reducing state financial burdens under existing programs, according to calculations based on HEW figures released after President Eisenhower signed the bill. For details of "bonus" money afforded to Oklahoma and several other states, see below.)

The major differences between the Kerr plan and the medical plan voted by the House were that the Kerr plan: (1) increased the new old-age assistance medical payments in which the Federal Government would share from $5 per recipient to $12 per recipient; (2) changed the new ratio of federal assistance in these payments from 55-70 percent to 50-80 percent (the highest ratios to go to states with lowest per capita incomes); (3) raised the program level in which the Federal Government would participate from $65 to $77 to allow for the new $12 in medical payments (the House bill restricted new federal medical payments to 5 percent of the first $5 of any payments in excess of $65); (4) changed the federal matching ratios under the new program for medically needy persons not receiving old-age assistance from 50-65 percent to 50-80 percent; (5) removed all limitations on the size of medically needy programs in which the Federal Government would share on the basis of the specified ratios (medically needy programs could not provide greater benefits than a state's old-age assistance programs under the House bill).

The Finance Committee Aug. 19 reported HR 12580 (S Rept 1856).

The Committee said its health care plan was "reasonable and workable" and carried financial incentives which "should enable every state to improve and extend medical services to aged persons". The Committee said its program would increase funds for medical services for 2.4 million persons on old-age assistance and for an estimated 10 million medically indigent, of whom an estimated 500,000 to 1 million "may become ill and require medical services that will result in payments" under the program.

In minority views, Democratic Sens. Clinton P. Anderson (N.M.) Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), Albert Gore (Tenn.), Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.) and Vance Hartke (Ind.) said the bill did not meet the need and they were "deeply perturbed and disappointed" that the Committee had "rejected the sound, dignified way of meeting the cost of medical care for the aged" through the Social Security system. The minority said that state actions in providing medical assistance under relief programs had been "grossly inadequate".

The minority said it joined the Committee in rejecting the medical care program advanced by the Eisenhower Administration, which "would place a huge additional burden on the general budgets of local, state and federal governments...without consideration of where the money will come from...." They said there was "really nothing voluntary" about the Administration plan, since "the general taxpayer is compelled to pay huge costs (except for the premium or enrollment fee paid by the beneficiary) and yet the old person will not be allowed to participate in the benefit side of the plan unless he submits to and meets an income test of $2,500 a year."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Aug. 15 -- The American Medical Assn. announced its support of the Senate Finance Committee medical care plan.

Aug. 17 -- Democratic Presidential nominee Kennedy said the Senate Committee plan did "not go far enough" and he would cosponsor an amendment embodying the Anderson Social Security approach as an adjunct to the Committee plan when the bill reached the Senate floor. Kennedy said the Social Security mechanism provided pay-as-you-go sound financing, avoided the "humiliation of the means test" and avoided placing a "virtually impossible burden upon the states".

In his news conference the same day, President Eisenhower reiterated his opposition to "compulsory medicine" and said, in reference to Administration-backed plans for medical assistance out of general treasury revenues, "I don't care if that does cost the Treasury a little bit more money there."

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 23 passed HR 12580 by a 91-2 roll-call vote, after rejecting a revised version of the Anderson amendment supported by Democratic Presidential nominee Kennedy and a revised version of the Javits amendment supported by GOP Presidential nominee Nixon. An amendment offered by Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) and agreed to, 51-38, permitted coverage of mental and tuberculosis patients in state programs for the medically needy. Debate began Aug. 20.

The Nixon-backed plan, providing for benefits to be financed by federal-state matching grants in states choosing to participate, was defeated 28-67 on a party-line vote. The Kennedy-backed plan, providing benefits for all Social Security retirees 68 and over, to be financed by an increase in the Social Security payroll tax, was rejected 44-51, with Southern Democrats joining the Republicans in opposition. (For voting, see charts p. 515-16)

The Nixon-Javits plan was submitted by Javits as a "reconciliation" of the Javits proposal first introduced April 7 and the Administration bill introduced by Saltonstall. A Nixon spokesman announced the Vice President's support for the plan the same day. GOP leaders later indicated that President Eisenhower was agreeable to the plan.

The Javits plan offered a wider range of benefits than the Administration plan and removed the deductible features, but retained an enrollment fee requirement. Javits proposed that the plan be adopted to supplement rather than replace the Kerr medically needy program. The key differences between the two were that a uniform range of benefits was specified by Javits, while the states had free rein to write their own programs under the Kerr plan, and that the Kerr plan offered more favorable matching ratios.

Anderson submitted his amendment after making several changes at Kennedy's request: removal of a second $75 deductible feature after 24 days of hospital care, reduction of maximum hospital coverage from 365 days to 120 days and an increase in nursing home coverage from 180 to 240 days.

PROVISIONS -- The bill as passed was the Finance Committee version with minor changes added by floor amendment (see below).

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Aug. 23 -- Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas) -- Include Texas among the states permitted to divide their retirement systems for state and local employees into two parts for purposes of obtaining Social Security coverage for employees who wish it. Voice vote.

Clair Engle (D Calif.) -- Extend Social Security coverage to certain hospital employees in California. Voice.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Allow coverage of mental and tuberculosis patients in state programs for the medically needy. Roll call, 51-38.

Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) -- Technical amendment relating to the placing of unemployment tax revenues in the Federal Unemployment Account. Voice.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Allow a child to receive survivor's benefits on the record of a worker who stood in place of the parent for the five years preceding the worker's death, provided that the child was living with the worker at the time of death and was receiving three-fourths of his support from him. Voice.

Javits -- Extend the unemployment compensation program to Puerto Rico. Voice.

Harrison A. Williams Jr. (D N.J.) -- Make special retirement provisions for teachers and public employees in New Jersey. Voice.

Robert C. Byrd (D W.Va.) -- Prevent a husband's election of benefits below age 65 from causing a double reduction in his wife's benefits if she is below 65. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Javits -- Substitute for the pending Anderson (D N.M.) amendment (see below) an amendment authorizing federal matching grants (covering one-third to two-thirds of program, depending on state per capita income) for a program of medical benefits for persons over 65 earning $3,000 or less annually ($4,500 per couple). Each state wishing to participate would be required to offer recipients a choice between (1) certain specified minimum preventive, diagnostic and short-term illness benefits, (2) 80 percent of certain specified minimum long-term illness benefits, with $250 deductible, and (3) receiving a subsidy to help pay the premium of a private health insurance policy (with payment limited to one-half the premium and not to exceed $60 annually). States could increase benefits under alternatives (1) and (2) beyond specified minimums with the federal government sharing in all costs which did not exceed an average of $128 per person enrolled in the program; states would be required to charge annual enrollment fees of at least 10 percent of the total average cost for persons choosing alternatives (1) or (2), no enrollment fees for alternative (3). Roll call, 28-67.

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) -- Provide vendor payments to cover 120 days of inpatient hospital services ($75 deductible), or 240 days of skilled nursing home service following transfer from a hospital, or 365 days of home health services, or combinations thereof, plus hospital diagnostic outpatient services, for all persons 68 and over eligible to receive Social Security benefits and referred by a doctor; raise the Social Security payroll tax one-fourth of one percent for employees and employers and three-eighths of one percent for the self-employed to finance the program. Roll call, 44-51.

DEBATE -- Aug. 20 -- Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- "I think the real issue is going to be whether we shall do it by the Social Security route, breaking totally new sociological ground, or whether we shall do it by the traditional contributory system.... Considering the sociological break with the past which the Social Security System in health would represent I believe my program is preferable for our country."

William Proxmire (D Wis.) -- "I think the Senator's (income) test is a much more attractive test than the usual means test that the states apply with respect to property, insisting on liens and pauper's oaths.... Nevertheless, the Senator would apply an income test...."

Pat McNamara (D Mich.) -- "If it is true that some 10 million aged persons would be eligible for services under the bill approved by the Finance Committee, this medical care program could cost the states and the Federal Government approximately $2.5 billion...perhaps the Administration is not too concerned about the cost because these figures really are not meaningful. The blunt truth of the matter is that it would be the miracle of the century if all of the states -- or even a sizable number -- would be in a position to provide the matching funds to make the program more than just a plan on paper."

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) -- "There are built-in factors in competitive nongovernment insurance which make it impossible to meet the need.... The Social Security mechanism is the only practical way of meeting the problem."

Aug. 22 -- Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) -- "If the Anderson amendment is adopted, it is the beginning of Government direction in the practice of medicine and the treatment of the ill -- not for a restricted group of veterans, but for the population generally."

Aug. 23 -- Vance Hartke (D Ind.) -- "The truth is the Administration is using the veto threat and clever parliamentary manipulations in an all-out effort to prevent any really workable medical care program for the aged. That threat runs through all the veins of this debate."

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- "I inquire if we are really to believe that the Administration is sincere in the endorsement of this proposal, because it seems to me to have every mark of a political maneuver. I say this in light of two years of stalling by the Administration and the lack of any kind of support for any kind of workable medical program for the elderly.... I say most respectfully, that not one bit of financing has been provided for the proposal before us."

Javits -- "The Administration came to my plan very slowly.... If I have won something of a fight for my own party and within the Administration, I think that is great... certainly the American Medical Assn. does not support my program."

Conference

HR 12580 was cleared for the President's signature when both chambers approved a compromise measure reported by House-Senate conferees Aug.25 (H Rept 2165). The House Aug. 26 accepted the report by a 369-17 roll-call vote and the Senate Aug. 29 gave its approval by a 74-11 roll-call vote despite a prolonged appeal by Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) to send the bill back to conference. (For voting, see charts p. 470, 517)

As sent to the President, HR 12580 retained the major medical care provisions of the bill as passed by the Senate Aug. 23. The Senate version, like the House bill passed June 23, authorized a new program of federal matching grants to the states for aged medical care, the major difference being that the Senate bill offered more generous federal matching formulas.

The conferees dropped a Senate amendment, introduced by Long, requiring the inclusion of patients in tuberculosis and mental institutions in the new medical care program. Also dropped in conference were Senate amendments giving men optional reduced retirement benefits at age 62 and increasing the annual earnings limitation for social security recipients under age 72 from $1,200 to $1,800. A compromise was accepted on the earnings limitations, barring retirees earning more than $1,200 annually from receiving a full benefit, but allowing them a higher benefit than they could receive under existing law.

The conferees dropped House provisions extending coverage to doctors and interns and certain domestic workers, and retained a House provision increasing the net unemployment tax.

During Senate debate Aug. 27, Long said the Social Security provisions in the Senate bill would have cost the Social Security trust funds $1.2 billion the first year, decreasing to $800 million annually over a period of time, whereas the conference bill would cost $250 million the first year, decreasing to $150 million over a period of time. (Figures apply to Social Security provisions only, not to the new medical care provisions, since the latter would be separately financed from general revenues.) "In other words," Long said, "we got about 20 percent of what we left here with." Long also urged reinstatement of his amendment for TB and mental care under the medical care program.

Before approving the compromise bill, Senators endeavored to establish legislative intent on the new medical care legislation. In reference to a provision requiring the states to establish "reasonable standards" to determine individual need and the extent of assistance, Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.), a sponsor of the program, said in response to questioning by Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) that he could visualize a standard under which a person earning between $1,800 and $2,400 a year would have his medical services paid for above a certain amount.

Commenting on a provision added in conference specifically permitting states to utilize private insurance plans for purposes of the medical programs, Kerr said the same privilege existed under old-age assistance programs, and the proviso was included in conference "only to assure" states that the existing provision was not changed. He said a state or individual counties administering the program could, for example, make payments to Blue Cross or Blue Shield for medical services.

The conference report on HR 12580 was signed by Reps. Mills (D Ark.), Forand (D R.I.), King (D Calif.), O'Brien (D Ill.), Mason (R Ill.), Byrnes (R Wis.) and Baker (R Tenn.) and Sens. Byrd (D Va.), Kerr (D Okla.), Frear (D Del.), Williams (R Del.) and Carlson (R Kan.). Sen. Long was the only conferee who did not sign the report.

The President signed (PL 86-778) the bill Sept. 13 without comment.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Sept. 14 -- The Department of Health, Education and Welfare announced that $71,918,000 in state funds would be "freed" or "released" from existing old-age assistance programs by the injection of new federal money under the new law. The "release" would occur because of the new old-age assistance medical matching formulas: Many states would get additional federal money for programs already in operation, and if the state program was already adequate, some-of the state money financing the program could be released for other purposes. HEW said it was hoped that the "freed money" would be used by the states to initiate new programs for the medically needy, although this was entirely left to the decision of the states.

HEW made no mention of the "freed money" factor in cost estimates released by the Senate Finance Committee in reporting HR 12580. These cost estimates showed a projected federal cost of $202 million and an estimated "additional" state cost of $60 million in the first year of operation. However, by applying the subsequently-announced $72 million in "freed money" against the $60 million in state costs, it could be seen that instead of spending $60 million more, the states as a whole were expected to spend $12 million less of their own money in the first year of the new program than they had been spending previously.

The "freed money" was concentrated in 25 states.

The HEW estimates indicated that 10 of these states would use all their "freed money" in programs for the medically needy while the remaining 15 would have a "bonus" of about $38 million left over after establishing such programs at the level estimated by HEW. The majority of the "bonus" money was concentrated in three states: California ($8.4 million), Oklahoma ($8 million) and Louisiana ($6 million). The "freed money" figures were released by HEW after a Congressional Quarterly news story called attention to them.

Sept. 28 -- The Southern Governors' Conference adopted a resolution recommending that member states take immediate action to participate in the Kerr plan.

Nov. 30 -- The American Medical Assn. House of Delegates, meeting in Washington, D.C., adopted a resolution directing its Board of Trustees and Council on Medical Services to take the lead in developing a national voluntary health insurance program in conjunction with established non-profit insurance associations such as Blue Shield, Blue Cross and the American Hospital Assn. The program would be coordinated with commercial efforts. Details were left to be worked out.

AMA Executive Vice President Dr. Ernest B. Howard Nov. 27 had said the Association would "fight with every resource" proposals by Kennedy to incorporate a program of medical care for the aged in the Social Security system in 1961.

LOBBYING EFFORTS

Groups Favoring Forand Bill

The forces in favor of Forand-type legislation are spearheaded by organized labor, especially the AFL-CIO. The 13-million-member federation early in 1960 threw its full weight behind a drive to enlist grass roots support for the Forand bill. Union members were urged repeatedly in their union newspapers to write to Washington to demand enactment of HR 4700. Special "educational" material was compiled by the AFL-CIO Social Security Department and dispatched to local unions all over the country. Mass rallies were held in most of the major cities in the U.S. and in many smaller ones. At one such gathering sponsored by the United Auto Workers (AFL-CIO) in Detroit March 27, 12,000 persons cheered as three contenders for the Democratic Presidential nomination, Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), John F. Kennedy (Mass.) and Stuart Symington (Mo.), endorsed the principle of the Forand bill.

In a special message to all AFL-CIO affiliate unions April 12, the federation's president, George Meany, urged all members to take advantage of the Easter recess, when most Members of Congress were in their home districts, to drum up support for the Forand bill.

The result of these and other efforts by labor to stir up support for the Forand bill was reflected in the huge volume of Congressional mail on the issue from March on.

Aligned with the AFL-CIO in support of Forand-type legislation were the following groups: Group Health Assn. of America, Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, American Public Health Assn., United Mine Workers of America Welfare and Retirement Fund, American Public Welfare Assn., National Federation of Settlements, National Farmers Union, Golden Ring Club of Senior Citizens, National Assn. of Social Workers, Community Health Assn., American Nurses Assn., National Consumers League, Hospital Council of Philadelphia, Physicians' Forum, Public Issues Committee of the Family Service Assn., Synagogue Council of America, National Medical Assn., National Council of Jewish Women, Townsend Clubs of America, Americans for Democratic Action, Indiana Funeral Directors Assn., International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

Groups Opposing Forand Bill

Leading the fight against federal health insurance for the aged were the American Medical Assn., which represents about 175,000 of the Nation's 225,000 doctors, and most other organizations representing the medical profession. The AMA had received strong backing from the insurance industry and business groups such as the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. and the National Assn. of Manufacturers. The AMA organized a letter campaign against the bill.

The AMA's current lobbying campaign against federal health insurance legislation dates back to early 1958, when it hired a Los Angeles public relations firm, Braun and Co., to advise it on ways to defeat an earlier version of the present Forand bill. Shortly thereafter the AMA announced the formation of the Joint Council to Improve the Health Care of the Aged. The council, which an AMA spokesman said was brought on by the possibility of federal action on an old-age insurance plan, consisted of the AMA; the American Dental Assn., representing 90,000 dentists or 90 percent of licensed dentists; the American Hospital Assn., representing 6,000 hospitals (about 90 percent of general hospital beds) and 1,000 hospital administrators and workers; and the American Nursing Home Assn., representing 4,500 nursing homes or about one-third of the those licensed.

With the advice of the AMA's public relations firm, the four organizations comprising the joint council set out to prove to the public that they were doing all they could to solve the insurance problems of the aged.

The medical profession did not present a solid front however. The American Nurses Assn., representing about 180,000 professional nurses, has favored enactment of the Forand bill since it was first introduced in 1957. Moreover, the American Hospital Assn., though an AMA ally, in August 1958 adopted a statement saying private resources should be used first to provide care for the aged but that the use of Social Security funds "may be necessary ultimately" to solve the health insurance problem.

As the pressures for improved medical care for the aged continued to mount in 1958, the AMA and the insurance industry stepped up their efforts to solve the problem on their own in the hope of averting action by the Federal Government. The governing body of the AMA, the House of Delegates, in December 1958 urged state medical societies to expedite the development of low-cost insurance plans. At approximately the same time, the Health Insurance Assn. of America, representing 275 companies which write about 80 percent of the Nation's health insurance coverage, adopted a resolution urging its members not to cancel health insurance policies "solely because of the deterioration of health", to make available policies which were renewable for life and to adopt plans for persons over 65 and for the physically handicapped.

In May 1959 the AMA launched a series of regional conferences to acquaint doctors and representatives of women's organizations, churches, labor, industry and government with the problems of the aged. By the end of March 1960, nine conferences had been held in Salt Lake City, Boston, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Kansas City, San Francisco, New Orleans, Atlanta and Baltimore.

Following is a list, compiled by the AMA, of national organizations opposed to Forand-type legislation: American Farm Bureau Federation, American Bar Assn., National Retail Merchants Assn., Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., National Assn. of Retail Druggists, American Medical Assn., American Hospital Assn., American Assn. of Retired Persons, National Retired Teachers Assn., American Academy of General Practice, American College of Radiology, American Dental Assn., American Hotel Assn., American Life Convention, American Mutual Insurance Alliance, American Nursing Home Assn., American Pharmaceutical Assn., American Society of Internal Medicine, Assn. of American Physicians and Surgeons, Blue Shield Medical Care Plans, College of American Pathologists, Council of State Chambers of Commerce, Health Insurance Assn. of America, Insurance Economics Society of America, International Assn. of Accident and Health Underwriters, National Assn. of Insurance Brokers, Life Insurance Assn. of America, National Assn. of Life Underwriters, National Assn. of Manufacturers, National Federation of Independent Business, National Grange and National Taxpayers Conference.

SUBCOMMITTEE ISSUES REPORT ON PROBLEMS OF AGED

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging Feb. 23 issued a report (S Rept 1121) containing recommendations for improving the health and living standards of the Nation's elderly. The Subcommittee was established in 1959 under a resolution (S Res 65) adopted Feb. 6, 1959, by the Senate; its mandate was renewed, at the beginning of 1960, to continue through Jan. 31, 1961.

BACKGROUND -- The Subcommittee investigated problems of the aged (persons 65 or over) for eight months in 1959, conducting hearings in Washington, D.C., and seven other cities. The majority report was issued by the four Subcommittee Democrats: Pat McNamara (Mich.), chairman; John F. Kennedy (Mass.); Joseph S. Clark (Pa.); and Jennings Randolph (W.Va.). Republican Sens. Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) and Barry Goldwater (Ariz.) issued minority views.

MAJORITY VIEWS

The Subcommittee report said that "at least half of the (16 million) aged -- approximately 8 million people -- cannot afford, today, decent housing, proper nutrition, adequate medical care -- or necessary recreation." The following recommendations were submitted for "priority" action:

● Health benefits -- The report called for inclusion of a federal health-insurance plan in the Social Security Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance program.

The report noted that by 1965 at least 8 million aged persons would not have any type of health insurance and said the alleviation of heavy health costs for the aged "should have top priority for legislative consideration in 1960." (For legislative action, see story p. 148)

● Employment opportunities -- The report said the major problem for persons between 40 and 64 was job discrimination because of age, during a period when they were not yet eligible for Social Security benefits. "The experience is a degrading one for the individual and a several billion dollar loss to the economy." The report urged state action to "outlaw" such discrimination and recommended federal legislation to require its elimination by firms doing business with the Federal Government. It also recommended federal training of the elderly to fill certain types of community jobs for which personnel was in short supply.

● Adequate income -- The report said almost 60 percent of the aged had incomes of less than $1,000 in 1958; another 20 percent was in the $1,000-$2,000 bracket. Observing that existing Social Security benefits were "far below an acceptable level," the report recommended a "substantial increase" in the over-all level of benefits and a raise in the minimum benefit from $33 to at least $50, to be financed by raising the amount of income subject to Social Security taxes from $4,800 to $6,000. The report also urged careful study of proposals for issuing Government "purchasing power" bonds, which would be available to pension funds, retirement annuity companies and individual purchasers for retirement purposes.

● Housing the elderly -- The report recommended a minimum five-year federal authorization of 10,000 new public housing units a year for the low-income aged. In addition, noting that Congress in 1959 authorized a $50 million direct revolving loan program for private nonprofit rental housing for the elderly but did not appropriate any money under the authorization, the report urged that the authorization be raised to $100 million and money for the loans be appropriated for use in 1960. (1959 Almanac p. 245) The report recommended that facilities for essential health and social services be required in plans for non-profit housing developments and be considered for eligibility for FHA mortgage insurance in commercial housing for the aged.

● Improving nursing homes -- The Subcommittee found that "the large majority of nursing homes provide no more than bare custodial care, generally directed by untrained personnel, thereby consigning hundreds of thousands of patients to pitiable vegetation." The group proposed that the Department of Health, Education and Welfare develop minimum standards for nursing home maintenance and operation, and that these standards be considered a "floor" for state standards for nursing homes caring for patients receiving federal public-assistance grants. It said the program should be backed by federal assistance to homes which met the standards.

● Applying present knowledge -- The report recommended federal grants to stimulate demonstration programs and technical assistance projects for help to the aged among state and local groups.

● Office of the Aging -- Observing that the aged "have been buffeted from agency to agency, from committee to council in a separatist, fragmented fashion," the report urged legislation in 1960 to "establish a U.S. Office of the Aging concerned full time with the full range of problems of America's senior citizens."

MINORITY VIEWS

The minority statement said the Subcommittee recommendations on federal assistance to the aged presented a "distorted view" of the resources already available to older citizens, failed to note the "startling growth" of private pension funds, raised "false hopes" as to what could be done by "Congressional enactments," and included a "paucity of recommendations to encourage individuals to help themselves."

The statement supported an "increase in Social Security payments," but specified no amount and criticized the increased payment proposals presented by the majority. The minority statement also favored raising the present $1,200 earnings ceiling for Social Security recipients and advocated elimination of compulsory retirement practices.

The statement raised objections to all of the proposals in the majority report, including those for a federally financed health-insurance program for the elderly ("destructive of the fundamental precepts which underlie the American family and our traditional approach toward community problems"); for legislation barring age discrimination by federal contractors ("Government contractors...include virtually everyone"); for special housing for the elderly ("inflationary"); for issuance of purchasing power bonds (a "drastic suggestion" which "accepts the premise that a further deterioration of the dollar is in prospect"); for federal assistance to nursing homes ("not warranted"); for establishment of an Office of the Aging ("would probably make no contribution to...basic problems which affect all Americans...inflation, rising prices, and Government fiscal policies.").

CONGRESS PASSES MUTUAL SECURITY ACT OF 1960

HR 11510 -- Reported April 7, 1960, by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 1464).

- Passed, amended, by the House April 21 by a 243-131 roll-call vote. (See p. 434)

S 3058 -- Reported April 22 by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 1286).

HR 11510 -- Passed, amended, by the Senate May 2 by a 60-25 roll-call vote. (See p. 492)

- Conference report (H Rept 1593) agreed to May 12 by a 240-138 roll-call vote of the House and by voice vote of the Senate. (See p. 444)

PL 86-472 -- Signed into lay May 14.

For the fiscal 1961 Mutual Security Program, President Eisenhower asked Congress for $4,250,000,000. The Mutual Security Act of 1960 (HR 11510 -- PL 86-472) authorized appropriations of $1,366,200,000, but since an additional $2,720,100,000 of the request was already covered by authorizations made in previous years, and since $100 million more was later voted separately, total authorizations eventually made available to cover the President's request actually came to $4,186,300,000.

Congress subsequently appropriated $3,781,350,000 for the program -- $3,716,350,000 of it in the regular mutual security appropriations bill for fiscal 1961 (HR 12619) and the remaining $65 million in the Second Supplemental Appropriations bill (HR 13161). The total was $468.7 million less than Mr. Eisenhower's request but $555.5 million more than had been appropriated for the previous fiscal year. (For HR 12619, 13161, see p. 178, 405)

Contingency Fund

Following were the steps by which Congress appropriated $250 million for the contingency fund, even though it originally authorized only $150 million.

President Eisenhower initially asked $175 million for the contingency fund, but the authorization bill, the Mutual Security Act of 1960 (HR 11510), signed May 14, cut this to $150 million. The House June 17, in passing the appropriations bill (HR 12619) for fiscal 1961, provided $150 million. The President Aug. 8 requested another $100 million, and the Senate Aug. 19 passed a special authorization bill (S 3855) to permit the money to be appropriated, but S 3855 was never acted on by the House. Technically, therefore, when the Senate took up the funds bill (HR 12619) Aug. 24, it had no right to vote more than $150 million -- the amount authorized earlier -- for the contingency fund.

Nevertheless, it voted $250 million for the contingency fund, and no Senator raised a point of order against this action. The bill then went to conference where the $250 million was retained. House conferees, in bringing the bill back to the House for final action, asked for a separate vote on the final figure for the contingency fund, using a rarely employed procedure in which the separate vote becomes "the will of the House" and suffices for an authorization.

After this, no further authorization was necessary, so S 3855 was pigeonholed and authorization that had been inserted in a pending House bill (HR 13021) was deleted.

Both the President's request for funds and the authorization were made in two stages. Mr. Eisenhower initially asked Congress for $4,175,000,000 in a special message to Congress Feb. 16. Because $2,720,100,000 of this request was already covered by authorizations made in previous years (see box next page), only $1,454,900,000 was needed in new authorizations. Congress furnished $1,366,200,000 of this in the Mutual Security Act of 1960, a cut of about $89 million. The Act also contained major legislative provisions on the Arab-Israeli dispute over the Suez Canal, Congressional junkets, aid to Cuba, a Hawaii technical and cultural center and the Indus River Basin development project.

Later, Mr. Eisenhower Aug. 8 asked Congress to raise the contingency fund (partly for emergency expenditures in the Congo) to $250 million. This compared with his initial request of $175 million and an authorization in HR 11510 of $150 million. The Senate Aug. 19, by a 59-14 roll-call vote, passed a bill (S 3855 -- S Rept 1836) to meet the President's new request. (For voting, see chart p. 515)

The House attached a similar provision to one of its own bills (HR 13021), but later deleted it, and took no action on S 3855. Consequently, there was no formal authorization of the extra $100 million. Nevertheless, Congress in acting on the fiscal 1961 mutual security funds bill (HR 12619) put the extra $100 million into the bill, just as if an authorization existed, and in so doing, in effect raised the total authorizations available to cover Mr. Eisenhower's fiscal 1961 requests by $100 million, to $4,186,300,000. (For technical explanation, see box, this page)

PROVISIONS -- The Mutual Security Act of 1960 authorized $1,366,200,000 for fiscal 1961, broken down as follows: defense support, $675 million; technical cooperation, $206.5 million; special assistance, $256 million; contingency fund, $150 million; other programs, $78.7 million.

In addition the bill:

Required that the Mutual Security Act and the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 83-480) be administered "to give effect" to the principles that the U.S. favors freedom of navigation in international waterways and that the purposes of the Mutual Security Act are "negated and the peace of the world is endangered" when countries receiving assistance wage economic warfare against other nations receiving assistance. Specific application of the principles was left to the determination of the President, who "shall report on measures taken...to insure their application".

Affirmed the willingness of the U.S. to participate in the Indus Basin Development program, and for this purpose (1) waived fiscal requirements of other acts to facilitate U.S. participation through the World Bank; (2) waived requirements of the Merchant Marine Act that at least 50 percent of foreign aid goods be shipped in American flag vessels, but stipulated that any deviation from the Act be compensated by shipping a commensurate amount of other foreign aid goods in U.S. vessels.

Required Congressional committees to file annual itemized, consolidated public statements on dollar funds spent on trips abroad by Members of Congress and Committee staff members. (Existing law required statements only on the spending of counterpart funds.)

Placed a $55 million annual ceiling on grant and credit aid to Latin America for military hardware.

Reworded purposes of the Development Loan Fund to emphasize agricultural as well as industrial development and to encourage the making of loans to stimulate private investment and "free economic institutions".

Directed that the Development Loan Fund not allocate, earmark or otherwise commit funds in excess of $50,000 for any country unless the Fund received an application supported by sufficient information and assurances to indicate reasonably that the funds would be used in an economically and technically sound manner. An exception was made for multilateral programs where the President determined that such commitment of funds was in the national interest.

Directed the President to arrange for a non-governmental study of the advisability of establishing a Point Four Youth Corps and authorized use of $10,000 to pay for the study.

Abolished the International Development Advisory Board.

Expressed the sense of Congress that prompt and careful consideration should be given to U.S. participation, through use of foreign currencies available to the U.S., in an internationally financed program to preserve the cultural monuments of the Upper Nile, and requested the President to submit to Congress before March 1, 1961 his recommendations concerning such a program.

Directed the President, in furnishing assistance for Palestine refugees, to take into account whether Israel and the Arab states were taking steps toward their resettlement and repatriation; expressed the sense of Congress that early "rectification" should be made of Palestine refugee rolls to ensure that only bona-fide needy refugees receive aid from the UN Relief and Works Agency; directed the President to take into consideration in contributing to the Agency the efforts it and the host governments were making in rectifying the relief rolls; directed the President to submit a report to Congress with his fiscal 1962 mutual security proposals on progress made toward rectification of relief rolls and rehabilitation and repatriation of refugees, and authorized him to expend relief funds through other agencies.

Directed the President to undertake a study of possibilities for coordinating federal agencies dealing in foreign economic activities and present his findings as part of the fiscal 1962 program.

Facilitated barter arrangements, by permitting commodities, equipment and materials transferred to the U.S. as payment for loans and assistance to be reused by the U.S. for assistance under terms of the Act.

Authorized payment for overland transportation of relief supplies to landlocked countries, in addition to water transportation paid for under existing law.

Empowered the President, when he determined that achievement of foreign policy objectives in a given country required it, to have the U.S. chief of mission provide for payment of U.S. and foreign personnel in local currencies, for that portion of pay and allowances received and to be used in the country concerned.

Expressed a U.S. policy of extending loans for cooperative associations of small farmers in rural underdeveloped nations, with unpaid balances not to exceed $10 million in the aggregate and $25,000 for any association.

Required that plans for water or related land resource construction problems meet requirements of similar projects in the U.S., "insofar as practicable".

Funds for Fiscal 1961

Shown below are requests, authorizations and appropriations for mutual security for fiscal 1961. Authorizations include those made in previous years (indicated by parenthesis), those made in the Mutual Security Act of 1960 (HR 11510), and the $100 million "authorized" by S 3855. Appropriations include funds in the regular fiscal 1961 mutual security appropriations bill (HR 12619) and in the Second Supplemental bill (HR 13161).

[1]The Mutual Security Act of 1959 (1959 Almanac p. 178) actually authorized "such funds as may be necessary" for military assistance in fiscal 1961 and 1962 and $1.1 billion for the Development Loan Fund for fiscal 1961. Since the President indicated he would use only $2 billion of the military assistance authorization and only $700 million of the DLF authorization, the Congressional committees handling mutual security used the latter figures in computing an "authorizations available" figure for fiscal 1961. Congressional Quarterly has followed this practice both in this chart and elsewhere in the story.

Relieved the mutual security Inspector General and Comptroller of prescribing the financial and statistical content of the annual presentation of the program to Congress.

Barred further assistance to Cuba except when the President determined such aid would be in the national interest.

Authorized grants through June 30, 1961 of surplus agricultural commodities under PL 480 to promote economic development in underdeveloped areas.

Established a Center for Cultural and Technical Interchange in Hawaii and authorized appropriations for federal participation in the project.

Authorized the Secretary of State to draw up plans for a western hemisphere cultural center in Puerto Rico for submission to Congress by Jan. 3, 1961.

Required that whenever information on economic assistance was denied to Congress or the General Accounting Office, the President must certfy that he has forbidden the information and give his reasons for doing so.

President's Fiscal 1961 Requests

President Eisenhower Feb. 16, in a special message to Congress, asked $4,175,000,000 for the Mutual Security Program for fiscal 1961. The amount was $245 million more than the President requested for fiscal 1960 and nearly $1 billion more than the $3.2 billion Congress subsequently appropriated. (For text of message, see p. 631)

The request was broken down as follows:

● Military Assistance: The President asked for $2 billion as the "minimum" necessary for collective defense needs, including essential modernization and improvement. Although, under terms of the 1959 Mutual Security Act, the military assistance appropriation was to be included in the Defense Department budget, it remained in the mutual security appropriation. In 1959, when Mr. Eisenhower asked $1.6 billion for fiscal 1960 military assistance, Congress first authorized $1.4 billion, then appropriated $1.3 billion. (1959 Almanac p.178)

● Defense Support: For this program of economic aid to support the armed forces of Spain and 11 nations bordering the Sino-Soviet bloc, the President asked $724 million. This was $111 million less than the $835 million he sought for fiscal 1960. Of that amount, Congress authorized $751 million and appropriated $695 million.

● Special Assistance: The President asked $268.5 million for special aid to Morocco, Libya, Tunisia, Jordan, Afghanistan, Bolivia and Haiti, and to enable continued participation in such programs as the world anti-malaria campaign. The request included a new $20 million special program for improvement of education and training in Africa south of the Sahara. Mr. Eisenhower asked $272 million under the special assistance category for fiscal 1960 and Congress appropriated $245 million.

● Technical Cooperation: To continue present programs, and to increase technical aid in Africa, he asked $172 million, plus $33 million for the U.S. contribution to United Nations technical assistance programs and $1.5 million for a program through the Organization of American States. The total, $206.5 million, was $4.5 million less than was asked and authorized for fiscal 1960, but $25.3 million more than Congress appropriated then.

● Development Loan Fund: The President requested $700 million for this "increasingly effective instrument" for response to needs which cannot be met otherwise. In 1959, he initially asked $700 million for the DLF for fiscal 1960 and received $550 million. A subsequent request for $500 million, to be appropriated in fiscal 1960 but not spent until 1961, was turned down.

The President said an increased amount of the 1961 DLF money was expected to go to South Asia, particularly India and Pakistan, to help in their "great cause" of internal development. The President also asked Congress to authorize the necessary executive flexibility for the U.S. to participate in a multilateral program to develop the Indus River basin between the two countries. He said an agreement on plans was expected in the near future. Mr. Eisenhower also said he envisaged full employment of grant and loan assistance to hasten development in the Republic of China.

● Contingency Fund: As "an essential safeguard against the unforeseen or not wholly predictable need," the President asked $175 million, which was $25 million less than he asked for fiscal 1960 but $20 million more than Congress authorized and appropriated.

● Other programs: The President asked $101 million, some $1.4 million more than Congress appropriated for fiscal 1960, for administrative expenses, participation in UNICEF, refugee, peaceful atomic energy use, and other programs.

The President said his requests covered "needs which must be met" and there was "no question but that the Nation can afford the expenditures involved." He said the "overwhelming support of the vast majority of our citizens leads us inexorably to mutual security as a fixed national policy."

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 17-March 15.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 17 -- Secretary of State Christian A. Herter, supporting the President's request, said U.S. assistance met "only a small part" of the needs of the less developed areas, but was of "critical importance since it can mean the difference between success and failure." Questioned about relations with Cuba, Herter said the problem was raised "whether we should cancel" the arrangement whereby U.S. buyers pay more than the world price for Cuban sugar. (See story p. 208)

Feb. 18 -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon said European allies of the U.S. stepped up their defense expenditures 11 percent in 1959, but still were unable to meet the high costs of modernizing North Atlantic Treaty Organization equipment. He said Great Britain, France, Japan and Germany were contributing substantially to the less developed areas and that the increasing assistance from the industrialized countries was "a most hopeful development."

MILITARY ASSISTANCE GRANTS BY COUNTRY, FISCAL 1950-60[1]

Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr., in Feb. 23 testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, released figures showing how much money individual nations throughout the world received under the U.S. military assistance program since fiscal 1950. It was the first time a breakdown of military assistance by country had ever been made public. Congress annually appropriates money for military assistance in one lump sum, and the President, through the Defense Department, determines how much money individual recipient nations get.

The statistics released by Gates showed obligations under the program since 1950 and actual deliveries. The difference between money obligated and material delivered represented materials in the "pipeline."

The figures showed that France was the leading recipient of military assistance, receiving more than double the amount received by the second country, the Republic of China (Formosa). Italy ranked third, Turkey fourth and Korea fifth.

Of the $27.5 billion obligated since 1950, Europe received more than half, the Far East about a quarter.

Feb. 23 -- Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr. said the $2 billion military assistance figure would facilitate utilization of an allied military force of more than seven million men. By the "coldest calculation of self-interest," he said, the program was "the most desirable way of arriving at a total United States strategy to counter the threats of Communism." Gates gave the Committee figures showing how $27.5 billion in military aid was obligated in the period 1950-60. (See chart, p. 169.) The public disclosure was the first made on a country-by-country basis. There had been various demands in Congress for release of the figures. (1959 Almanac p. 183)

Feb. 24 -- Assistant Secretary of Defense John N. Irwin II said the $2 billion figure was a "closely calculated minimum" which would be rationed to keep up current forces and provide some $400 million worth of urgently needed missiles and other advanced weapons for allies.

"FREE WORLD STRONG POINTS"

Feb. 29 -- John C. Lynn, American Farm Bureau Federation, said the President's $4.2 billion Mutual Security request should be cut by nearly $1.2 billion and other industrial countries should take a greater share of the cost of collective defense.

Mrs. Margaret F. Stone, chairman, Citizens Committee for UNICEF, supported the $12 million U.S. contribution to the United Nations Children's Fund requested by the President, and said a $1 million increase would be "amply justified" by the health and other gains made under the program. She said her group was speaking for 13 national organizations.

March 1 -- James W. Riddleberger, director, International Cooperation Administration, said the fiscal 1961 program emphasized a new feature, the concentration of economic assistance in certain selected countries, rather than spreading it "on a less catalytic scale" among all the recipient countries. The purpose, he said, was to develop "free world economic strong points." The countries selected for concentrated assistance in fiscal 1961 were India, Pakistan and Formosa, Riddleberger said. The criteria for receiving aid, he said, included a willingness of the recipient countries to help themselves and to "make the difficult economic and political decisions required in the allocation and administration of their own resources," and capacity for accelerated growth in terms of resources, manpower and institutions.

In choosing the countries to single out for concentration, "judgments as to the chances of success for economic growth" would include a weighing of whether the recipient "deals realistically with such things as the tax policy, trade policy and investment policy," Riddleberger said. He said the Government did not believe the selection process constituted "interference in the internal affairs of others."

One advantage of concentrated assistance was the prospect that these "islands of development", once their own growth picked up momentum, would assist and inspire other underdeveloped countries in turn, Riddleberger said. Examples of this, he said, were Western European assistance to Asia and Africa; Israeli technical assistance to Ghana, Nigeria and Burma; Indian aid to Nepal; and technical assistance rendered to Vietnam by Formosa and the Philippines.

Riddleberger said other new points in the fiscal 1961 program, in addition to assistance concentration, were: the Indus Basin development program, the special program for tropical Africa, decreased requirements for defense support, greater contribution of other industrialized free nations, and the Inter-American bank.

DEFENSIVE SHIELD

Riddleberger said the fiscal 1961 program "contemplates building and strengthening of the defensive shield along the Sino-Soviet arc." He said there would be an "important power shift in the Far East and Southeast Asia if," as is "a real possibility", Communist China continued its rapid growth over the next decade. Riddleberger cautioned against the West being "caught by an economic or political Pearl Harbor" in the form of a political, economic and social offensive by the Chinese to undermine or overwhelm countries along the arc from Afghanistan to Korea. He said grant aid would play an important role in developing the internal strength of these countries.

March 2 -- John E. Murphy, inspector general and controller of the Mutual Security Program, a post created by Congress in 1959, said the State Department had set up a 30-member division for investigation of the program, to be headed by James E. Nugent. In addition, Murphy said, spot studies would be carried out by high-level inspection teams.

March 3 -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon said it seemed "neither possible nor desirable" to project a planned reduction of grant aid as directed in the 1959 Act.

March 7 -- Ex-Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis. 1945-47, 1949-51), AFL-CIO, said there were 100 countries in the non-Communist world where per capita income was $100 or less and in these areas people would not long be satisfied with "snail's pace progress". He said the AFL-CIO welcomed creation of the International Development Assn. and supported a five-year, $1.5-billion program yearly for the Development Loan Fund.

Elizabeth T. Farwell, National Congress of Parents and Teachers, urged authorization of the full $12 million request for the UNICEF program.

Mrs. A.R. Henry, Board of Missions, Methodist Church, supporting the program, said technical assistance was one of the most important tools for extending the benefits of civilization and contributing toward peace. She said as large a portion as possible should be given through the United Nations, particularly in Africa.

NUCLEAR PROPOSAL

Brig. Gen. Bonner Fellers, U.S. Army (ret.), Citizens Foreign Aid Committee, said the U.S. could save $13 billion annually and have "far greater security", through cutting defense expenditures on domestic troops and conventional weapons and military assistance abroad and concentrating instead on nuclear striking power.

March 10 -- Gen. Lauris Norstad, Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, said the U.S. portion of military expenditures in Europe had declined from 20.4 percent in 1953 to 4.2 percent in 1959, but the U.S. "must still supply the majority of the new weapons."

March 11 -- Earle H. Ballou, National Council of Churches of Christ, said economic aid programs should be expanded and shaped by social rather than primarily military needs.

Peter Weiss, American Committee on Africa, said economic aid to underdeveloped countries should be channelled through the United Nations. He said that a multinational aid program by Western bloc nations would not end African leaders' fears of "neo-colonialism".

March 14 -- Gen. Charles A. Willoughby (ret.), former intelligence chief to Gen. Douglas MacArthur, representing the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, said U.S. military aid should be limited to support of fighting divisions, "not nebulous forces in the rear." He said Norstad "knows the air but he does not know the ground" and has settled on a "spurious estimate" of ground forces needed in Europe, with the result that Western divisions were outnumbered three to one. More forces should be provided by the European nations themselves, and the savings to the U.S. should be applied to building up the United States' own missile armament, he said.

Mrs. William D. Leetch, American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, opposed the Development Loan Fund because the majority of loans "are nothing but concealed grants". She said the accumulation of over-large sums of inconvertible soft currencies by the U.S. under DLF repayment terms would result in problems for the borrowing countries and the U.S. and lead to charges of U.S. economic imperialism.

SUEZ CANAL ISSUE

Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein, American Israel Public Affairs Committee, said the U.S. had "involuntarily become implicated in the Arab boycott" against Israel by helping the United Arab Republic improve the Suez Canal while it was closed to Israeli traffic. He supported U.S. economic assistance to both Arabs and Israelis, but not in ways that could be used to further one country's "war against another".

Dr. Marion Spector, American Assn. of University Women, supported increased technical and development assistance and said the U.S. should help the developing countries take advantage of American education.

March 15 -- G. Lewis Jones, Assistant Secretary of State for the Middle East and South Asia, said it would be a delusion to expect early settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute. He supported a $25 million U.S. contribution to the United Nations Palestine refugee program. He said that while the U.S. supported "freedom of transit for all ships", problems of the barring of Israeli shipping from the Suez Canal could best be tackled through the United Nations.

(On Dec. 21, 1959, 66 Representatives had sent telegrams to Eugene Black, president of the International Bank for reconstruction and development, protesting a proposed $56 million loan to the United Arab Republic for development of the Suez Canal. The Representatives, of whom nearly half came from New York and New Jersey, asked Black to postpone the loan until the UAR insured freedom of navigation through the canal. The loan was also criticized by Sens. Stephen Young (D Ohio), Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.). The Bank nevertheless announced Dec. 22 that the arrangements had been completed.

HOUSE REPORT

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- March 14 -- The House Foreign Affairs Committee Special Study Mission to Asia, the Western Pacific, Middle East, Southern Europe and North Africa issued a report (H Rept 1386) on its 1959 tour. Conclusions on economic aid:

- A realistic reappraisal of the U.S. aid program was "immediately necessary" and "greater supervision should be given to its operation." Dams and fertilizer plants "might bring ultimate benefit" but there was a "strikingly dangerous gap between such grandiose projects at the top and the millions of human beings still starving..." The group listed as one "costly" and "unrealistic project" a highway program in Vietnam which grew from an $18.3 million original estimate to a present cost estimate of $85-100 million.
- The U.S. should vigorously support transit of Israelis and Israeli goods through the Suez Canal.
- Philippines -- Subcommittee members were "startled and shocked to find an increase in lawlessness and of Government corruption that was more than hinted at."
- In order to aid the economy of Morocco, "some satisfactory substitute" must be found for the U.S. payments for airbases to be evacuated by the end of 1963.

In additional views, Rep. Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) said the report gave "too little recognition" to the "over-all success of the program". Rep. Harris B. McDowell Jr. (D Del.) said the Mutual Security Program was an over-all success but carried an "unnecessary burden of criticism" because the International Cooperation Administration did not act to correct maladministration. McDowell later told reporters the ICA was used by the Administration as a "dumping ground for political patronage", resulting in "waste and poor planning".

March 11 -- The nine nations comprising the Development Assistance group concluded their three-day initial meeting in Washington, D.C. In a communique, the group said members would try to increase assistance to underdeveloped countries. The nine were Belgium, Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Portugal, Japan and the United States.

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Committee April 7 reported the Mutual Security Act of 1960 (HR 11510 -- H Rept 1464), recommending $1,318,400,000 in new authorizations. This was a cut of $136.5 million from the President's request, distributed as follows: $12.5 million was cut from the President's $268.5 million request for special assistance; $75 million from his $175 million request for the contingency fund; and $49 million from his $724 million request for defense support funds. Together with the $2,720,100,000 in authorizations already available from previous years, the $1,318,400,000 provided in the Committee bill made $4,038,500,000 in authorizations available for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1961.

The Committee bill specified that no cut made in special assistance funds should be applied against a $20 million program for African education.

Another provision, drafted and introduced in Committee by Rep. Leonard Farbstein (D N.Y.), in effect threatened to cut off economic aid to the United Arab Republic if it did not permit Israeli ships to travel through the Suez Canal.

The Committee's vote to report the bill was 18-5, with Reps. E. Ross Adair (R Ind.), Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.), Omar Burleson (D Texas), Marguerite Stitt Church (R Ill.) and John L. Pilcher (D Ga.) voting against. Rep. Laurence Curtis (R Mass.) voted "present".

The report said that despite "a number of instances of waste", there was "encouraging evidence" that the program was "attaining its major objectives". It noted improvements made in the program as a result of Congressional recommendations, but expressed disappointment over the success of the office of the Inspector General and Comptroller established by Congress in 1959 to oversee the program, and said further Committee action would be taken unless the Inspector General "demonstrates the effectiveness of his operations" in the future.

The Committee said it concluded that the U.S. unfavorable balance of payments and recent outflow of gold "have not been caused by the Mutual Security Program" and the program had "only a minor direct influence" on the balance of payments. It said the expenditures under the program should be based on the need to defend security and establish satisfactory U.S. relations abroad, rather than on payment deficits or gold outflow.

The Committee also disputed arguments that the program had large unexpended or unobligated funds left over from previous years, and said the fiscal status of the program compared favorably with that of other Government agencies and was "considerably better" than many.

CHANGES PROPOSED

The Committee reported on specific sections of the program as follows:

Restrictions on Navigation -- The U.S. has "not done as effective a job as it should" in urging the removal of restrictions on shipping through the Suez Canal. The Committee proposed an amendment expressing the sense of Congress that the U.S. favored freedom of navigation in international waterways and that the purposes of the Mutual Security Act and the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 were negated when countries receiving assistance waged economic warfare against other nations receiving assistance. The amendment required that the two Acts be administered so as "to give effect to these principles", but left their specific application to the determination of the President.

Indus Basin Development -- This project could "mark a turning point in the history of South Asia," the Committee said. It approved an Administration request clearing the way for U.S. participation in the project through the World Bank.

Development Loan Fund -- The Committee proposed an amendment barring loans of more than $100,000 for a project in any country unless sufficient engineering and other data indicated the project would be economically and technically sound.

"Point Four Youth Corps" -- The Administration has "not taken vigorous action" in the use of volunteer young people such as technically qualified young people with farm backgrounds, in overseas operations. The Committee said it planned to make a comprehensive study of the possibilities of this in this field.

Special Assistance -- In cutting $12.5 million from the President's request in this category, the Committee said the new $20 million program for Africa should be carried out in full and that special assistance for Israel should be maintained at the fiscal 1960 level.

Loans to Small Farmers -- The Committee proposed an amendment expressing a U.S. policy of extending up to $10 million in loans to cooperative associations of small farmers to increase agricultural productivity and encourage local self-help programs in rural underdeveloped nations.

Administrative Provisions -- The Committee proposed an amendment limiting flood control, reclamation and similar projects to those in which the benefits would exceed the costs of the program, as a means of encouraging "sounder" and comprehensive advance planning. Another proposal would relieve the Inspector General and Comptroller of planning the annual presentation of the Mutual Security Program presentation to Congress so that he could concentrate wholly on overseeing its operations.

Aid to Cuba -- The Committee proposed an amendment ending assistance to Cuba except when the President determined such aid would be in the U.S. interest, but said the measure was "not indicative of a lessening of our traditional friendship for the people of Cuba."

OTHER VIEWS

● Supplemental Views -- Rep. Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.) said the Mutual Security Program was "here to stay" and he supported it, but he felt it was "overdue for a complete review" and should place more emphasis on economic aid and less on the "topheavy military programs now being undertaken". He said the "soft" currencies which the mutual security and other programs were generating for the U.S. throughout the world were "far in excess of the absorptive capacities" of certain countries, and threatened them with inflation if spent. (For story on this issue and country-by-country breakdown of funds, see p. 223)

MINORITY VIEWS

● Minority Views -- Reps. John L. Pilcher (D Ga.), Marguerite Stitt Church (R Ill.) and E. Ross Adair (R Ind.) said the "entrenched, self-perpetuating bureaucracy" administering the program was "still growing in size, power and inefficiency" and said it was not the "new imaginative program" needed to further the aims of the U.S. They said there should be a smaller number of more carefully selected projects and less emphasis on "meeting the personal desires of the political leaders of the recipient countries" and more on meeting the needs of the people. They said the creation of the Development Loan Fund, had not resulted in an expected appreciable reduction in grant assistance. The "open-end" authorization for military assistance voted in 1959 was a "serious mistake" and should be abandoned, the three Members said.

Floor Action

The House April 21, by a 243-131 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of HR 11510, authorizing the amount the Committee had recommended, $1,318,400,000, but changing some of the legislative provisions. (For voting, see chart p. 434)

Debate on the measure began April 20 when the House adopted by voice vote the rule (H Res 502) providing for its consideration.

A recommittal motion by Marguerite Stitt Church (R Ill.) was rejected by voice vote April 21 and an amendment by Mrs. Church to set up a joint Congressional committee to act as a watchdog over the program was ruled out of order.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, the funds authorized by HR 11510, the Mutual Security Act of 1960, were:

Economic assistance
Defense support	$ 675,000,000
Technical cooperation	206,500,000
Special assistance	256,000,000
Other programs	80,900,000
President's contingency fund	100,000,000
TOTAL	$1,318,400,000

The bill also contained the following legislative provisions (those marked by an asterisk (*) were not included in the later Senate version and went to conference after the Senate passed the bill):

Required that the Mutual Security Act and the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 83-480) be administered "to give effect" to the principles that the U.S. favors freedom of navigation in international waterways and that the purposes of the Mutual Security Act are "negated and the peace of the world is endangered" when countries receiving assistance wage economic warfare against other nations receiving assistance. Specific application of the principles was left to the determination of the President, who "shall report on measures taken...to insure their application".

* Expressed the sense of Congress that no special assistance funds be used by any nation in the Near East to purchase arms.

* Directed that the Development Loan Fund not earmark or commit funds in excess of $50,000 for any country unless the Fund received an application supported by engineering or other data which indicated how the money would be used, and that its use would be practicable and economically and technically sound. An exception was made for multilateral programs where the President personally determined that earmarking or committing of funds was in the national interest.

Affirmed the willingness of the U.S. to participate in the Indus Basin Development program, and for this purpose (1) waived fiscal requirements of other acts to facilitate U.S. participation through the World Bank; (2) waived requirements of the Merchant Marine Act that at least 50 percent of foreign aid goods be shipped in American flag vessels, but stipulated that any deviation from the Act be compensated by shipping a commensurate amount of foreign aid goods in U.S. vessels to the same geographical area for other puposes.

* Expressed a U.S. policy of extending loans to cooperative associations of small farmers in rural underdeveloped nations, with unpaid balances not to exceed $10 million in the aggregate and $25,000 for any association.

* Required that non-military flood control, reclamation and similar projects be examined by qualified engineers, that a determination of their cost be submitted to Congress, and that such a project not be undertaken unless benefits are determined to exceed costs and the projects meet requirements of similar programs in the U.S.

* Relieved the mutual security Inspector General and Comptroller of prescribing the financial and statistical content of the annual presentation of the program to Congress.

* Barred further assistance to Cuba except when the President determined such aid would be in the national interest.

* Authorized grants of surplus agricultural commodities under PL 480 to promote economic development in underdeveloped areas.

* Abolished the International Development Advisory Board.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

April 21 -- Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.) -- Require the Administration to make documents and other data on the program available to Congress and the General Accounting Office when desired. Voice vote

John H. Kyl (R Iowa), as amended by Hardy -- Reduce from $100,000 to $50,000 the ceiling above which DLF loans must be based on applications indicating their economic and technical soundness. Voice.

Hardy, as amended by A.S.J. Carnahan (D Mo.) -- Bring the earmarking, committing or setting aside of DLF money for loans over $50,000 under the applications criteria and require a "personal" Presidential determination of exceptions. Voice.

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Abolish the International Development Advisory Board. Voice.

Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.) -- Delete extra words in committee amendment opposing use of special assistance funds by Near East nations to purchase arms. Voice.

George P. Miller (D Calif.) -- Provide for commensurate U.S. flag shipping allowances under other foreign aid programs to compensate for waiver of shipping requirements for the Indus Basin Development program. Voice.

James C. Davis (D Ga.) -- Deny four new "supergrade" posts in the U.S. for programs authorized by the Act. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Bentley -- Terminate the open-end military assistance authorization with the fiscal 1961 program. Voice.

William H. Meyer (D Vt.) -- Prohibit use of mutual security funds to implement NATO atomic weapons-sharing agreements. Standing, 11-46.

E. Ross Adair (R Ind.) -- Reduce defense support authorization to $625 million. Voice.

Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio) -- Bar aid to Yugoslavia. Standing, 36-62.

Leonard G. Wolf (D Iowa) -- Allow the President, upon request of the United Nations Secretary General, to purchase up to $250 million in surplus agricultural commodities from the Commodity Credit Corp. and supply them to underdeveloped countries through the U.N. Standing, 46-93.

John D. Dingell (D Mich.) -- Amend Wolf amendment so as to supply American needy first. Voice.

Bob Casey (D Texas) -- Extend aid only to nations which levy individual, corporate and other taxes proportional to taxes levied in the U.S. Standing, 36-89.

J. Edward Roush (D Ind.) -- Remove secrecy classification from documents presenting non-military portions of the program to Congress. Voice.

Kyl -- Require specific authorization by Congress for all flood control or reclamation projects costing more than $1 million. Voice.

Roush -- Require the Administration to present budgets to Congress for the total mutual security program in each country and adhere to such budgets. Voice.

Gross -- Require that not less than 25 percent of funds in the bill be used to purchase U.S. surplus commodities for distribution to the needy abroad. Standing, 60-101.

DEBATE -- April 20 -- Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) -- The question is not "whether we are to continue the Mutual Security Program.... It is how to make the program more effective and how much is necessary."

Chester Bowles (D Conn.) -- "I think one reason there is a great deal of confusion about this program is the fact we have been given superficial, short-run reasons for what must be a broad, long-term program.... In foreign aid, as in foreign policy generally, we have one central overriding objective: the creation and maintenance all over the non-Communist world of free societies dedicated to providing growing opportunities for their own people to make their own decisions in determining their own future."

Albert H. Bosch (R N.Y.) -- "I am firmly convinced that this program should be terminated; for the experiences of the past have amply demonstrated that we can neither buy friends, goodwill nor peace."

James A. Haley (D Fla.) -- Though knowing that the House again will "pass a measure approving the pouring of billions of dollars down the drainpipes of foreign nations, I am more confident than ever that when I oppose continuation of this program, I am speaking the will of the people of this country."

April 21 -- John W. McCormack (D Mass.) -- "We need strong allies and friends to constitute a collective defense system necessary for peace and for our own national interest.... We must avoid the impression that neutral countries are wooed, and that friendly nations are to be taken for granted."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARINGS -- March 22-31 on the Senate version (S 3058) of the Mutual Security Act of 1960. Highlights of testimony:

March 24 -- Joseph C. Satterthwaite, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, said the proposed $20-million special assistance program for education in Africa was in response to a need for a "fresh" approach which would be responsive to changing African needs. He said the program should "avoid competition with large-scale assistance from Europe" while stimulating a higher level of such assistance, and "avoid getting into a position of annual aid...negotiations with many new countries pressing for external assistance." He said $115 million was requested for special assistance for Africa, primarily for Morocco, Tunisia and Libya, and $24.3 million for technical cooperation. Satterthwaite said these were "conservative and minimal" figures, considering the continent's needs. He said an additional $18.2 million was requested for military assistance to strengthen the "internal security" of Libya, Morocco, Tunisia, Liberia and Ethiopia.

March 25 -- G. Lewis Jones, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs, said the fiscal 1961 request for this area included $457.9 million in military assistance, almost wholly for use in Greece, Turkey, Iran and Pakistan, and $345.3 million for economic assistance other than that granted by the Development Loan Fund. He said "no one country or group of countries can preempt the aid field" and it would be "inconsistent" to say that Communist aid "would not be an addition to a country's economy simply because Communist loans financed them and Communist engineers built them", but "we advise the receiving states to be wary and vigilant...." Referring to the proposed $1-billion, 10-year Indus Basin irrigation plan in Pakistan and India, he said the World Bank, which planned to administer the international financing, had suggested a U.S. contribution of $177 million in grant aid, $103 million in loans, and $235 million in local currencies derived from U.S. programs in Pakistan.

John M. Steeves, Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, said a "grave imbalance of power" existed in the Far East and it was "our contervailing presence which redresses this imbalance". He said Communist China could be expected to maintain pressures and tensions in the area as part of its continuing strategy, and any signs of weakness on the part of the U.S. would have "grievous effects". The total 1961 request for the Far East was $1,231,000,000 including $692 million for military assistance and $539 million for economic and technical assistance, the latter including $493 million for defense support, primarily for Korea, Vietnam and Formosa. Steeves said he hoped the "crash programs" resulting from the "crisis atmosphere" of the 1950s would be replaced by "the long haul of patient economic development".

March 28 -- Roy R. Rubottom Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, said the 1961 request for Latin America included $49 million for military assistance, $18 million to finance credit sales of military equipment, $39.5 million for technical cooperation, $23.1 million for special assistance for Bolivia and Haiti, and $1.5 million for the technical cooperation program of the Organization of American States. He said the Administration was considering establishing an Inter-American defense force, but this would require a special treaty and would have to be accepted by the other OAS countries.

Vance Brand, managing director, Development Loan Fund, said that as of Jan. 31, 1960, the DLF had approved 118 loans and guarantees in 43 countries, totalling $958 million out of $1.4 billion available in the fund. He said the additional $700 million requested would permit lending activity in additional countries and an expansion of support for U.S. private capital abroad. He said this would further the objective of ultimately reducing the need for direct aid grants. He said the "buy-America" policy announced Oct. 20, 1959 was designed primarily to encourage other industrialized nations to "finance their own exports to the less-developed areas".

March 30 -- The League of Women Voters and National Farmers Union supported the budget requests. Americans for Democratic Action and the American Veterans' Committee urged increases in economic aid.

March 31 -- N.R. Danielian, International Economic Policy Assn., said aid programs should encourage development of a middle class in recipient countries. Mrs. Paul Blanshard, Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice, said the U.S. should persuade Generalissimo Francisco Franco to reestablish human liberties in Spain, and "if we are not strong enough to do this we should not give Spain any money at all." Dr. John A. Wilson, National Committee for the Rescue of Monuments of Nubia, urged provision of funds to rescue 21 ancient temples which would be flooded by the Aswan Dam project in the United Arab Republic.

SENATE BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Foreign Relations Committee April 22 reported the Senate version of the Mutual Security Act of 1960 (S 3058 -- S Rept 1286). There was no formal roll call in Committee, but Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) said Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) asked to be recorded against the bill.

The bill as reported authorized $1,425,500,00, compared with $1,454,900,000 requested by the President and $1,318,400,000 voted by the House.

On a program-by-program basis, the Committee gave the President the full $175 million he requested for the contingency fund and the full $206.5 million he asked for technical assistance, cut his defense support request of $724 million to $700 million, his special assistance request of $268.5 million to $260 million, but raised authorizations for other programs from the $80.9 million request to $84 million (by authorizing more for Palestine refugee relief than requested).

With some exceptions, legislative provisions of S 3058 were largely similar to those of the House bill, HR 11510. The Senate Committee bill, however, did not contain freedom of navigation language touching on the Arab-Israeli Suez Canal dispute.

Before reporting S 3058, the Committee rejected amendments offered by Sen. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) to abolish ICA as a separate agency and turn its functions over to the State Department; and by Sen. Frank Church (D Idaho) to limit military assistance to $1.8 billion.

Floor Action

The Senate May 2, by a 60-25 roll-call vote, passed and sent to conference an amended version of the Mutual Security Act of 1960 (HR 11510). Senate debate, which began April 27, actually involved the bill that had been reported by the Foreign Relations Committee (S 3058). The House title was appended to the Senate provisions just before final passage. (For voting, see chart p.492)

As passed by the Senate, the bill authorized $1,405,500,000 -- exactly $20 million less than recommended by the Committee. The $20 million was cut from the contingency fund, which was reduced from $175 million to $155 million on a floor amendment offered May 2 by Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) and agreed to on a 48-40 roll call.

Altogether there were 21 roll-call votes on the bill, including the vote on passage. Among the more important votes (for voting on amendments, see charts, p. 489-492):

- A "freedom of navigation" amendment similar to the House provision was offered as a floor amendment April 28 by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and 18 others. The amendment was agreed to on a 45-25 roll call, and a motion to reconsider the Douglas amendment was tabled by a 40-29 roll-call vote. On May 2, Foreign Relations Chairman Fulbright, who called the Douglas amendment's passage "irresponsible," offered his own amendment, designed to soften the effect of the Douglas language, but the Fulbright amendment was tabled on a 45-39 roll call. In discussing the "freedom of navigation" language, Fulbright read a letter from Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon saying there might be "harmful repercussions" on U.S. interests in the Middle East.

President Eisenhower did not comment on either the original Douglas Suez amendment or the Fulbright modification, but he told his April 27 news conference that "we have done everything we could" to impress on the United Arab Republic that free use of the canal should be granted, and that he had no further plans for action.

- An amendment approved by a 68-0 roll-call vote April 27, sponsored by Sens. John J. Williams (R Del.) and William Proxmire (D Wis.), required all Congressional committees to file annual public reports listing, by individuals, both dollar and counterpart funds spent by Members of Congress and committee staff members for overseas travel. Existing law required the committees to report only their consolidated expenditures of counterpart funds. President Eisenhower said in 1956 that he believed that information on the spending of public funds by Members of Congress should be made available to the public.
- An amendment offered April 28 by Sens. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) and Francis Case (R S.D.), and agreed to by a 45-38 roll-call vote, struck from the bill lanaguage permitting grants of surplus agricultural commodities to promote economic development overseas.
- Amendments offered by Hawaii's two Senators and by Sen. George A. Smathers (D Fla.) April 28, and agreed to by voice vote and a 71-5 roll-call vote, respectively, provided for establishing an East-West technical and cultural center in Hawaii and drawing up plans for a hemispheric cultural center in Puerto Rico.
- An amendment offered by Sen. Frank Church (D Idaho) to limit military assistance to $1.8 billion was rejected April 27 by a 27-32 roll call vote.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, the funds authorized by HR 11510 were:

Economic assistance
Defense support	$ 700,000,000
Technical cooperation	206,500,000
Special assistance	260,000,000
Other programs	84,000,000
President's contingency fund	155,000,000
TOTAL	$1,405,500,000

The bill also contained the following legislative provisions (those marked by an asterisk (*) were not included in the version of the bill passed by the House earlier):

Required that the Mutual Security Act and the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 83-480) be administered "to give effect" to the principles that the U.S. favors freedom of navigation in international waterways and that the purposes of the Mutual Security Act are "negated and the peace of the world is endangered" when countries receiving assistance wage economic warfare against other nations receiving assistance. Specific application of the principles was left to the determination of the President, who "shall report on measures taken...to insure their application".

Affirmed the willingness of the U.S. to participate in the Indus Basin Development program, and for this purpose (1) waived fiscal requirements of the Mutual Security Act and other acts to facilitate U.S. participation through the World Bank; (2) waived requirements of the Merchant Marine Act that at least 50 percent of foreign aid goods be shipped in American flag vessels.

* Required Congressional committees to file annual itemized public statements on dollar and counterpart funds spent on trips abroad by individual Members of Congress and committee staff members.

* Allowed use of U.S.-owned foreign currencies for health and education projects abroad without specific appropriation and for grants to teachers of foreign languages in American schools and colleges for summer training in countries where the language they teach is spoken.

* Permitted the President, subject to the approval of Congress, to use U.S.-owned foreign currencies to pay up to one-third the cost of an internationally financed program to preserve the cultural monuments of the Upper Nile, provided that he finds such participation would promote U.S. foreign policy and is satisfied that other nations or organizations will pay the remaining costs.

* Placed a $55 million annual ceiling on military assistance grant and credit aid to Latin America.

* Required the Administration, in its annual mutual security presentation to Congress, to present clear, detailed explanations of country-by-country force objectives for military assistance, along with cost projections for maintaining and modernizing these objectives.

* Reworded purposes of the Development Loan Fund to emphasize agricultural as well as industrial development and to encourage the making of loans to stimulate private investment and the development of "free economic institutions".

* Urged Development Loan Fund participation in self-liquidating pilot housing projects in Latin America through (1) investment guarantees for U.S. private capital made available for such projects; and (2) provision of capital for the establishment of Latin American savings and loan institutions.

* Directed the President to undertake a study of possibilities for coordinating federal agencies dealing in foreign economic activities and present his findings as part of the fiscal 1962 program.

Facilitated barter arrangements, by permitting commodities, equipment and materials transferred to the U.S. as payment for loans and assistance to be reused by the U.S. for assistance under terms of the Act.

* Authorized payment for overland transportation of relief supplies to landlocked countries, in addition to water transportation paid for under existing law.

* Limited Palestine refugee relief on the basis of ration cards to refugees whose need and eligibility has been certified after July 1, 1960.

* Required the President in his fiscal 1962 mutual security proposals to make specific recommendations with respect to a program for the repatriation and resettlement of refugees and for reduction of U.S. contributions to the UN Palestine refugee relief program.

* Empowered ambassadors to pay U.S. and foreign personnel in local currencies when they decided this would prevent black market activities (would not apply to any portion of pay sent to the U.S. for deposit).

* Amended the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948 to authorize matching grants to U.S. colleges and universities of up to $1 million a year in the aggregate and $100 per foreign student enrolled, to provide foreign students with orientation, counseling and English-language training.

* Directed the President to arrange for a non-governmental study of the advisability of establishing a Point Four Youth Corps.

* Established a Center for Cultural and Technical Interchange in Hawaii and authorized appropriations for federal participation in the project.

* Authorized the Secretary of State to draw up plans for a western hemisphere cultural center in Puerto Rico for submission to Congress by Jan. 3, 1961.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

April 27 -- John J. Williams (R Del.) and William Proxmire (D Wis.) -- Require annual itemized public statements on dollar and counterpart funds spent on trips abroad by individual Members of Congress and committee staff members. Roll-call vote, 68-0.

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Allow use of U.S.-owned foreign currencies for grants to foreign language teachers in American schools and colleges to enable them to take advanced summer training in countries where the language they are teaching is spoken. Voice vote.

April 28 -- Oren E. Long (D Hawaii) and Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) -- Establish a Center for Cultural and Technical Interchange between East and West in Hawaii and authorize such appropriations as may be necessary for federal participation in the project. Voice.

George A. Smathers (D Fla.) -- Authorize the Secretary of State to draw up plans for establishing a hemispheric cultural center in Puerto Rico for submission to Congress by Jan. 3, 1961. Roll call, 71-5.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and 18 others -- Reaffirm U.S. support of freedom of navigation in international waterways, state that the purposes of the Act are negated and world peace endangered when recipient countries wage economic warfare against other recipient countries, and direct the President to apply these principles under the Mutual Security Act and the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480) as he "may determine" and report on measures thereby taken. Roll call, 45-25.

May 2 -- Allen J. Ellender (D La.) as amended by Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Delete provision authorizing grants of surplus agricultural commodities to promote economic development in underdeveloped areas. Roll-call vote, 45-38.

Ellender -- Ensure that any reimbursement of the Defense Department for excess military equipment used for military assistance to Latin America not exceed the usual value placed on such equipment. Voice.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Reduce the President's contingency fund authorization from $175 million to $155 million. Roll call, 48-40.

Ellender -- Delete authorization of six new supergrade jobs in the U.S. for administration of the program. Standing.

Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) -- Permit use of foreign currencies for health and education projects without specific appropriations. Voice.

Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Require the President to satisfy himself that other nations or organizations will meet two-thirds of the project's cost before U.S.-owned foreign currencies may be used to preserve cultural monuments in the Nile basin. Voice.

Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) -- Require detailed explanations and cost projections of country-by-country military assistance force objectives. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

April 28 -- John Marshall Butler (R Md.) -- Strike out the proposed waiver, for purposes of the Indus Basin Development project, of the requirement under the Merchant Marine Act that at least 50 percent of foreign aid goods be carried by American flag vessels. Roll call, 33-44.

Butler -- Require that in cases where the 50 percent shipping requirement is waived for the Indus Basin Development project, a commensurate amount of foreign aid goods be carried in American vessels for other projects in the same geographical area. Roll call, 32-44.

Frank Church (D Idaho) -- Place a ceiling of $1.8 billion on fiscal 1961 military assistance. Roll call, 27-32.

May 2 -- Gruening -- Require that non-military flood control, reclamation and similar projects meet the engineering and cost standards of U.S. projects. Roll call, 40-45.

Gruening -- Require separate Congressional authorizations for each public works project costing $1 million or more. Roll call, 32-52.

Ellender -- Delete provision for reuse, as mutual security assistance, of commodities, equipment and materials transferred to the U.S. as payment for loans and assistance. Roll call, 28-57.

Ellender -- Limit President's use of the contingency fund to situations entirely unforeseen or not sufficiently foreseen to justify advance programming. Roll call, 43-43. (Motion to reconsider tabled, 45-44, with Vice President casting tie-breaking vote.)

Ellender -- Limit U.S. contribution to the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East to the regular scale under which the U.S. is assessed for the U.N. budget. Voice.

Ellender -- Delete provision for increasing from $2,750,000 to $4,250,000 the ceiling on amounts available for providing living quarters and other facilities for personnel in foreign countries excluding Korea. Roll call, 38-49.

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- Require that at least 35 percent of mutual security commodities be purchased in the U.S. Standing.

Lausche -- Delete provisions to stimulate development of self-liquidating pilot housing projects in Latin America through the Development Loan Fund. Roll call, 26-60.

Lausche -- Delete provision for preserving cultural monuments on the Upper Nile. Roll call, 40-44.

Gruening -- Require submission to Congress within 90 days after enactment of the Act of detailed country-by-country budget for expenditure of defense support, technical cooperation and special assistance funds. Roll call, 29-54.

J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- Excuse the President from applying freedom of navigation principles in situations where nations receiving assistance are engaged in actions detrimental to United Nations efforts to maintain peace and security, and application of the principles would, in the judgment of the President, constitute partiality. Amendment tabled by roll call, 45-39.

DEBATE ON THE SUEZ AMENDMENT -- April 29 -- Fulbright -- The freedom of navigation amendment would use the Mutual Security Act as a "club to force the United Arab Republic to open the Suez Canal to Israeli shipping"; it was offered "because of the existence of a pressure group in the United States which seeks to inject the Arab-Israeli dispute into domestic politics".

May 2 -- Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- Pressure groups have accomplished "effective and worthwhile actions" throughout U.S. history. "I yield to no man in my admiration for the State of Israel" and in "my dedication to the preservation of principles of international law."

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- The Senate has voted to convert the Mutual Security Act into a "weapon of unilateral economic sanctions as a substitute for concerted international action by the United Nations.... I think it is unfortunate today" to demonstrate to the world "such a theory of dollar diplomacy...."

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- "I think the time has come for us to make perfectly clear to the Arab countries that we are not going to be blackmailed by them any longer...."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- May 5 -- Protest picketing of the UAR ship Cleopatra was ended in New York by the Seafarers International Union (AFL-CIO). The picket line had blocked unloading of the ship since April 13, but was removed when AFL-CIO President George Meany intervened on State Department assurances that diplomatic action would be taken to end the Arab blacklisting of U.S. ships which put in at Israeli ports. The SIU's action had provoked counter-boycotts in the UAR and had resulted in diverting 10 U.S. ships from Arab ports. SIU President David Hall warned that picketing would be resumed if the State Department failed to give "practical implementation" to its pledge to prevent blacklisting.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate and House conferees May 6 agreed on a conference report (H Rept 1593) recommending $1,366,200,000, which was $88.7 million less than requested by the President, $39.3 million less than voted initially by the Senate but $47.8 million more than voted by the House. On a program-by-program basis, the final version authorized $675 million for defense support, $206.5 million for technical cooperation, $256 million for special assistance, $150 million for the President's contingency fund and $78.7 million for other programs.

On legislative differences, the conferees took the following action on provisions added to the bill by the Senate: retained wording providing for Development Loan Fund stimulation of private business and emphasis on agricultural development; retained the Point Four Youth Corps study; retained provisions on Hawaiian and Puerto Rican education centers; retained provisions on payment of overland transport and paying U.S. employees overseas in local currencies; retained the directive for a Presidential study of ways to coordinate the work of different U.S. agencies administering foreign aid; compromised House and Senate language on reports to Congress by the Executive and on waiving the requirement that 50 percent of goods shipped for the Indus River Basin project be carried in U.S. ships; retained with changes provisions on reporting by Congressional committees and Members on dollar and counterpart funds spent for junkets, and on Palestine refugee relief; authorized the President merely to recommend a policy to Congress on possible expenditures to preserve the Upper Nile monuments, without committing the U.S. to spend anything; made the limit on military assistance to Latin America $55 million for military hardware; dropped specific language on Latin-American pilot housing projects; and dropped provisions permitting use of foreign currencies without appropriation for health and education overseas and for training U.S. teachers abroad in foreign languages.

On major House provisions that were not in the version of the bill passed by the Senate, the conferees: deleted language on arms aid to Near Eastern nations; retained with some changes the $50,000 limit on DLF activities in any one country; accepted the provision on loans for small farmers' cooperatives; accepted, but only for one year, wording permitting use of PL 480 food surplus grants to promote economic development overseas; accepted the language cutting off funds to Cuba except if the President thought such aid was needed; accepted a provision abolishing the International Development Advisory Board; and accepted application of U.S. standards for water projects overseas financed by the

ACTION -- The House May 12, by a 240-138 roll-call vote, and the Senate May 12, by voice vote, agreed to the conference report, clearing the bill for the President. (For voting, see chart p. 444)

MEASURE SIGNED

After signing HR 11510 into PL 86-472, May 14, President Eisenhower issued a statement saying he was highly gratified by the action of the Congress on this measure. "The Act embodies essentially all of the requests I have put forward as necessary for the successful continuation of the Mutual Security Program, and, with one regrettable exception, the Congress has resisted the addition of amendments which would adversely affect our foreign relations or impair the administration of the program." This was a reference to the Suez amendment.

MUTUAL SECURITY FUNDS

HR 12619 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee June 13, 1960 (H Rept 1798). Recommended appropriation: $3,384,500,000 for mutual security, $5,250,000 for other programs.

- Passed by the House, amended, by a 259-124 roll-call vote June 17. (See p. 456) Voted: $3,584,500,000 for mutual security, $5,250,000 for other programs.
- Reported by Senate Appropriations Committee Aug. 19 (S Rept 1849). Recommended: $3,981,350,000 for mutual security, $7,704,000 for other programs.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 67-26 roll-call vote Aug. 24. (See p. 516) Voted: same as recommended.
- Conference report (H Rept 2164) agreed to Aug. 26 by voice vote of the House and by 57-24 roll-call vote of the Senate. (See p. 517)

PL 86-704 -- Signed into law Sept. 2. Final total: $3,716,350,000 for mutual security, $6,000,000 for other programs.

Against President Eisenhower's request for $4,250,000,000, Congress appropriated $3,781,350,000 for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1961.

The appropriation was made in two stages. The larger portion, $3,716,350,000, was carried in the regular fiscal 1961 mutual security funds bill (HR 12619 -- PL 86-704), which was cleared for the President Aug. 26. (The bill also carried $6 million for Army administration of the Ryukyu Islands.) As Congress was taking final action on HR 12619, the President sent an urgent plea to Congress asking restoration of some of the funds cut from his requests; the request was turned down.

Three days later, however, the Senate Aug. 29, in acting on the Second Supplemental Appropriations bill (HR 13161), inserted $190 million for mutual security; of this, $65 million was for defense support, $22 million for technical cooperation, $26 million for special assistance, $2 million for administrative expenses and $75 million for the Development Loan Fund.

The House, following a House-Senate conference, agreed to accept only the $65 million for defense support. This $65 million carried in the final version of HR 13161, together with the $3,716,350,000 in the regular mutual security appropriation bill (HR 12619), made a total of $3,781,350,000 for mutual security in fiscal 1961. (For action on mutual security authorization bill, HR 11510, and comparison of Presidential requests, authorizations and appropriations by program, see p. 166; for HR 13161, see p. 405)

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law (PL 86-704), HR 12619 provided the following funds for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1961:

Military assistance	$1,800,000,000
Defense support	610,000,000
Development Loan Fund	550,000,000
Technical cooperation
General authorization	150,000,000
United Nations	33,000,000
Organization of American States	1,300,000
President's contingency fund	250,000,000
Special assistance
General	230,000,000
Special (Krakow Hosipital)	1,500,000
General administrative expenses	38,000,000
United Nations
Refugee program	1,300,000
Children's Fund	12,000,000
Relief and Works Agency	16,500,000
Other programs
Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration	6,700,000
Escapee program	3,350,000
Ocean freight charges	2,000,000
NATO science program	1,200,000
State Department administrative expenses	8,000,000
Atoms for peace	1,500,000
Subtotal	$3,716,350,000
OTHER FUNDS
Ryukyu Islands administration (Army)	6,000,000

In addition, the bill:

Required the President, within 60 days of the enactment of HR 12619, to submit to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees a full report on the allotment of funds provided in the bill; directed that, within 30 days after approval of any further change in the program which amounted to more than $1 million or 5 percent of the amount appropriated for any part of the program, whichever was less, the President must submit to the Committees a full report on the change and the reason for it.

Prohibited the spending of any Mutual Security funds, except those for military assistance, if any Administration agency handling Mutual Security funds failed, within 35 days, to furnish documents requested by Congressional committees or the General Accounting Office unless the President certified that he had forbidden their disclosure.

Earmarked $35 million in defense support funds for Spain.

Reiterated Congress' opposition to the seating of Communist China in the United Nations, but, in the event it were seated, directed the President to inform Congress on foreign policy implications involved.

Declared it the sense of Congress that any discrimination in foreign countries against U.S. citizens because of their race or religion "generally is repugnant to our principles."

Provided $1.5 million for the purchase of local currencies for hospital construction in Krakow, Poland.

Prohibited the use of fiscal 1961 funds for activities under the Investment Incentive Program.

Authorized the President to bar foreign aid to any country directly or indirectly lending military or economic aid to Cuban Premier Fidel Castro's regime unless the withholding of such aid would be contrary to the national interest.

Authorized the President to bar funds to any country directly or indirectly selling arms to any Latin American country against which economic or diplomatic sanctions have been imposed by the Organization of American States unless the withholding of such aid would be contrary to the national interest.

Prohibited the use of funds under the technical cooperation program for projects not justified to Congress.

Also prohibited the use of fiscal 1961 funds for the following:

Contributions to the U.N. for a program in any country in Africa in excess of 40 percent of the total contributions to the U.N. for such program.

Direct assistance in the migration to any nation in the Western Hemisphere of persons not having security clearances based on standards insuring against Communist infiltration.

Any new flood control, reclamation or other water or related land resource project which did not meet the standards for U.S. public works.

Transportation costs for doctors, immigrant inspectors, or space not required to be allotted by U.S. maritime laws and regulations.

Payment of pensions, annuities, retirement pay or adjusted service compensation for persons serving in the armed forces of any recipient country.

Expenditures by the Office of Inspector General and Comptroller of the Mutual Security Program in excess of $1.2 million annually.

Expenditures under the President's contingency fund for any project or activity for which a budget request had been submitted to Congress and was rejected.

Expenditures for administrative expenses of the Development Loan Fund in excess of $1.8 million.

The bill also imposed a limit of $2,675,000 on administrative expenses of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, D.C.

House

BACKGROUND -- President Eisenhower, in a Feb. 16 message to Congress, asked for $4,175,000,000 for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1961 and $6,704,000 for the Ryukyus. (He later raised his MSP request to $4,250,000,000, but the additional amount was not considered until the end of the appropriations process.) The Mutual Security Act of 1960 (HR 11510 -- PL 86-472) -- the authorization bill required to be passed before Congress could appropriate mutual security funds -- was signed into law May 14, authorizing appropriation of all but $89 million of the President's request. (For President's requests and HR 11510, see p. 166)

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Feb. 26 -- The State Department said, after consultations with the Defense Department, that U.S. military aid to Cuba ($249,000 in fiscal 1960) and the Dominican Republic ($445,000 in fiscal 1960) would end June 30. Existence of the aid was revealed in a Defense Department report Feb. 23. The Cuba funds went for training of six air cadets at the Corpus Christi, Texas, Naval Air Station. They were among 122,000 men from other countries trained by the U.S. over the last decade. The Dominican Republic funds were for equipment but not weapons, the Defense Department said.

HEARINGS -- Even before the authorization bill was cleared, the House Appropriations Foreign Operations Subcommittee March 7 began executive hearings on the fiscal 1961 mutual security appropriation. These continued intermittently through May 19. It soon became clear that the President's request faced severe difficulties; Subcommittee Chairman Otto E. Passman (D La.) May 14 said the Mutual Security Program was riddled with "corruption, scandal and blackmail" and said the Subcommittee would cut $1.5 billion from Mr. Eisenhower's request.

Early bipartisan efforts to prevent the cuts forecast by Passman were as follows:

May 22 -- Vice President Richard M. Nixon appealed for support for the Administration request in separate letters to 20 Republican members of the House Appropriations Committee. Nixon said "recent events" had underscored the "absolute need for keeping our mutual security operating at an efficient level".

May 25 -- A group of 28 House Democrats wrote President Eisenhower advising him that they would oppose "any unwise cuts" in the mutual security appropriations bill. The group said they had been critical of the Administration's handling of foreign policy "for the past seven years" and had been "deeply distressed by the conduct of our affairs before the summit meeting". They said they believed nevertheless that the Mutual Security Program was an "indispensable part of our foreign policy". The 28 signers were Reps. Holifield (Calif.), Bowles (Conn.), Udall (Ariz.), Roosevelt (Calif.), Clem Miller (Calif.), Porter (Ore.), Addonizio (N.J.), Griffiths (Mich.), Celler (N.Y.), Kasem (Calif.), Diggs (Mich.), Giaimo (Conn.), Lane (Mass.), Wolf (Iowa), Metcalf (Mont.), Thompson (N.J.), Brademas (Ind.), Green (Ore.), Cohelan (Calif.), Karth (Minn.), Blatnik (Minn.), Farbstein (N.Y.), Toll (Pa.), Rivers (Alaska), O'Hara (Mich.), Foley (Md.), Keogh (N.Y.) and Green (Pa.).

June 11 -- President Eisenhower, in a telegram to House leaders of both parties, said he understood that the Subcommittee had decided to reduce military assistance from the requested $2 billion to $1.6 billion, and to cut defense support to $600 million, compared with $724 million requested and $675 million authorized in the earlier authorization bill. "This cannot but jeopardize our own security and the defense of the free world," Mr. Eisenhower said.

He said the cuts "would compel America to withhold from her allies both in (the North Atlantic Treaty Organization) and in the Far East the equipment required to maintain a respectable posture of defense.... This will force us to distribute a deficit among our allies rimming the Communist world from Korea to Turkey, to the detriment of all, or else to drop entirely from this powerful defensive system one or more nations important to us.... I most earnestly request your cooperation in restoring these funds."

ACTION -- Despite Mr. Eisenhower's plea, the Foreign Operations Subcommittee June 13 approved a draft bill appropriating $3,384,500,000, which was $790.5 million less than the President had requested. The bill also carried $5,250,000 for the Ryukyu Islands.

The bill was reported (HR 12619 -- H Rept 1798) the same day by the full Appropriations Committee, with no changes in the amounts recommended by the Subcommittee.

COMMITTEE REPORT

The Committee, in a report submitted by Subcommittee Chairman Otto E. Passman (D La.), said $8,154,365,000 would actually be available for expenditure for mutual security in fiscal 1961. This figure took into account the $3,384,500,000 in new funds, an estimated $4,713,665,000 in previously appropriated funds that remained unspent but were for the most part already obligated, and $56,200,000 in receipts and reimbursements acquired through such activities as the sale of military equipment and returns to the Development Loan Fund. In addition, the Committee said, the Mutual Security Program had available for use $1,850,144,000 in foreign currencies, of which $1,344,011,000 would be obligated or committed in fiscal 1961, including $670,623,000 in U.S.-owned currencies generated under MSP or by the sale of agricultural surpluses under PL 480, and $673,388,000 in foreign-owned currencies such as counterpart funds.

The Committee wrote into HR 12619 provisions prohibiting the use of any funds appropriated by the bill for various types of activities, some newly authorized in the Mutual Security Act of 1960 (HR 11510 -- PL 86-472) that had been signed into law May 14. Prohibited was spending for these major items:

Construction of buildings in connection with the special program for Tropical Africa; the Indus River Basin project; any technical cooperation project or activity not scrutinized by the Appropriations Committees; use of the President's contingency fund for any project or activity for which a budget estimate had been submitted to Congress (the Committee said the Executive sometimes nullified the expressed desire of Congress to cut a specific program by using contingency fund money in effect to restore the cut); payment for a study on establishing a Point Four Youth Corps; loans to cooperative associations of small farmers; payment for working out plans for a Western hemisphere cultural center in Puerto Rico; expenditures of over $1 million by the Office of Inspector General and Comptroller of the Mutual Security Program; transfer of funds to the Benjamin Franklin Foundation (a private, nonprofit U.S.-German organization in Berlin) until a new agreement was concluded between the foundation and the Government containing "adequate financial and administrative controls"; or the Investment Incentive Fund.

The latter was set up to finance technical aid, like surveys and estimates, to encourage private investments overseas by U.S. businessmen. No money was ever appropriated for it, but the Committee said the International Cooperation Administration had spent $2.5 million in fiscal 1960 to initiate Investment Incentive surveys, despite the fact that the House specifically denied a request for $5 million to start the program. Consequently, an absolute restriction on the use of any funds for the program had become necessary, the Committee said.

(The Investment Incentive Program is separate from the Investment Guarantee Program, although both are authorized under the same section of law, 22 USC 1933. Under the guarantee program, the Government guarantees private businessmen against losses on overseas investments resulting from war, expropriation, confiscation, or inability to convert local earnings into dollars. ICA Oct. 28 said it had $475 million in guarantees outstanding and had never had to pay a claim thus far.)

In denying funds to the Indus Basin plan, the Committee said more study was required in view of the "magnitude and ultimate expense" of the project.

In a minority report, Republican members John Taber (N.Y.), Gerald R. Ford Jr. (Mich.), John J. Rhodes (Ariz.) and Silvio O. Conte (Mass.) said the appropriation cuts were "unconscionable" and would indicate a "weakening in the determination and leadership of the United States to hold together the nations of the free world", magnify the task of resisting Communist pressure, and "undermine the security of the United States at one of the most critical times in the history of our country."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- June 14 -- The 33-member House Republican Policy Committee voted to back amendments on the House floor to restore $250 million of the cuts approved by the Appropriations Committee.

June 15 -- Seven members of the liberal Democratic Study Group sent letters to all Democrats urging restoration of some of the cuts, particularly for the Indus project. Signers of the letter: Reps. Chester Bowles (Conn.), Lee Metcalf (Mont.), Frank Thompson Jr. (N.J.), Frank M. Coffin (Maine), Sidney R. Yates (Ill.), Cornelius E. Gallagher (N.J.) and John Brademas (Ind.).

Floor Action

The House June 17, by a 259-124 roll-call vote, passed HR 12619. As sent to the Senate, the bill appropriated $3,584,500,000, which was $200 million more than had been recommended by the Appropriations Committee. Debate began June 16. (For voting, see chart p. 456)

In addition to its mutual security provisions, HR 12619 appropriated $5,250,000 for administration of the Ryukyu Islands by the Army and placed a ceiling of $2,675,000 on 1961 administrative expenses of the Export-Import Bank of Washington.

Before final action, the House accepted by a 212-173 roll-call vote an amendment by Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.) restoring $200 million of the $400 million cut by the Appropriations Committee from the President's request for military assistance. Other changes in the Committee-approved bill included the deletion by voice votes of provisos barring use of funds for the Indus Basin development project and for construction of buildings in connection with the special program for Tropical Africa. A Committee-approved provision reappropriating unobligated funds left over from fiscal 1960 was stricken on a point of order.

(The reappropriation authority later was restored by the Senate and retained in the version of the bill signed into law.)

As passed by the House, HR 12619 provided the following funds for the Mutual Security Program in 1961, compared to the President's request:

	Requested	Provided
Military assistance	$2,000,000,000	$1,800,000,000
Economic assistance
Defense support	724,000,000	600,000,000
Development Loan Fund	700,000,000	550,000,000
Technical cooperation	206,500,000	184,500,000
Special assistance	268,500,000	206,000,000
Other programs	80,900,000	74,800,000
Miscellaneous	20,100,000	19,200,000
President's contingency fund	175,000,000	150,000,000
TOTAL	$4,175,000,000	$3,584,500,000

The bill also:

Appropriated $5,250,000 for Army administration of the Ryukyu Islands.

Reiterated Congress' opposition to the seating of Communist China in the United Nations, but, in the event it were seated, directed the President to inform Congress on foreign policy implications arising from such action.

Declared it the sense of Congress that any attempt by foreign nations to practice racial or religious discrimination in granting commercial access or other rights to American citizens was "repugnant to our principles".

Authorized use of $1.5 million in foreign currencies for hospital construction.

Specifically prohibited use of fiscal 1961 funds for the following:

- Any technical cooperation project or activity not scrutinized by Congress.
- Any new flood control, reclamation or other water or related land resource project which did not meet the standards for U.S. public works.
- Expenditures under the President's contingency fund for any project or activity for which a budget estimate had been submitted to Congress.
- Payment for a study on the advisability of establishing a Point Four Youth Corps.
- Implementation of a policy of extending loans to cooperative associations of small farmers.
- Activities under the Investment Incentive Fund.
- Payment for plans for a western hemisphere cultural and technical center in Puerto Rico.
- Transfer of funds to the Benjamin Franklin Foundation (a private, non-profit U.S.-German organization in West Berlin) until a new agreement was entered into between the U.S. and the Foundation providing "adequate" financial and administrative controls for the protection of the U.S. interest.
- Expenditures by the Office of Inspector General and Comptroller of the Mutual Security Program in excess of $1 million annually.
- Direct assistance in the migration to any nation in the western hemisphere of persons who did not have security clearances based on standards insuring against Communist infiltration.
- Transportation costs for doctors, immigrant inspectors, or space not required to be allotted by U.S. maritime laws and regulations.
- Payments to contractors who offered "compensation" to current ICA employees or hired personnel above the $5,000 annual pay bracket within two years after they left the ICA.
- Any non-military assistance project during any period when more than 35 days elapsed between a request for information on the expenditure of funds for the project and the furnishing of such information to Congress or the General Accounting Office.
- Payment of pensions, annuities, retirement pay or adjusted service compensation for persons serving in the armed forces of any recipient country.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 17 -- John Taber (R N.Y.) -- Restore $200 million in military assistance funds. Teller vote, 170-114; roll-call vote, 212-173.

Frank M. Coffin (D Maine) -- Require that technical cooperation projects be scrutinized by authorization as well as appropriation committees. Voice.

Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.) -- Provide a special authorization for the use of $1,500,000 in foreign currencies for hospital construction. Voice.

Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) -- Bar use of funds to pay transportation costs for doctors, immigrant inspectors or space not required to be allotted by U.S. maritime laws and regulations. Voice.

Sidney R. Yates (D Ill.) -- Delete prohibition against use of funds for the Indus Basin development project. Voice.

Alfred E. Santangelo (D N.Y.) -- Bar payments to contractors who offered "compensation" to ICA employees or hired former ICA employees above the $5,000 annual pay bracket within two years after they left the ICA. Voice.

John S. Monagan (D Conn.), as amended by Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.) -- Bar payments for non-military assistance projects if more than 35 days elapsed between a request for information on fund expenditure and the furnishing of such information to Congress or the General Accounting Office. Voice.

Yates -- Delete prohibition against use of funds for the construction of buildings in connection with the special program for Tropical Africa. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 17 -- Gerald R. Ford (R Mich.) -- Restore $50 million in defense support funds. Standing, 97-125; teller, 119-141.

Cornelius E. Gallagher (D N.J.) -- Delete prohibition against use of funds for technical cooperation projects which had not been scrutinized by Congressional committees. Standing, 55-137.

James Roosevelt (D Calif.) -- Restore $22 million in technical cooperation funds. Voice.

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Cut $3 million from appropriations for the United Nations technical assistance program. Standing, 32-93.

Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.) -- Delete prohibition against use of the President's contingency fund for projects for which a budget estimate had been submitted to Congress. Standing, 50-82.

William M. Colmer (D Miss.) -- Prohibit use of mutual security funds for construction, maintenance and repair in shipyards located outside the United States. Standing, 52-97.

Frank M. Coffin (D Maine) -- Delete $1 million limitation on expenditures by the Office of the Inspector General and Comptroller. Standing, 71-126.

Ford -- Increase Inspector General and Comptroller spending limitation to $1,250,000. Voice.

Gross -- Cut $3 million from funds for general administrative expenses; bar use of funds by the Inspector

General and Comptroller for representation or entertainment; cut $100 million from the Development Loan Fund appropriation; limit funds for the Development Loan Fund to loans on which at least 50 percent of the repayment was to be in dollars; bar use of funds for any tuition in excess of $200 per month per student. Voice.

Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.) -- Delete prohibition against use of funds for a study on the advisability of establishing a Point Four Youth Corps. Voice.

Harris B. McDowell Jr. (D Del.) -- Prohibit Members of Congress from using mutual security dollar funds or foreign currencies for travel outside the United States without a full public disclosure of itemized expenditures. Voice.

DEBATE

DEBATE -- June 16 -- Otto E. Passman (D La.) -- The bill "calls for the highest amount recommended during the past six years.... Why is this program so fouled up and uncontrollable?.... (Its directors) are told much of what to do. And when they find that they actually have little to do with managing the program, they usually resign and the subordinates let the program run wild. As a result, everybody's program is nobody's program.... The greatest abusers and manipulators in the program are the military."

Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.) -- The bill contained a "number of crippling features" and the subcommittee chairman (Passman) was trying "to take the prerogative away from the Committee on Foreign Affairs". The subcommittee hearings were "a sideshow, a three-ring circus". The amendment narrowing the special program for tropical Africa was "ridiculous".

Charles H. Brown (D Mo.) -- "For three years I have voted a protest vote against the half-baked facsimile that comes to us each session about this time under the title of a Mutual Security Program, because I want to quit piddling around with...patchwork improvisations poorly administered and come up with a good program commensurate with the needs of our times.... Let us formulate a long-range, well-managed Development Loan Fund and technical cooperation program.... We should strive to prevent trouble rather than wait until trouble is fomented and then try to bribe our way out...."

June 17 -- Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) -- The riots in Japan against the U.S. treaty are an "ominous reminder" of Communist efforts to "destroy free nations". A strong Mutual Security Program is necessary to the "strength and the protection of our own country". If Congress repudiated the Indus Basin program, "one of the great diplomatic successes of the decade will collapse."

Robert L.F. Sikes (D Fla.) -- "We have put nearly $700 million into a buildup of (Japan's) military strength .... Where were those...troops when the Japanese Government said that they could not be responsible for the safety of our President?"

Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) -- Opposed setting up "military assistance groups in underdeveloped countries, where the people do not want guns, where the guns will not maintain the regime in power", where the U.S. ought to be giving technical and economic aid.

Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.) -- "Before this 12-month period is up we will have (numerous) new nations in Africa" and the bill's limitation on use of technical cooperation funds would mean "not one project can be started" for these countries because they would not have been specifically justified before the Committee on Appropriations.

Chester Bowles (D Conn.) -- "At this stage, the failure of our Government to understand the enormous promise of (the Indus Basin) project and the complexity of the agreements which made it possible would further undermine world-wide confidence in our leadership, already dangerously shaken by recent events."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

HEARINGS -- Intermittently, public and private, March 11-Aug. 17.

ACTION -- Aug. 19 reported the bill with numerous amendments (S Rept 1849). In acting on the funds, the Committee considered an additional request for the President's contingency fund transmitted Aug. 8 by President Eisenhower. The President, citing the Congo crisis, asked Congress to raise the contingency fund to $250 million, compared with his initial request of $175 million, of which $150 million had been granted in the authorization bill (HR 11510) and appropriated in the House version of the funds bill. Although there was never any formal, separate authorization for the additional contingency fund money (for explanation, see box, "Contingency Fund," p. 166), the Committee nevertheless recommended the full $250 million.

Over-all, against Presidential requests for funds that now totalled $4,250,000,000, the Committee recommended $3,981,350,000, a cut of only $270 million. In effect, the Committee restored nearly all the cuts made by the House except for the $200 million cut from the President's $2 billion request for military assistance. (The Committee also recommended $7,704,000 for the Ryukyus. The increase of $1 million over the Eisenhower request was to raise school teachers' salaries in the islands.)

The Committee struck out of the bill nearly all the House restrictions on spending for specific purposes; it left intact only those involving payment of doctors' transportation costs, western hemisphere migration, benefits for veterans of armed forces of recipient nations, and water projects. The language of the water projects provision was considerably softened.

In addition, the Committee added provisions of its own limiting U.S. participation in any U.N. Africa program to 40 percent of the total cost, requiring the President to report to Congress within 60 days on allotment of funds carried in the bill, and requiring him to report within 30 days on switches in use of funds involving $1 million or more or 5 percent of the cost of any major groups of projects. To a House provision cutting off any non-military assistance funds for any project on which the Executive refused to give Congress information within 35 days, the Committee added a proviso cancelling the cutoff of funds if the President certified he had forbidden transmission of the information, and stated why he did so, and applying the provision only to requests to ICA for information.

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 24, after brief debate, passed HR 12619 by a 67-26 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 516)

The bill was passed without revision of the appropriations or legislative provisions recommended by the Committee. Four new provisions were added, however, on floor amendments, two of them reflecting increased Congressional concern over U.S.-Latin America relations. (See below)

Dominating the debate was Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.), who criticized many aspects of the Mutual Security Program and said he had planned to offer amendments in Committee to cut foreign aid spending but had relented when "it became apparent that the sentiment of a majority of the Committee was opposed to any large-scale reduction." Ellender sharply attacked the military assistance program, under which the U.S. in fiscal 1961 was slated to deliver $1.8 billion in arms and equipment to 39 different nations. Many of the recipient countries, he said, had advanced to the point where they could finance adequate defense programs of their own.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 12619 provided the following funds for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1961:

Military assistance	$1,800,000,000
Defense support	675,000,000
Development Loan Fund	700,000,000
Technical cooperation
General authorization	172,000,000
United Nations	33,000,000
Organization of American States	1,300,000
President's contingency fund	250,000,000
Special assistance
General authorization	256,000,000
Special authorization	1,500,000
General administrative expenses	40,000,000
United Nations
Refugee program	1,300,000
Children's Fund	12,000,000
Relief and Works Agency	16,500,000
Other programs
Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration	6,700,000
Escapee program	3,350,000
Ocean freight charges	2,000,000
NATO Science Program	1,200,000
State Department administrative expenses	8,000,000
Atoms for peace	1,500,000
TOTAL	$3,981,350,000

The bill also:

Appropriated $7,704,000 for Army administration of the Ryukyu Islands.

Reiterated Congress' opposition to the seating of Communist China in the United Nations, but, in the event China were accepted, directed the President to inform Congress of foreign policy implications arising from such action.

Declared it the sense of Congress that any attempt by foreign nations to practice racial or religious discrimination in granting commercial access or other rights to American citizens was "repugnant to our principles."

Authorized $1.5 million for the purchase of foreign currencies for hospital construction.

Required the President, within 60 days, to submit to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees a full report on the allotment of funds provided in the bill; directed that, within 30 days after the approval of any further change in the program which amounted to more than $1 million or 5 percent of the amount appropriated for any part of the program, whichever was less, the President must submit to the Committees a full report on the change and the reasons for it.

Prohibited the spending of any Mutual Security funds, except those for military assistance, if the International Cooperation Administration failed, within 35 days, to furnish documents requested by Congressional committees or the General Accounting Office unless the President forbade their disclosure.

Authorized the President to discontinue aid to any country furnishing military or economic assistance to the Castro government of Cuba; and to discontinue aid to any country directly or indirectly selling arms to any Latin American country under diplomatic or economic sanctions of the Organization of American States.

Limited the Mutual Security Program's contribution to the cost of any program in a foreign country to 90 percent.

Also prohibited the use of fiscal 1961 funds for the following:

Contributions to the U.N. for a program in any country in Africa in excess of 40 percent of the total contributions to the U.N. for such program.

Direct assistance in the migration to any nation in the Western Hemisphere of persons who did not have security clearances based on standards insuring against Communist infiltration.

Transportation costs for doctors, immigrant inspectors, or space not required to be allotted by U.S. maritime laws and regulations.

Payment of pensions, annuities, retirement pay or adjusted service compensation for persons serving in the armed forces of any recipient country.

Water projects overseas not meeting "a feasibility ratio of related programs" in the U.S. "based on engineering information available at the time the project is being considered."

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Aug. 24 -- Styles Bridges (R N.H.) -- Authorize the President to bar foreign aid to any country directly or indirectly furnishing munitions or lending military or economic aid to the Castro regime in Cuba. Voice vote.

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Limit contribution of U.S. Mutual Security Program to any program in any foreign country to 90 percent of the program's cost. Voice.

Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) -- Express the sense of Congress that the Secretary of State should take the necessary action to prevent importation or reimportation of firearms manufactured for the armed forces of foreign countries. Voice.

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Authorize the President to bar funds to any country directly or indirectly selling arms to any Latin American country against which economic or diplomatic sanctions were imposed by the Organization of American States. Voice.

DEBATE -- Aug. 24 -- Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) -- Criticized the "double standard" of the Eisenhower Administration under which "needed programs are cut back, starved or 'phased-out' while similar projects abroad are dealt with with a lavish hand."

Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) -- The Mutual Security Program "is bipartisan because it has been continued for many years only because the Executive Branch and an overwhelming majority of the Members of Congress have been in accord on the basic principles" of foreign aid.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- "I suggest we stop talking about foreign aid and start talking about Mutual Security, for that is just what this program is. We are concerned here with matters relating to our own best interest; and we are not talking primarily about aid to foreigners."

Conference

REPORT -- The conference report on the bill (H Rept 2164) was filed Aug. 25. The compromise version restored the more stringent House standards for water projects and accepted the House provisions requiring justification to Congress of technical cooperation projects, limiting administrative expenses of the Inspector General and Comptroller and barring use of any funds for the Investment Incentive program. The House provision prohibiting use of the contingency fund for any project on which budget estimates had been sent to Congress was revised, so that contingency funds were barred for such projects only if budget estimates had been sent to Congress and specifically rejected by Congress.

The other House restrictions on spending, which had been removed by the Senate, were not restored in the final version of the bill.

Senate amendments on reports to Congress, on the 40 percent limit on contributions to U.N. Africa programs and on aid to Cuba or other Latin American nations under certain conditions were retained in the final version, but the 90 percent project limit was dropped.

Conferees compromised the language suspending non-military aid for projects on which the Government refused information to Congress. Senate language nullifying the whole provision if the President certified he had forbidden disclosure of information was retained; but House language applying the provision not only to ICA but to any agency administering an aid program also was retained.

In funds, the conferees recommended $3,716,350,000 -- a final figure $534 million lower than President Eisenhower's requests. Aside from the $100 million additional for the contingency fund, which it accepted, the House would agree to add only $31.8 million to what it had originally voted. The final version of the bill cut the military assistance program $200 million, the Development Loan Fund $150 million, defense support $114 million, technical cooperation $22 million and special assistance $26 million. Another $22 million in cuts was distributed among smaller programs. The final sppropriation for the Ryukyus was $6 million.

ACTION -- The conference report was agreed to Aug. 26 by voice vote in the House and by a roll-call vote of 57-24 in the Senate. (For voting, see chart p. 517)

The House, in acting, agreed by a separate voice vote to the Senate addition of the $100 million for the contingency fund. The President signed HR 12619 Sept. 2 (PL 86-704).

In clearing the report, both chambers disregarded an unusual, last-minute plea by President Eisenhower, who urged that the conference report be rejected and the bill sent to a new House-Senate conference for restoration of funds cut from his $4,250,000,000 request and revision of language imposing administrative restrictions. The President's plea took the form of an Aug. 26 public statement and letters to Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) and House Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.).

The President said the cuts would "sharply curtail support indispensable to the defense of allies now under intensified Soviet pressure and deny aid urgently needed by other friendly nations struggling under the gravest difficulties to make progress in freedom." Mr. Eisenhower also said administrative restrictions retained in the conference version of the bill "would impair the management of the Mutual Security Program."

After reading the President's letter to the House, Halleck asked that it be "very seriously considered." House approval of the conference report came after Rep. Otto E. Passman (D La.), Chairman of the House Appropriations Foreign Operations Subcommittee and the chairman of the House conferees on the foreign aid money bill, said: "We have been liberal, we have been considerate." Passman said the bill provided $490 million more than the aid program received in fiscal 1960 and added that he was "shocked" that the President was dissatisfied with "this fantastically large amount."

Prior to the Senate's rejection of the President's appeal, Johnson suggested that the Administration send spokesmen before the House and Senate Appropriations Committees to ask that additional mutual security money be included in the pending supplemental appropriations bill (HR 13161) "if it can be justified." Johnson asked the Senate to approve the conference report but added: "I do think the President should have a thorough and adequate hearing on the matter."

Second Supplemental

In accord with Johnson's suggestion, Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon Aug. 27 appeared before the Senate Appropriations Committee, which was considering the Second Supplemental Appropriations bill (HR 13161), to plead for more mutual security funds. The Committee subsequently sent the House-passed bill to the Senate floor with amendments appropriating $190 million for mutual security -- $65 million for defense support, $75 million for the Development Loan Fund, $22 million for technical cooperation, $2 million for administrative expenses and $26 million for special assistance.

The Senate Aug. 29 agreed to the amendments en bloc by a 56-31 roll-call vote, passed HR 13161 and sent the bill to conference. (For voting, see chart p. 517)

The Senate also put into HR 13161 a clause in effect repealing the provision in the final version of HR 12619 that required justification of all technical cooperation projects before Congress.

These Senate amendments to HR 13161 were all reported in disagreement by the House-Senate conference committee on the bill. As a result, the House voted separately on each of the amendments when it took up the conference report on HR 13161 on Aug. 31.

By a 203-193 roll call, the House agreed to accept the $65 million added for defense support. However, it rejected the $26 million increase for special assistance by a 175-216 roll call, and turned down by voice votes all the other Senate amendments to HR 13161 involving mutual security funds or legislative provisions. (For voting, see chart p. 470) The final version of HR 13161 carried only the $65 million for defense support. (See story, p. 405)

This $65 million, together with the $3,716,350,000 voted earlier in HR 12619, the regular mutual security funds bill, made a grand total of $3,781,350,000 in fiscal 1961 appropriations for the Mutual Security Program.

CONGRESS PASSES CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1960

HR 8601 -- Reported by the House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 956) Aug. 20, 1959.

- Passed by the House, amended, by a 311-109 roll-call vote March 24, 1960. (See p. 430)
- Reported, amended, by the Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 1205) March 29.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 71-18 roll-call vote April 8. (See p. 488)
- House agreed to Senate amendments by a 288-95 roll-call vote April 21. (See p. 434)

PL 86-449-- Signed into law May 6.

Passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 was a direct outgrowth of the 1957 Act -- the first civil rights law in 82 years -- and laid the groundwork for civil rights debates certain to be held in the future.

With a bipartisan majority prevailing over both those who wanted more federal intervention to protect constitutional rights and those who wanted none at all, Congress inched forward in 1960 with amendments to the 1957 Act that were designed primarily to bolster the earlier Act's voting rights provisions. The chief provision authorized judges to appoint referees to help Negroes register and vote. The 1960 Act also provided criminal penalties for bombings and bomb threats, and for mob action designed to obstruct court orders -- neither of these limited to racial incidents.

Direct federal action in desegregating schools, guaranteeing equality of job opportunity or ending discrimination in housing was avoided. For implementation of the voting rights provisions, Congress chose to place responsibility in the Judicial Branch, with its formal procedures and opportunities for counter-arguments, rather than in more direct administrative remedies.

The argument for beginning with voting rights was that once Negroes had, in fact, the right to vote, they could wield a powerful lever against other forms of discrimination. In both 1957 and 1960 there were those who believed this marked significant progress and those who felt that the blows struck for voting rights were but meek taps and that Congress would have to act more vigorously before equal rights could be enjoyed by all.

Impatience with the pace of progress was manifest in 1960 in the "sit-ins" and economic boycotts by Negroes against businesses with segregated facilities.

THREE POINTS OF VIEW

As in 1957, the bill enacted in 1960 was based on Administration proposals. A marriage of convenience between Republicans and Northern Democrats had to take place to pass any bill at all. The 1960 bill was first whittled down by the House; the Senate made a few more incisions; the House then approved the Senate version.

It was clear throughout the lengthy 1960 battle that the "moderate" civil rights group under the leadership of Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) and House Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), was in control.

But this did not prevent attacks from both sides: Leaders of the "liberal" group tried to strengthen the bill, but failed to unite a sufficient number behind alternative provisions; Southerners, working as a more organized unit, filibustered and moved to kill those provisions most distasteful to them and to broaden others so as to dilute their effect on the South.

A summing up shows that the South was the much more successful of the two minority groups. Two Administration provisions were removed from the bill; all of the remaining ones were modified. The voting referees plan added to the bill was generally considered mild, even by Southerners; critics predicted it would be unworkable. Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), a leader of the civil rights group, said at the conclusion of debate April 8: "Surely in this battle on the Senate floor the roles of Grant and Lee at Appomatox have been reversed."

Observers generally agreed that Southern success was due in part to expert organization, in part to help given them by Republicans. The Southern Democrat-GOP coalition was effective in committees as well as in maneuvering and voting on the floors of both chambers.

Southerners argued throughout that the bill victimized the South in order to provide political dividends in the North; however, many Southerners conceded that the final bill was one they could "live with".

Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.) April 8 said of the "liberal" group: "We were beaten before we started -- beaten by the committee seniority system, beaten by the combined strength of the leadership of both parties, and beaten by the usual voting coalition."

Dirksen the same day said: "I have a high regard for our state-federal relationship, so I like to see caution exercised, as I think it was exercised in this long discussion.... What we have now wrought is a moderate bill, and yet it represents a significant forward step."

Sen. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) wrote his constituents in a newsletter that the Senate's action indicated "a pattern of defeat for the NAACP and its spokesmen".

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, in describing the referees plan, said, "The Negro has to pass more check points and more officials than he would if he were trying to get the United States gold reserves in Fort Knox. It's a fraud."

PROVISIONS OF CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1960

TITLE I

Provided that persons who obstructed or interfered with any order issued by a federal court, or attempted to do so, by threats or force, could be punished by a fine of up to $1,000, imprisonment of up to one year, or both. Such acts could also be prevented by private suits seeking court injunctions against them.

TITLE II

Made it a federal crime to cross state lines to avoid prosecution or punishment for, or giving evidence on, the bombing or burning of any building, facility or vehicle, or an attempt to do so. Penalties could be a fine of up to $5,000, or imprisonment of up to five years, or both.

Made it a federal crime to transport or possess explosives with the knowledge or intent that they would be used to blow up any vehicle or building. Allowed the presumption, after any bombing occurred, that the explosives used were transported across state lines (therefore allowing the FBI to investigate any bombing case), but stipulated that this would have to be proved before the person could be convicted. Penalties could be imprisonment of up to one year and/or $1,000 fine; if personal injury resulted, 10 years and/or $10,000 fine; if death resulted, life imprisonment or a death penalty if recommended by a jury.

Made it a federal crime to use interstate facilities, such as telephones, to threaten a bombing or give a false bomb-scare, punishable by imprisonment of up to one year or a fine of up to $1,000, or both.

TITLE III

Required that voting records and registration papers for all federal elections, including primaries, must be preserved for 22 months. Penalties for failing to comply or for stealing, destroying or mutilating the records could be a fine of up to $1,000, and/or imprisonment for one year.

Directed that the records, upon written application, be turned over to the Attorney General "or his representative" at the office of the records' custodian.

Unless directed otherwise by a court, the Justice Department representative must not disclose the content of the records except to Congress, a government agency, or in a court proceeding.

The federal district court where the records were located, or in which the demand for the records were made, could force voting officials to comply.

TITLE IV

Empowered the Civil Rights Commission, which was extended for two years in 1959, to administer oaths and take sworn statements.

TITLE V

Stated that arrangements might be made to provide for the education of children of members of the armed forces when the schools those children regularly attended had been closed to avoid integration and the U.S. Commissioner of Education had decided that no other educational agency would provide for their schooling. Amended the laws on aid to impacted school districts (PL 81-815, PL 81-874) to this effect.

TITLE VI

Provided that after the Attorney General won a civil suit brought under the 1957 Civil Rights Act to protect Negroes' right to vote, he could then ask the court to hold another adversary proceeding and make a separate finding that there was a "pattern or practice" of depriving Negroes of the right to vote in the area involved in the suit.

If a court found such a "pattern or practice", any Negro living in that area could apply to the court to issue an order declaring him qualified to vote if he proved (1) he was qualified to vote under state law; (2) he had tried to register after the "pattern or practice" finding; and (3) he had not been allowed to register or had been found unqualified by someone acting under color of law. The court would have to hear the Negro's application within 10 days and its order would be effective for as long a period as that for which he would have been qualified to vote if registered under state law.

State officials would be notified of the order, and they would then be bound to permit the person to vote. Disobedience would be subject to contempt of court proceedings.

To carry out these provisions, the court may appoint one or more voting referees, who must be qualified voters in the judicial district. The referees would receive the applications, take evidence, and report their findings to the court. The referee must take the Negro's application and proof in an ex parte proceeding (without cross-examination by opponents) and the court may set the time and place for the referee's hearing.

The court may fix a time limit of up to 10 days, in which state officials may challenge the referee's report. Challenges on points of law must be accompanied by a memorandum and on points of fact by a verified copy of a public record or an affidavit by those with personal knowledge of the controverting evidence. Either the court or the referee may decide the challenges in accordance with court-directed procedures. Hearings on issues of fact could be held only when the affidavits show there is a real issue of fact. The referee's report would be the deciding factor in issues of the applicant's literacy. If the objections were dismissed, either the court or the referee could issue the Negro a certificate declaring him qualified to vote.

If a Negro has applied for a court certificate 20 or more days before the election, his application is challenged, and the case is not decided by election day, the court must allow him to vote provisionally, provided he is "entitled to vote under state law", and impound his ballot pending a decision on his application. If he applies within 20 days before the election, the court has the option of whether or not to let him vote.

The court would not be limited in its powers to enforce its decree that these Negroes be allowed to vote and their votes be counted and may authorize the referee to take action to enforce it.

The referees would have the powers conferred on court masters by rule 53(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Rule 53(c) gives masters the right to subpena records, administer oaths and cross-examine witnesses.)

In any suit instituted under these provisions, the state would be held responsible for the actions of its officials and, in the event state officials resign and are not replaced, the state itself could be sued.

BACKGROUND

The Civil War ended in 1865. Between 1866 and 1875, five major civil rights and reconstruction acts were enacted by Congress and became law. By 1910, these laws had been so modified by further statutes or narrowly construed or struck down by the Supreme Court, that they were virtually nonexistent. Also passed and ratified during this period were the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution.

The 13th Amendment, passed and adopted in 1865, outlawed slavery. The 14th Amendment, passed in 1866 and adopted in 1868, guaranteed Negroes citizenship and said that no state may "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws". The 15th Amendment, passed in 1869 and adopted in 1870 provided that the right to vote could not be denied by the U.S. or any state "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude".

Congress was empowered to enforce all three Amendments "by appropriate legislation". Lawmakers in 1957 and 1960 found sanction for civil rights bills in the 14th and 15th Amendments.

Action in Recent Years

In 1939, President Roosevelt by administrative action set up a civil rights section in the Justice Department.

Civil rights planks were included in 1944, 1948, 1952 and 1956 Democratic and Republican platforms. President Truman sent Congress a 10-point civil rights program in 1948. President Eisenhower made his first civil rights proposals in 1956, when he recommended establishment of a bipartisan commission to examine charges of vote denials and economic pressures, and creation of a civil rights division in the Justice Department.

The House passed a civil rights bill (HR 627) in the closing days of the 1956 session. Parliamentary maneuvers prevented it from reaching the Senate floor. (See 1956 Almanc p. 458)

1957Civil Rights Act

The Civil Rights Act passed by Congress in 1957 was a modified version of the Eisenhower Administration's 1956 proposal for civil rights legislation.

The primary feature of the 1957 Act was a provision designed to enforce the right to vote by empowering the Federal Government, through the Attorney General, to seek court injunctions against obstruction or deprivation of voting rights. The other highlights of the bill were the creation of an executive Commission on Civil Rights and the establishment of a Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice, to be headed by an Assistant Attorney General.

The bill originally proposed by the Administration would have provided much broader powers for the Attorney General by allowing him to file civil suits for injunctions against deprivation of any civil right. This became famous as Part III of the bill but ultimately was rejected. Congress also restricted the courts, in punishing those who flouted or disobeyed the voting rights laws, by requiring jury trials under certain conditions.

The focus of the 1957 civil rights debate was the jury trial issue, which was finally resolved after several attempts at compromise. But it was the elimination of Part III from the bill that presaged future Congressional action.

The modifications of the bill represented success for Southern Congressmen who, aware that they did not have the votes to prevent some bill from being passed, adopted a strategy designed to modify the legislation as far as possible. They fought its provisions on legal grounds and succeeded in persuading enough of their colleagues that major changes were necessary. (1957 Almanac p. 553)

The moderate tone in Southern debate was generally considered to be another factor in their successful incisions into the bill. Despite threats of a filibuster, Southern Senate leaders avoided a general filibuster because they felt it could not succeed and might result in a stronger bill or a tightening of the rules against filibusters. Sen. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.), with no support from his colleagues, carried on a one-man delaying action to prevent final passage of the bill by the Senate. His marathon speech, lasting 24 hours and 18 minutes Aug. 28-29, set a new record by a single person.

One factor cited as having added impetus to passage of a civil rights bill in 1957 after so many years of inaction was the Negro vote in the 1956 elections. An examination of 1956 election results in large Northern industrial cities convinced many observers in both the Democratic and Republican parties that the Negro vote had reached substantial proportions and that the traditional Northern Negro vote for the Democratic party was swinging toward Republicans. Neither party in Congress felt that this trend could be ignored.

Action on civil rights bills in 1959 set the stage for the lengthy consideration and final passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1960. Bills of all types were introduced early in the 1959 session of the 86th Congress, but the only substantive action taken that year was the extension of the Civil Rights Commission for two more years. (1959 Almanac p. 291)

The events that did occur in 1959 revealed the three-way split in Congressional sentiment on civil rights that was to determine the character of the 1960 bill. Southerners held to their traditional opposition to any civil rights legislation while Northerners split between "moderate" legislation, as proposed by the Administration and backed by House and Senate leaders, and "stronger" legislation, backed by a majority of Northern Democrats and about one-third of the Northern Republicans.

The provision that separated the moderates from the liberals in 1959 (more divisions were to come in 1960) was Part III. This provision was struck from the bill by the Senate in 1957 and its deletion, unprotested by President Eisenhower, was agreed to by the House.

The Administration did not ask for Part III in 1959 and opposed its addition by Congress.

Administration Bill

Following is a section-by-section breakdown of the seven-point civil rights program submitted by the Administration Feb. 5, 1959, the arguments for and against each section expressed in the 1960 Senate debate, and the general action taken in 1960 on each section. With the exception of a new provision empowering federal courts, with the aid of referees, to help Negroes register to vote, the Administration made no changes in this program in 1960.

● TITLE I -- Persons who obstruct or interfere with a school desegregation order of a federal court, or attempt to do so, by threats, force, "or by any threatening letter or communication", could be punished by a fine of up to $10,000, imprisonment of up to two years, or both. Such acts also could be prevented by an injunction and thus be subject to civil contempt of court proceedings (without jury trial). Students and school officials who acted under threat of disciplinary action would be specifically exempted.

FOR -- Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Feb. 27 -- This provision would enable the Government to deal with situations of "public anarchy" such as the Little Rock riots of 1957 "where there was great difficulty in reaching the leaders of a disorderly mob who were violating the court injunction, due to the limitations of the law...."

AGAINST -- Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- Feb. 16 -- By making "mere threats" a federal offense, this section "attempts to make crimes of nothing except spoken words". People who committed violence would be subject to punishment three times for the same act: under state laws against violence, contempt-of-court proceedings and the new law, if enacted.

Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) -- Feb. 29 -- "What is most reprehensible about this proposal is that it...is a part of the campaign...to make the South a special subject of obloquy and attack through legislative channels."

ACTION -- Broadened to include all court orders, penalties modified, punishable actions limited.

● TITLE II -- It would be a federal crime to cross state lines to avoid prosecution or punishment for, or giving evidence on, the bombing or burning of a church or school, or an attempt to do so. The cases could be tried in federal courts either where the original crime was committed or where the person was taken in custody or apprehended. Penalties would be a fine of up to $5,000 and/or imprisonment of up to five years.

FOR -- Javits -- Feb. 27 -- "Let us remember that there has been a series of the most trying and dangerous acts of disorder and coercion against individuals in some of the Southern states."

AGAINST -- James O. Eastland (D Miss.) -- Feb. 23 -- Any anti-bombing statute enacted "should apply across the board," and take in labor disputes.

Ervin -- Feb. 27 -- The provision for trial of cases outside the state where the offense was committed violates the Constitution.

ACTION -- Broadened to include all bombings; transportation and possession of explosives with intent to use them for bombing outlawed; bomb scares outlawed.

● TITLE III -- Voting records and registration papers for all federal elections must be preserved for three years. Criminal penalties would be imposed for destruction, mutilation or theft of the records.

The records must, upon written application, be turned over to the Attorney General "or his representative". The content of the records could not be disclosed by a Justice Department representative unless there were a court order to do so or it was necessary "in the performance of his official duties".

The federal district court where the records were located, or in which the demand for the records were made, could force voting officials to comply.

FOR -- Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) -- Feb. 15 -- The Civil Rights Commission "found itself engaged in a game of hide-and-seek with local officials, who transferred records from one jurisdiction to another" to avoid disclosure of voting discrimination.

AGAINST -- Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) -- Feb. 19 -- "There is nothing to prevent" the Attorney General's "representative" from representing the NAACP also. "Official duties" are not sufficiently defined.

ACTION -- Time requirement shortened to 22 months; records could be seen only at the office of their custodian or in court proceedings.

● TITLE IV -- Extended the life of the Civil Rights Commission for two more years; empowered the Commission to administer oaths and take sworn statements; allowed Commission employees to be selected without regard to civil service laws.

ACTION -- The Commission was extended in 1959 and in 1960 was given powers to administer oaths, etc., but the third provision was deleted.

● TITLE V -- Congress recognizes that the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court "is the supreme law of the land" and therefore state and local governments "are now obligated to take steps toward the elimination of segregation in their public schools". Congress may appropriate funds to pay half the costs incurred by school agencies in implementing state plans for school desegregation. If a state declined to participate in the program, the Federal Government could, on approval of the state, enter into a program directly with local school districts.

FOR -- Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- March 3 -- Congress should uphold and implement the Court's school integration decisions by providing financial and technical aid to help states and localities comply.

AGAINST -- Russell -- Feb. 29 -- This section "is the most obnoxious and objectionable of all.... It is an effort to put the approval of Congress on an unconstitutional decision of the Supreme Court and give a mandate to local school trustees of every school district to... mix races."

Harry Flood Byrd -- Feb. 19 -- Its proponents "obviously think local and state school officials can be 'bought' over to desegregation with a quick flash of the dollar sign".

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- Feb. 27 -- The section would be ineffective because "before the Federal Government can assist a locality, it must obtain the approval of the state."

ACTION -- Killed.

● TITLE VI -- Free education would be provided for the children of members of the armed forces when the public schools those children regularly attended were closed to avoid integration. For this purpose, the U.S. Commissioner of Education could rent buildings of the closed-down school system which received federal school assistance under the program covering federally impacted areas (PL 81-815).

FOR -- Javits -- Feb. 27 -- "It is unthinkable" that children of 38 percent of U.S. servicemen must attend segregated schools "and even more unthinkable to have them denied education because a school is closed to avoid compliance with the Constitution".

AGAINST -- Eastland -- Feb. 23 -- "The most vicious" feature of this provision gives discretion to the Commissioner of Education to take possession of any school constructed in part by federal funds and to use it "as long as he deems necessary".

ACTION -- Statement of purposes left in bill, but powers of Commissioner limited.

• TITLE VII -- The President's Committee on Government Contracts would be changed into a permanent, 15-member "Commission on Equal Job Opportunity Under Government Contracts". The Commission could conduct hearings and investigations, to ensure that there was no racial discrimination in companies working under Government contracts.

FOR -- Kuchel -- Feb. 15 -- "Our Government cannot be guilty of urging equal opportunities for all our citizens and, at the same time, permit private firms doing business with the Government to ignore the Government's announced policy."

AGAINST -- Lister Hill (D Ala.) -- Feb. 25 -- This would be "a further push for widespread acceptance and enforcement of the old FEPC proposals" (to set up a Federal Employment Practices Commission).

Russell -- Feb. 27 -- "I call that section the 'Salute to Nixon section'" (the Vice President was chairman of the existing Committee).

ACTION -- Killed.

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

Late in 1959 there were indications the Administration would propose some type of anti-lynching legislation in 1960, but this never materialized. The speculation arose after a state grand jury, meeting in Pearl County, Miss., in November 1959, refused to return an indictment of the alleged lynchers of Mack Charles Parker in Poplarville, Miss., April 24, 1959.

Attorney General William P. Rogers Nov. 17 said the state's handling of the case was "a travesty on justice" and might lead to new proposals for legislation to enable the Federal Government to move in more strongly when states refused to act in racial crimes. Although some Senators submitted bills providing for federal action in lynching cases, the Administration gave them no support and the anti-lynching bills quietly died in 1960.

OTHER PROPOSALS

THE JOHNSON BILL -- Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) Jan. 20, 1959 introduced S 499. It featured: an anti-bombing provision; extension of the Civil Rights Commission; a grant of subpena powers to the Justice Department in investigations of voting rights cases; establishment of a Federal Community Relations Service to assist in the conciliation of disputes over segregation and integration.

'LIBERAL' BILLS -- A bipartisan bloc of Members in both houses, including House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) and Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), sponsored several bills which went beyond the other measures in providing: authority for the Federal Government to develop and enforce, through the courts, school desegregation plans; Part III powers for the Justice Department.

In hearings on both sides of Capitol Hill, Administration and Republican witnesses generally opposed any proposals that went beyond the President's recommendations. Attorney General Rogers held to the Administration position that Part III "might do more harm than good at this time".

Advocates of "strong" legislation, including the Americans for Democratic Action and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, continued to press for Part III.

House -- The House Judiciary Subcommittee No. 5 June 17 approved an amended version of the Celler bill that contained, in essence, the Administration's proposals plus Part III.

What emerged from the House Judiciary Committee Aug. 20 was a clean bill (HR 8601 -- H Rept 956), deleting both Part III and the Administration's provision for aid to areas desegregating schools and for establishment of the Commission on Equal Job Opportunity.

At the end of the 1959 session, the House bill was still in the House Rules Committee, long a nemesis to civil rights bills. Celler had taken steps to bring pressure on the Rules Committee by filing a motion to discharge the bill from its jurisdiction. Such a petition, rarely used and less often successful, would need one more than half the number of House Members as signers.

Senate -- Some leaders in the Senate conceded that trying to work a bill through the Senate Judiciary Committee, which had never reported a civil rights bill, was only a formality, that they had no hope that the Committee would act favorably.

But the Senate Judiciary Constitutional Rights Subcommittee held hearings intermittently between March 18-May 8 and reported to the full Committee a two-part bill (S 2391) on July 15, 1959. This would have required preservation of voting records and extended the Civil Rights Commission.

The full Judiciary Committee began consideration of the Subcommittee bill Aug. 3, and was still considering it when Congress went home Sept. 15, 1959.

1960 ACTION SCHEDULED

While the bill was bottled up in the Judiciary Committee, several Senators threatened to bring up civil rights legislation on the floor by offering it as an amendment to other types of bills, including one bill, dear to Southern Senators, that concerned boiled peanuts.

To mollify this group and end the lengthy 1959 session, Majority Leader Johnson and Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) announced Sept. 14, 1959 that they planned to bring civil rights legislation up for debate about Feb. 15, 1960.

With the Civil Rights Commission scheduled to go out of existence 60 days after filing its report Sept. 8, Senate leaders turned to the Senate Appropriations Committee which obliged by attaching a rider to a House-passed Mutual Security Program appropriation bill. The rider extended the Commission for two years, to Nov. 8, 1961, and appropriated $500,000 to it. The Senate Sept. 14, and the House in the early morning hours of Sept. 15, approved the rider. Most of the debate on the rider consisted of Southern denunciation of the Commission's report.

SUMMARY OF 1960 ACTION

Soon after Congress reconvened Jan. 6, 1960, pressure increased on the House Rules Committee to release the bill reported to it by the Judiciary Committee Aug. 20, 1959. As the petition to discharge the Committee of the bill slowly gained more signatures, partisan statements were exchanged on the House floor. Republican leaders charged that a Democratic Congress was holding up the bill; Northern Democrats charged Republicans with cooperating with Southern Democrats by not signing the petition and by holding the bill in the Rules Committee.

Jan. 26 -- Attorney General Rogers announced the Administration intended to add to its 1959 bill a plan for court-appointed referees to help Negroes register and vote.

Feb. 15 -- Majority Leader Johnson, as promised, began Senate debate on civil rights. Because no bill had been reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, Johnson called up from the calendar a minor, House-passed bill (HR 8315) and invited Senators to offer civil rights amendments to it. (HR 8315 authorized the Army to lease, rent-free, unused officers' quarters at Fort Crowder, Mo., as a school for children of Stella, Mo., where a school building had burned in 1959.)

Feb. 18 -- The House Rules Committee granted the House bill (HR 8601) a rule covering debate on the bill. At that point, the discharge petition reportedly had received 211 signatures (over two-thirds from Democrats) and was within eight names of the 219 needed to put the petition on the House calendar. (For list of petition signers, see p. 203.)

Feb. 29 -- Southern speeches in the Senate against civil rights developed into a full-blown filibuster which lasted until March 8. During that time, the Senate met around-the-clock with only two breaks. The 18 Senators participating in the filibuster represented Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia. (For filibuster and delaying tactics, see box p. 193; for statistics on filibuster and Senate 1960 debate, see box p. 195)

March 8 -- A bipartisan group of Senate liberals offered a petition to invoke cloture to end the filibuster. Johnson and Dirksen opposed the cloture move, Dirksen saying he preferred to wait for the House to pass its own bill, Johnson saying cloture should not be invoked until it was clear that two-thirds of the Senators (the number needed to invoke cloture) were agreed on the principal elements of a civil rights bill. Cloture proponents argued that they should not have to wait to vote on provisions until two-thirds had informally decided on what should be included and predicted that the House measure would be a "truncated bill".

The cloture petition was sponsored by Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.). The bipartisan group that provided the first 16 signatures necessary to bring a vote on the petition were Democratic Sens. Douglas, Carroll (Colo.), Morse (Ore.), McNamara (Mich.), Hart (Mich.), Randolph (W.Va.), Williams (N.J.) and Clark (Pa.); and Republican Sens. Javits, Scott (Pa.), Keating (N.Y.), Bush (Conn.), Kuchel (Calif.), Cooper (Ky.), Allott (Colo.) and Case (N.J.). Fifteen more Democrats who also signed the petition, bringing the total number of signers to 31, were: Chavez (N.M.), Engle (Calif.), Humphrey (Minn.), Moss (Utah), Symington (Mo.), Muskie (Maine), McCarthy (Minn.), McGee (Wyo.), Gruening and Bartlett (Alaska), Church (Idaho), Kennedy (Mass.), Pastore (R.I.), Anderson (N.M.), Young (Ohio).

March 10 -- The cloture move was rejected by a roll-call vote of 42-53 (D 30-33; R 12-20). With four of the 99 Senators absent (there was one vacancy), this was 22 votes shy of the necessary two-thirds of the Senators present and voting (64 in this case.). (See p. 203)

The House adopted the rule for debate on its civil rights bill by a 314-93 roll-call vote and began action on HR 8601. (For voting, see chart p. 428)

March 24 -- The House passed HR 8601 by a 311-109 vote (D 179-94; R 132-15). (For voting, see chart p. 430)

The Senate, which had accomplished little in the interim, abandoned its own bills and referred the House-passed bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee with instructions that the bill be reported back to the Senate no later than midnight March 29.

March 28-9 -- The Senate Judiciary Committee held hearings on the House-passed bill, with Administration and Southern spokesmen testifying. Following the hearings, the Committee voted amendments to every section.

March 30 -- The Senate began consideration of the House bill as amended and reported (S Rept 1205) by the Judiciary Committee. It quickly agreed to all but one of the Committee's amendments. The amendment on which action bogged down was to the referee plan

April 8 -- The Senate passed HR 8601, 71-18. (For voting, see chart p. 488)

April 19 -- The House Rules Committee cleared the bill for House concurrence in the Senate's amendments. Voting to send the bill to the floor were Democratic Reps. Ray J. Madden (Ind.), James J. Delaney (N.Y.), Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. (Mass.), Richard Bolling (Mo.), and Republicans Leo E. Allen (Ill.) Clarence J. Brown (Ohio) and B. Carroll Reece (Tenn.). Against clearing the bill were Democrats Howard W. Smith (Va.), William M. Colmer (Miss.) and James W. Trimble (Ark.) and Republican Hamer H. Budge (Idaho).

April 21 -- The House, by a 288-95 roll-call vote, agreed to the Senate's amendments to HR 8601, thus sending the bill to the President. (See chart p. 434)

May 6 -- The President signed the bill into law.

July 12 -- The Democratic nominating convention in Los Angeles adopted, by voice vote, the strongest civil rights platform in the party's history after Southerners representing nine states presented a minority report.

July 27 -- The Republican nominating convention in Chicago adopted a civil rights plank almost as strong as the Democrats' after Vice President Richard M. Nixon prevailed on the platform committee.

Aug. 8 -- President Eisenhower called on the reconvened Congress to enact two provisions, originally in the Administration bill, to establish a Commission on Equal Job Opportunity and provide federal funds to aid areas desegregating their schools. They had been rejected in the House and Senate.

Aug. 9 -- Northern and Southern Democrats in the Senate joined in voting for a motion to table the two provisions, claiming they were offered in a move to block passage of other Democratic measures. The tabling motion carried 54-28. (For voting, see chart p. 512) Threats to force more voting on civil rights in August never materialized.

Registrars, Referees, Enrollment Officers?

Major Issues in the 1960 Civil Rights Debate

The following issue-by-issue study shows how major provisions were narrowed, broadened or rejected as the civil rights bill inched along through Congress.

Voting Rights

The most legally complicated, politically loaded and time-consuming issue was the question of what kind of provision to add to the 1957 Civil Rights Act to further help Negroes register and vote.

The issue grew out of arguments that the results of the 1957 Act were disappointing and was specifically touched off by the Civil Rights Commission's report of Sept. 8, 1959. One of the Commission's recommendations was that Congress empower the President to appoint temporary federal registrars to register qualified Negroes in areas where there was proven discrimination against Negroes qualified to vote under state laws. (1959 Almanac p. 293)

This set off a chain reaction of bills to implement the proposal, bills taking alternate approaches to the same end, and bills designed to compromise the varying approaches.

The issue became ensnarled in a wrangle over whether the plan approved by Congress would have an Administration or Democratic label. Attorney General Rogers took a strong stand, through public statements and letters sent to Congress throughout the debate, against substitutes for the Administration plan. President Eisenhower, after endorsing Rogers' plan, took no direct part in public debate on the issue. But political desire for credit by both sides was not the only reason for lively debate; there were differences of opinion over what would be the most effective approach, and many difficult legal questions were involved.

Registrar Plan

Bills to implement the Civil Rights Commission's recommendation were introduced in the Senate by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and several Democratic cosponsors (S 2814) and in the House (HR 9452) by Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.).

The Humphrey bill provided that upon receipt by the President of nine sworn complaints from one district of discrimination by state voting registrars, he would turn the complaints over to the Civil Rights Commission for investigation. If the Commission found one complaint valid, the President would appoint a federal employee living in or near that district to register for federal elections all Negroes he found qualified under state laws. If state voting officials on or before election day refused to recognize the validity of a federal registration, the Justice Department could seek a court order requiring them to do so; if this order were flouted, the state officials could be punished for contempt.

In a move to preclude Southern complaints that the registrar proposal had not been considered in committee, Senate Rules and Administration Committee Chairman Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.) Jan. 7, 1960 announced that his Committee would hold hearings on the proposals. The hearings ran Jan. 18-Feb. 5. The House Judiciary Committee held hearings on the bills Feb. 9, 16.

Administration spokesmen were asked several times whether they would oppose or offer an alternative to the registrar plan, but their position was not clear until Attorney General Rogers Jan. 26, while the hearings on the registrar bill were underway, announced an Administration plan.

Referee Plan

The basic idea of the Administration was to place responsibility for guaranteeing voting rights in the courts. A bill embodying the plan was submitted to Congress by Rep. William M. McCulloch (R Ohio) Jan. 28 (HR 10035) and was modified in the form of a new bill (HR 10625) when hearings by the House Judiciary Committee revealed several technical flaws.

The bill provided that the process would begin with a civil suit brought in a federal court by the Justice Department under the 1957 Act. The suit would seek an injunction against persons who had denied, or were about to deny, anyone his right to vote in a primary or general federal election because of race, color, religion or national origin. If this suit were successful, the Attorney General would ask the courts to make a separate finding, on the basis of another court proceeding, that there was a pattern or practice of such discrimination.

If the court made such a finding, Negroes in that area could turn to the court and ask to be registered. They would be heard either by the judge or by voting referees appointed by the judge, who would determine whether the Negroes were qualified under state voting laws. If the Negro were heard by the referee, the hearings would be ex parte (without cross-examination by opponents) and the referee would report to the court which Negroes he found qualified to vote. If the referee's report were not challenged by state officials within 10 days, the court would issue the Negroes certificates stating that they were qualified to vote in state as well as federal elections and those Negroes' names would be entered in a court decree, which would be served on state officials.

The court could authorize the referee or other persons to see that the qualified Negroes were allowed to vote and their ballots were counted. Any official who refused to comply with the court decree -- whether by refusing to register the qualified Negro, by refusing to let him vote or by refusing to count his ballot -- would be subject to contempt of court proceedings.

Referees or Registrars?

A major controversy developed over the two approaches. Proponents of the Administration plan argued that it was preferable because: it covered state and local as well as federal elections, while the registrar plan covered only federal elections; administered by courts and judges familiar with the problems of the area, it would be more palatable to the South than a plan that employed Washington-appointed registrars (though the registrars would be from the local area); it was more readily enforceable because a court order would already have been issued and contempt citations could speedily be brought.

Proponents of the registrar plan argued that they could and would amend their bills to apply to all elections; that the court process would be subject to many delays and some Southern federal judges might be loath to apply and enforce the plan; the referees plan placed an administrative process in a judicial agency and might therefore be unconstitutional; that the plan destroyed the original concept of a quick and simple registration for all Negroes living in an area where there had been voting discrimination.

Federal Enrollment Officers

Sen. Hennings Feb. 17 submitted to his Rules and Administration Committee the draft of a compromise bill which he hoped would mend the split between proponents of the two other approaches.

The basic idea of the Hennings plan was that after the Attorney General brought a suit under the 1957 Act and the judge hearing the case found a pattern or practice of discrimination (without, as in the referee plan, involving a separate case), the Attorney General would so notify the President. The President would then appoint "federal enrollment officers" for that area to register all Negroes found qualified under state voting laws. If a Negro's qualification were challenged on election day, he could vote provisionally until the case was decided; if he were prevented from voting on or before election day, the Justice Department would ask for a temporary court injunction.

The Hennings plan was destined to become identified as a Democratic bill and never became the instrument of compromise he had in mind.

House Action

The House was the first chamber to put its stamp on the referees plan, which had received a substantial boost when House Judiciary Committee Chairman Celler, long a civil rights advocate, Feb. 26 announced he had switched his backing from the registrar to the referee plan.

The original Administration plan for the appointment of court referees (HR 10035) was offered on the House floor March 14 by Rep. John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.). Its submission as an amendment to the civil rights bill was specifically provided for in the rule covering House debate (H Res 359). Rep. William M. McCulloch (R Ohio) then offered a more detailed version of the referees proposal. The third draft worked out by the Justice Department, McCulloch's proposal (embodied in HR 11160) made these concessions to Southern objections: (1) a Negro would have to prove that he was discriminated against by a state registrar after the court had found that a pattern or practice of discrimination existed (thus providing a

Negro Registration in the South

During the 1960 civil rights debate, speakers were unable to cite firm statistics on Negro voting in the South. The 1960 census was not yet published, so estimates of Negro voting and registration percentages in the South were based on the 1950 national census. The Civil Rights Commission and the Republican National Committee, however, computed percentages based on registration totals and projections from the 1950 census figures. They showed a far smaller percentage of voting-age Negroes voting than of whites.

The following statistics were included in the 1959 Civil Rights Commission report. Statistics for Alabama, Mississippi and Texas are unofficial; figures for Tennessee were not available.

State	Voting-Age Whites, 1950	% in Population	Voting-Age Non-Whites 1950	% in Population

"grace period" for Southern officials to restore Negroes to the voting rolls before the Negroes went to the court referee to get a voting certificate); (2) the bill no longer specified that the judge could direct the referee to oversee the ballot counting to ascertain whether the ballots of court-qualified Negroes were counted.

Democratic Senators later criticized the change requiring Negroes to try to register with state registrars even after a court found they had regularly been discriminated against by those registrars. Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh said the purpose of this was to place the registrars under threat of contempt of court if they did not register any qualified Negro after the court finding. Walsh said the presumption was that the registrars would comply and "it is our hope that the referee provision, in the end, (would) be used very little."

Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier (D Wis.) then offered a new version of the Hennings proposal for presidentially appointed federal enrollment officers to register qualified Negroes who were discriminated against. This version made two changes in the original Hennings proposal: (1) the process could be begun on the recommendation of the Civil Rights Commission as well as by the Attorney General after a court finding; (2) the President would have more discretion as to whether and when to appoint the enrollment officers.

Southerners, in a strategic move, joined Northern Democrats in letting the Kastenmeier-Hennings proposal -- stronger than the referees plan -- be substituted for the McCulloch, and then for the Lindsay, proposal on four standing and teller votes. But when the vote came on whether to adopt the Kastenmeier amendment as an amendment to the civil rights bill itself, Southern Democrats cast their votes with Republicans and the amendment was defeated on a 143-170 teller vote.

In a move to give the House another chance to attach a referees section to the civil rights bill, McCulloch again offered the plan, this time deleting the provision that the referee might oversee the voting to guarantee that Negroes registered by the court were allowed to vote. But because the House Clerk inadvertently read the bill without deleting this provision, Celler offered the latest McCulloch plan as a substitute for the one which was misread. Southerners were overruled by Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), who was presiding, when they raised points of order against the various stages of this process.

At this point, Northern Democrats, realizing that if any voting rights bill was to be passed by the House it would have to be some form of the referees proposal, initiated bipartisan moves to strengthen the latest form of the McCulloch bill. An amendment offered by Rep. James G. O'Hara (D Mich.) was pronounced "acceptable" by McCulloch and was agreed to March 16 by a teller vote of 188-120. The O'Hara amendment guaranteed that if a Negro applied to the referee for registration 20 or more days before the election, and his application were challenged by the state registrar, the court must issue an order that would allow the Negro to vote "provisionally" and provide for the impounding of his ballot until the question of his qualifications was decided. If the Negro applied within the 20 days preceding the election and were challenged, the court would have discretion on whether to let him vote. The O'Hara amendment was also designed to restore to some degree the referee's authority to oversee the voting and ballot counting; it specified that "the court may take any other action, and may authorize such referee or such other person as it may designate to take any other action appropriate or necessary" to enforce the court decrees.

Acceptance of the O'Hara amendment was the only positive victory by the Northern Democrats in the House. After that, civil rights proponents headed off about a dozen amendments offered by Southern and conservative Republicans and designed to weaken both the

Delaying Tactics

The Southerners' delaying tactics in 1960 debate focused attention on the use of quorum calls, and efforts to adjourn the Senate, as parliamentary devices to aid the filibuster. To offset the exhaustion of an around-the-clock session, Southerners countered with quorum calls at all hours, and cots were placed in Senate offices to enable Members to nap nearby until they were called to the floor.

Frequent quorum calls are an effective device for consuming time and catching breath. The Senate cannot conduct business unless more than half of its Members (at least 51 Senators) are present, but under ordinary circumstances the Senate usually assumes the presence of a quorum. However, it is the prerogative of any Senator, if he can get the floor, to initiate the calling of the roll by stating: "I suggest the absence of a quorum." Unless the quorum call is rescinded, the Senate Clerk calls the name of each Senator. Often, Members enter the Senate Chamber just long enough to answer to their names and then leave, but they are considered present thereafter.

Quorum calls take, at a minimum, about 15 minutes to complete but ran for as long as one hour and 22 minutes during the 1960 filibuster. This not only provided respite for Southern orators but also placed the burden on Northerners to be present in sufficient numbers to avoid adjournment. During the quorum calls at night most of the Southerners stayed away from the Senate.

When a quorum is not present, the Senate must either adjourn or direct the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators. Southerners would prefer that the Senate adjourn because after an adjournment the Senate begins a new legislative day.

On each new legislative day, the Journal from the preceding day must be read unless, by unanimous consent, it is dispensed with. Insisting on the reading of the Journal, which can take several hours, is a filibuster technique. Also at the start of a new legislative day, the Senate must hold a "morning hour" for the introduction of bills, insertions of articles in the Congressional Record, etc. This "hour" can take as long as two hours. Start of a new legislative day also aids filibusterers conscious of the rule that a Senator is not supposed to speak more than twice on the pending subject during a legislative day. Although the rule can be circumvented without much difficulty, Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), from the time the civil rights issue was brought to the floor Feb. 15, 1960, had the Senate recess instead of adjourn each night until the round-the-clock session began Feb. 29. Thus the Senate, after weeks of debate, remained officially in the legislative day of Feb. 15 until March 8, when there was a brief adjournment.

amendment embodying the Administration's voting referees plan and sections of HR 8601.

The referees plan was most seriously endangered when Hamer H. Budge (R Idaho) March 18 offered an amendment that, in effect, would have limited its use to federal elections only. Attorney General Rogers sent a letter to Celler urging defeat of the amendment. With many Northern Congressmen out of town for a long weekend, the Budge amendment was narrowly defeated by a teller vote of 134-137. Approximately half the Republicans present voted with Southern Democrats in favor of the amendment.

Other amendments offered by Southern Democratic Reps. Edwin E. Willis (La.), Howard W. Smith (Va.), and Robert W. Hemphill (S.C.) and Republican Reps. George Meader (Mich.), August E. Johansen (Mich.) and Budge would have: eliminated provision for registering any persons but those named in the original Justice Department suit; made each person coming before the court or referee prove he was discriminated against because of race or color (rather than just that he was qualified to register and had not been allowed to do so); allowed the judge to permit cross-examination of each person coming before the referee.

The House March 23 formally agreed to the referees plan on a 295-124 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 430)

Senate Action

The Senate made two substantive changes in the referees plan, both designed to temper Southern objections. All other amendments were rejected. They included efforts by the pro-civil rights "liberal bloc" to strengthen the plan and amendments by the 18-member Southern bloc to weaken it.

Referee Plan Amended

The first amendment to the referees plan as passed by the House was offered by Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) when the Judiciary Committee began its consideration of the House bill.

The Kefauver amendment, which the Committee adopted by a 7-6 vote, deleted the language that required a Negro's appearance before a voting referee to be ex parte (without cross-examination by opponents) and added a provision that the hearings would be held in a public office, that the referee must give the local registrar two days' written notice of the time and place of the hearing, and the registrar, or his counsel, might "appear" and make a transcript of the proceedings.

Judiciary Committee members voting with Kefauver for his amendment were six Democrats, Johnston (S.C.), Ervin (N.C.), McClellan (Ark.), Eastland (Miss.), O'Mahoney (Wyo.) and Carroll (Colo.); against the amendment were Hart (D Mich.), Hennings (D Mo.), Dirksen (R Ill.), Hruska (R Neb.), Keating (R N.Y.) and Cotton (R N.H.).

Critics argued that this would result in a crowded room of spectators and thus more intimidation of the Negroes and that "appear" might be construed to mean that the registrar might give testimony himself, cross examine the witness, etc.

Proponents of the amendment argued that secret, "star chamber" proceedings must be avoided and that it did not permit registrars to take part in the proceeding.

By a 69-22 vote, the Senate April 1 accepted a substitute for the Kefauver amendment, offered by John A. Carroll (D Colo.). The Carroll amendment restored the House language requiring that hearings before the referee be held ex parte and allowed the court to set the times and places of the hearings. (For voting, see chart p. 486)

VOTING QUALIFICATION

A second amendment to the referees provision, offered by Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and accepted April 7 by a 79-12 vote, raised more legal problems than it settled. Senators were split on what the effects of this amendment would be and the liberal bloc divided in the voting, part of its membership casting the 12 negative votes. (For voting, see chart p. 487)

The controversy started over Southern objections to an amendment accepted in the House March 16 that guaranteed that if a Negro applied to a court for registration 20 or more days before the election, and his application was challenged by the state registrar, the court must issue an order that would allow the Negro to vote "provisionally" and provide for the impounding of his ballot until the question of his qualifications was decided. Southerners protested that this would supersede state laws that require registration 30 to 60 days before the election and would discriminate against whites who met this deadline. Rep. James G. O'Hara (D Mich.), sponsor of the amendment, told the House, "The qualifications with regard to the time within which a voter may register will remain that of state law."

The compromise amendment accepted by the Senate was written by an unusual coalition including Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), Carroll, Dirksen, Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) and Richard B. Russell (D Ga.). It added to the section stating that courts shall allow the Negro to vote provisionally the words, "provided, however, that such applicant shall be qualified to vote under state law." Even its sponsors split over the amendment's effect on state registration requirements. Dirksen assured the Senate that it provided that state law would apply. But Carroll equally assured Senators who feared there might be such delays at earlier stages of the referee process (winning the original civil suit, finding a pattern or practice of discrimination) that by the time the Negroes could get court relief after once more trying to register with state authorities, the final date for registration would have passed and the registration offices would be closed. Carroll said in such a case, the judges would waive the state registration date: "Do Senators believe that a federal court is going to allow any registration law to stand in their way if they (Negroes) have been victims of a pattern or practice of discrimination, perhaps by the maladministration of these very same laws?"

Tabling Motions

The motion to table was a device frequently used in 1960 during the Senate consideration of civil rights to cut off debate on amendments and, in effect, to kill them. Once a Senator moves to lay an amendment on the table, there must be an immediate vote without further debate. A successful tabling motion indefinitely postpones further consideration of that amendment. To nail it down harder, a Senator, after a tabling motion succeeds, will usually "move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was laid on the table" and another Senator will move to table the motion to reconsider. The second tabling motion is usually quickly agreed to and the amendment is, in effect, killed. The same process may be used to kill an entire bill.

The second important question raised by the amendment was whether the requirement that the court must find the Negro qualified, before he is allowed to vote provisionally, would require a full-dress adversary proceeding and thus negate the intent of the O'Hara amendment, which was designed to allow such proceedings to be temporarily postponed if they could not be completed by election day. Those voting against the amendment felt that it would. Carroll, however, contended that the judge would make a temporary finding based on the prima facie evidence in the referee's report and would not conduct adversary proceedings until after the election.

Justice Department officials said that they did not support the amendment but confessed that they were not clear on what its effect would be.

CLARIFICATION IN HOUSE

When the House agreed to the Senate's amendments to the bill April 21, Reps. O'Hara, McCulloch, Lindsay and Celler engaged in a colloquy designed to establish legislative intent should this section of the bill be subject to court tests. They said: A Negro seeking help under the referees plan must have tried to register within the time period established by state law; that the only exception to this would be if a court finding of a pattern or practice of discrimination were handed down after the state registration period had ended -- the judge could then waive state registration-time regulations; that the judge would decide if the applicant were "qualified under state law" and should be allowed to vote provisionally on the basis of the applicant's sworn statement and the report of the referee -- that there would be no need for full-dress proceedings.

Southerners objected throughout the debate to this interpretation of the Senate amendment.

Southern Amendments Rejected

The Southern bloc did not conduct an all-out campaign against the referees plan although they made several attempts to weaken it. Among their proposals were amendments which would have: limited the implementation of the plan to Congressional elections only; made Negroes prove they were discriminated against because of race or color; struck the plan from the bill. April 7, just before the Senate reached the stage that no more amendments could be considered, the 18 Southern Senators who had conducted the filibuster together offered five technical amendments to the provision. All five amendments were tabled en bloc by voice vote.

Stronger Plans Rejected

Leaders of the liberal bloc made several unsuccessful attempts to strengthen the referees plan and to supplement it with some form of the registrar or enrollment officers proposals.

The first attempts were made while the House was voting on its own bill and the Senate was considering the Administration plan section-by-section. In a move to obtain decisions on alternative voting plans before the House bill reached the Senate, Douglas, Clark and Javits offered them as amendments to the third section of the Administration bill, which required the preservation of voting records.

Douglas and Javits March 18 offered a plan to permit the President to appoint federal registrars after he had received 50 complaints and investigated them. This was defeated when the Senate agreed to a tabling motion by Dirksen on a 53-24 vote. (For voting, see chart p. 483)

Javits and Clark then offered a plan which would have provided for court-appointed referees or Presidentially

Statistics On Senate Debate

The Senate debate on civil rights, which began Feb. 15 and ended April 8, was the longest in recent years but Senate veterans could remember one that was longer -- the Smoot-Hawley tariff debate, which began in September 1929 and continued intermittently until March 1930.

37 DAYS

Actual debate on civil rights occupied 37 days during which 45 roll-call votes were taken. Three Senators voted on every one of the 45 roll calls: Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine), Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) and Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.).

Debate was highlighted by around-the-clock sessions from Feb. 29 through March 8 that were imposed by the majority of the Senate in hopes of wearing down Southern opposition. That nine-day session lasted 157 hours, 26 minutes, broken by a 15-minute recess March 2 and a recess over Sunday, March 6, that provided 42½ hours of respite. The longest unbroken session during that period took 82 hours and 2 minutes from March 2 to 5.

PERFECT RECORDS

In the nine-day stretch there were 13 roll-call votes and 50 quorum calls. Three Senators were present for all 63 votes and quorum calls: E.L. Bartlett (D Alaska), Mrs. Smith and Keating; four others missed only one of the calls: Frank Church (D Idaho), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Thomas E. Martin (R Iowa) and Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas).

The 18 Southerners whose strategy was to stay away while members of the civil rights bloc gave up their sleep to answer quorum calls in the middle of the night averaged only 16 appearances at the 63 calls. Of the Democratic Presidential candidates, Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) answered six calls, John F. Kennedy (Mass.) only two and Stuart Symington (Mo.) 17.

appointed enrollment officers, or both, to register Negroes after a court, on the request of the Attorney General, found the existence of a pattern or practice of voting discrimination. While the bill was under consideration, Attorney General Rogers wrote to Dirksen strongly criticizing the plan and urging its defeat. It was killed March 24 by a tabling motion which was agreed to 51-43. (For voting, see chart p. 483)

While the Senate Judiciary Committee was considering the House-passed bill, Hennings offered his enrollment officers plan as an amendment. This was rejected March 29 by a 6-8 Committee vote. Hennings then offered the plan on the Senate floor April 4, Dirksen moved to table it, and the tabling motion was agreed to 58-26. (For voting, see chart p. 486)

In attempts to speed up the processes under the referees plan, members of the liberal bloc concentrated particularly on removing the provisions requiring Negroes to return to state registrars after the pattern-or-practice finding and to prove to the courts or referees anything but that they were qualified to vote. Amendments to this effect were opposed by the Justice Department and rejected by the Senate majority.

Court Orders, Bombings

Two sections of the Administration bill were substantially broadened before final enactment. One Administration proposal would have made it a federal crime to obstruct the carrying out of court orders for school desegregation; the other would have permitted the Federal Government to prosecute instances of bombings of schools and churches. The final bill made the court order provision apply to obstruction of any kind of court order and the bombing provision apply to bombing or burning of any kind of building or vehicle. The result was that the provisions were more general in nature and less obviously directed at racial incidents in the South.

COURT ORDERS

An unusual series of maneuvers took place throughout the 1960 Senate action until Congress finally broadened the Administration proposal to make obstruction, by threats or force, of court orders for desegregation of schools a federal crime.

The original intent was to arm the Attorney General with stronger powers against such mob violence as occurred in the Little Rock integration crisis in 1957. But arguments prevailed that the proposal should be extended to deal "uniformly and equally with all persons" and that judges should be given the same powers to enforce their orders in labor disputes.

At first it appeared there might be no anti-mobbing provision at all. During the Senate's first go-round on the bill, it adopted an amendment by Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) March 11 to extend the provision to cover all court orders. Senators then immediately turned around and, by a 49-35 vote, adopted a motion by Wayne Morse (D Ore.) to table the section as amended, thus scrapping the entire provision. Southerners once more successfully employed the tactic of voting to attach an amendment which might lead to the defeat of a proposal they did not like. The reversal of some Northerners apparently was caused by a realization of the anti-labor tone of the Lausche amendment; others said the section was needless in the first place -- that the Attorney General should, as he did not in the Little Rock case, try to deal with mobs by fully employing the contempt powers of the courts. (For voting, see chart p. 482)

Following this Senate action, Attorney General Rogers wrote Rep. McCulloch, the House sponsor of the Administration bill, urging that the House (which had not yet voted on the bill) retain the original provision. A broadening amendment offered in the House March 23 by Rep. Samuel L. Devine (R Ohio) was ruled out of order by Rep. Walter under House rules that only amendments germane to the purpose of the bill under consideration may be offered. As passed, the House measure contained the original section, applying only to court orders for school desegregation.

When the Senate Judiciary Committee went to work on the House bill, Minority Leader Dirksen offered an amendment to broaden the provision again and the Committee agreed, 9-5. The Senate March 30 approved the Committee's action by a 68-20 roll-call vote and this time no attempt was made to kill the section. The House accepted the amendment April 21. (See chart p. 485)

BOMBING PROVISION

Similarly, an Administration provision originally designed to let the FBI investigate "hate" bombings or burning of churches and schools was extended to cover arson or bombings directed against any building, facility or vehicle. The extension of this provision also had a labor angle. It was argued that bombings in labor disputes should be meted the same punishment as those in racial incidents. The validity and possible effects of this argument caused Congressmen less difficulty than the court-order problem. The broadening amendment was attached by the House Judiciary Committee July 30, 1959 and by the Senate (before it took up the House-passed bill) March 14 by an 85-1 vote. (See chart p. 482)

Desegregation, Job Aid

Two sections of the Administration bill -- those most vehemently opposed by Southerners -- were scrapped entirely. There was substantial evidence that this action was not unexpected or entirely opposed by the bill's sponsors. President Eisenhower throughout March and April made no call for restoration of the provisions in the final bill, but asked for their passage in August.

The two provisions would have: (1) established a permanent Commission on Equal Job Opportunity Under Government Contracts to investigate and try to eliminate racial discrimination in companies working under Government contracts; (2) provided federal technical assistance to school agencies going through a desegregation process; a prologue to this provision endorsed the Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision and said state and local governments "are now obligated to take steps toward the elimination of segregation in their public schools".

Southerners gained votes against the proposed Commission by arguing that it would establish a precedent for a federal Fair Employment Practices Commission to put a national ban on discrimination in employment and that the provision constituted an endorsement of Vice President Nixon, who headed the current President's Committee on Government Contracts.

The desegregation assistance section faced Southerners' objections to any legislation on school desegregation, and their opposition was all the more inflamed by the prologue.

Both provisions were deleted from the Administration bill by the House Judiciary Committee in 1959. At that time Committee Chairman Celler said an "unholy alliance" of Southern Democrats and Republicans was responsible for their removal.

Attempts to restore these provisions on the House floor were ruled out of order on the grounds they were not germane to the civil rights bill. Celler offered first the section providing for the Commission on Equal Job Opportunity. Rep. Howard W. Smith (D Va.) raised a point of order that the provision was not germane and he was sustained by the presiding officer, Francis E. Walter (D Pa.). Celler appealed Walter's ruling to the House membership and Walter was sustained by a standing vote of 157-67. (Under House custom the presiding officer's rulings are almost never overridden.) Most of the Republicans joined with the Southern Democrats to uphold Walter's ruling. The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People later that day issued a statement saying: "A Republican-Democratic coalition is tearing the pending bill to pieces.... Some Members made speeches for the printed record and then voted in opposition to their own speeches because the vote was not on roll call."

Celler then offered the provision for aid in desegregation. Again a point of order was raised and again Walter ruled that the provision was not germane. This ruling was not appealed.

SENATE ACTION

When the Senate Judiciary Committee held hearings on the House-passed bill, Attorney General Rogers March 28 urged the Committee to "act favorably on the House bill" but said that if the Committee "decides to amend the House bill" it should add the two provisions. Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) offered them as Committee amendments, but both were rejected.

One more attempt to add these provisions was made on the Senate floor. Sen. Javits April 1 offered the Commission provision, Minority Leader Dirksen, Senate sponsor of the Administration bill, moved to table the amendment, and the tabling motion carried by a 48-38 (D 27-27; R 21-11) vote. (For voting, see chart p. 486) Dirksen said he had urged the President not to include it in the original Administration bill and that its adoption might "jeopardize passage" of the civil rights bill.

Keating April 4 offered the desegregation assistance provision. Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) offered an amendment to Keating's amendment to delete the reference to the 1954 Supreme Court decision. Sen. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) moved to table both amendments, and the tabling motion carried by a 61-30 (D 37-20; R 24-10) vote. (For voting, see chart p. 486)

After a White House meeting April 6 between President Eisenhower and Republican Congressional leaders, Dirksen said, "The President was quite happy about the bill and so was the Attorney General. Both voiced the hope that it will not be changed."

Part III, School Desegregation

Also rejected were amendments which provided for Part III (see p. 187) or, more narrowly, for permission for the Attorney General at least to enter private suits for school desegregation.

Part III was sponsored by Celler in the House and approved by a House Judiciary Subcommittee, but was deleted July 28, 1959 by the full Judiciary Committee by an 18-13 vote. When Celler March 22, 1960 offered Part III as a floor amendment, Walter ruled that it was not germane to the civil rights bill. The ruling was not put to a vote.

The Senate twice voted to reject Part III. The first vote occurred March 10, 1960 just after the liberal group lost in a move to invoke cloture on Senate debate. Seeking a showdown, Sen. Francis Case (R S.D.), an avowed opponent of Part III, offered it as an amendment. After brief debate, Majority Leader Johnson moved to table the amendment and his motion carried by a 55-38 vote (D 34-28; R 21-10). (For voting, see chart p. 481) Dirksen that day said President Eisenhower, when asked earlier in the year if he wanted Part III, said, "No, not now."

The second Senate vote on Part III took place April 4. Javits first offered an amendment to allow the Attorney General to enter private suits for school desegregation. Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.) amended that to add Part III. Dirksen moved to table both and the tabling motion was agreed to 56-34. (For voting see chart p. 486)

Excerpts from Senate Debate Display Variety of Views

Excerpts from the Senate debate:

Feb. 15 -- Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- "We are going to do what is right in this matter, even though we do not satisfy the extremists on either side...if we attempted to satisfy them, some people would be completely out of business."

Feb. 16 -- Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- The proposed bills "seek to single out certain groups of Americans on no basis but their race, and demand that they be given rights superior to those ever sought by or granted to any other Americans in...history."

April 4 -- John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- "There is needed means to give (Negroes) the chance through education to catch up with the lost years and to attain not only political voting equality, but also an equality of opportunity which...equal education affords."

April 8 -- Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) -- "This bill flies in the face of the Constitution; it absolutely destroys due process so far as the local election official is concerned."

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- "The bill...sets up an elaborate obstacle course which the disenfranchised Negro in the South must successfully run before he will be permitted to vote at all."

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- "In the passage of any legislation we must determine what is practical and realistic.... If we try to move too far too quickly, we may accomplish nothing."

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- "Moral persuasion and right thinking cannot be accomplished by statute, however strict or punitive in nature. Good will is needed.... A little of the old-fashioned religion is required.... Progress cannot be legislated."

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- The civil rights bill "is not a victory for anyone. It is a compromise measure.... This kind of halfway measure is a compelling invitation to a renewal of the struggle for effective civil rights legislation at the very next opportunity."

HOUSE AND SENATE FLOOR ACTION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

In 1960 civil rights action began with House leaders trading accusations over who was holding up the civil rights bill (HR 8601) in the Rules Committee and with preparations for action on the Civil Rights Commission's registrar proposal.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) Jan. 12 said few Republicans had signed his discharge petition (which reportedly had 150 of the required 219 signatures). Celler said, "This apparently is a political pay-off for Southern support for upholding vetoes and supporting the labor bill last year."

House Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), replying to Celler, said the charges were "a lot of political baloney". While he opposed the use of discharge petitions as a matter of policy, Halleck said, he had not urged Republicans not to sign the Celler petition.

At his Jan. 13 press conference, President Eisenhower said, "I don't even know whether it is constitutional" when asked about the Civil Rights Commission proposal for federal voting registrars. Mr. Eisenhower said Congress should act "decisively" on the House bill and not let other "controversial proposals" interfere with legislation already under consideration.

Senate Action

As had been promised in September 1959 by Majority Leader Johnson and Minority Leader Dirksen, the Senate Feb. 15 began debate on civil rights.

Since no civil rights bill had been reported by a Senate committee or passed by the House, Johnson called up from the calendar a minor, House-passed bill (HR 8315) and invited Senators to offer civil rights amendments to it. HR 8315 authorized the Army to lease, rent-free, unused officers' quarters at Fort Crowder, Mo., as a school for children of Stella, Mo., where a school building had burned in 1959.

Johnson's move touched off debate on Senate procedure as well as on the substance of civil rights proposals. A motion by Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) to postpone consideration of civil rights for a week (until Feb. 23) was rejected Feb. 16 on a 28-61 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 476)

A resolution (S Res 273) by Wayne Morse (D Ore.) to discharge the Senate Judiciary Committee of further consideration of a subcommittee-approved civil rights bill (S 2391), effective Feb. 25, was rejected Feb. 16 on a 4-68 roll call. The Senate then rejected by voice vote another Morse resolution (S Res 274) to discharge the Rules and Administration Committee, effective Feb. 25, of further consideration of a bill (S 2814) authorizing the President to appoint federal registrars in areas where qualified Negroes were denied the right to register.

The first civil rights amendments officially came before the Senate Feb. 17, when Dirksen offered the seven-part Administration civil rights bill (S 3001) as an amendment to the House-passed Stella school bill. Southern opponents were armed with lengthy speeches against the civil rights proposals, and the first week ended with no substantive action taken.

(Feb. 18 the House Rules Committee cleared the House bill (HR 8601); debate was set for March 10. Senate leaders reportedly were planning not to press for final Senate action until the House passed its civil rights bill and sent it to the Senate.)

The Senate's second week was highlighted by parliamentary maneuvering to prepare for eventual voting, and by lengthy speeches by Southern Senators expressing their objections to civil rights bills in general and the pending seven-part Administration plan in particular.

Johnson announced that the Senate, starting Feb. 29, would meet "all night around the clock...until a vote is obtained".

Russell, leader of the Southern bloc, countered with a warning that his group would use every parliamentary device to delay action and Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) Feb. 24 placed on the leadership "the responsibility for the health and lives of Members of the Senate who cannot stand up to" all-night sessions.

In its third week, Senate consideration of civil rights proposals developed into a full-blown filibuster as the leadership called an around-the-clock session broken by a 15-minute recess March 2. By the end of the week, maneuvers to find points of compromise between civil rights proponents themselves and between Northerners and Southerners were underway. Meanwhile, almost all committee activities were suspended.

In a 67-10 roll-call vote, the Senate Feb. 26 endorsed Johnson's plans for an around-the-clock session. (For voting on this and other procedural roll calls, see charts p. 478-80)

As the around-the-clock session began Feb. 29 the Southerners, divided into three teams, consumed time with lengthy speeches, quorum calls at all hours, numerous roll-call votes on procedural motions, complicated parliamentary inquiries about hypothetical situations, and lengthy questions to the speaker designed to provide him some respite. The 18 Senators participating represented Ala., Ark., Fla., Ga., La., Miss., N.C., S.C. and Va.

The first substantive vote taken was when the Senate March 2, by a 64-8 roll-call vote, agreed to a motion by Johnson to table an amendment offered by Sen. Russell Long (D La.) to the first section of the Administration bill. It would have specified that the provision to make obstruction of a court's school desegregation order a crime could not be construed to prevent freedom of speech in advocating separation of the races or legal resistance to "forcible integration." (For voting see chart p. 479)

The Southerners' speeches, which held almost entirely to the subject of civil rights, concerned such points as: racial violence in the North; voting apathy among Negroes; the "integrationist" Supreme Court; claims that Northern newspapers were distorting the real issues; and the current rash of sit-down strikes by Negroes protesting segregation at lunch counters. The strikes began Feb. 1 in Greensboro, N.C., and spread throughout the South and to Northern chain stores maintaining segregated facilities in the South.

CLOTURE MOVE

March 8 a bipartisan group, led by Sens. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), offered a petition to invoke cloture to end the filibuster. (For petition signers, see p. 203)

The cloture move was strongly opposed by both Johnson and Dirksen. Johnson March 8 said it was "premature", for he hoped the Senate first "might be able to find an area of agreement...a good, workable measure which will represent the views of 67 Members of the Senate". Dirksen March 8 said "we might proceed under better circumstances if we were to wait until the House acts" and March 10 said his vote against ending debate on his own bill "may seem a little awkward ...but with me it's a matter of time."

Javits' position was that the Senate should not have to wait until two-thirds of the Senators informally agreed on what should be in the final bill. March 8 he said: "The people of New York sent me here on the constitutional principle that it took a majority, not two-thirds, of the Senate to act." Douglas March 9 said if cloture were not voted, "we will be told" that "strong measures" must be dropped because of the filibuster threat.

The cloture motion was rejected March 10 by a roll-call vote of 42-53 (D 30-33; R 12-20). With four of the 99 Senators absent, this was 22 votes shy of the necessary two-thirds of the Senators present and voting (64 in this case). It was the first cloture vote since 1954, when the Senate failed to stop debate on an atomic energy bill by a vote of 44-42 (R 40-3; D 4-38; Ind. 0-1). (1954 Almanac p. 564) A cloture motion had not been successful since 1927. (For voting see chart p. 481)

The House the same day began debate on its civil rights bill. While the House moved towards passage of its bill, the Senate made little headway.

House Action

The House Rules Committee Feb. 18 cleared the House Judiciary Committee bill (HR 8601) for House action. At that point, the discharge petition reportedly had received 209 signatures -- only 10 less than the necessary 219. (For the Committee vote to clear the bill, see p. 190) The House March 10, by a 314-93 roll-call vote, adopted the rule (H Res 359) for debate on HR 8601. (For voting, see chart p. 428)

The House March 14 began substantive consideration of the bill and spent the week deciding what additional provisions were to be added to it. After two Administration provisions were rejected on technicalities, the debate bogged down over voting rights. (See p. 192)

The first action came when Judiciary Committee Chairman Celler offered the two sections of the original Administration civil rights bill (HR 4457) that were deleted by the Committee in 1959. These were the provisions to establish a Commission on Equal Job Opportunity and offer monetary assistance to areas desegregating their schools. Celler's amendments were ruled out of order. (See p. 196)

President Eisenhower was asked at his March 16 press conference if he would urge Senate Republican leaders to work to restore those sections to the bill. Mr. Eisenhower said: "I am trying to find a moderate, reasonable path that points to progress and so I believe in this bill.... I want the best bill the Congress will give me...."

The balance of the House debate concerned the referees provision, which was finally accepted March 23 on a 295-124 roll call. March 24 the House passed the amended version of HR 8601 by a 311-109 roll-call vote after defeating, by a 118-304 vote, a motion by Richard H. Poff (R Va.) to recommit the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 430)

Made obstruction, by threats, force or threatening letters or communications, of any federal court order for school desegregation punishable by a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for 60 days, or both.

Made crossing state lines to avoid prosecution for or giving evidence about bombing or burning of any building or facility punishable by a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment of five years, or both; made crossing state lines to avoid punishment for or giving evidence on bomb threats or false bomb scares punishable by a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment of one year, or both.

Required preservation of voting records for federal elections for two years, and gave the Attorney General authority to inspect them.

Empowered the Civil Rights Commission to administer oaths and take sworn statements.

Authorized the U.S. Commissioner of Education to arrange with local school authorities for the education of children of members of the armed forces where their schools were closed to avoid integration.

Authorized federal courts to appoint referees to help Negroes register, after a voting suit was won and a finding made of a "pattern or practice" of discrimination.

Senate Action On House Bill

The Senate March 24, after six weeks' debate on civil rights, gave itself a brief respite when it adopted a motion by Johnson to refer the just-passed House bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee with instructions that the bill be reported out no later than midnight March 29.

The instructions were opposed by Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D Miss.), whose motion that the bill be committed without a time limit was defeated by a roll-call vote of 19-72. Johnson's motion was then agreed to by an 87-5 vote. (For voting, see chart p. 483)

Committee Action

The Senate Judiciary Committee March 28-29 held hearings on HR 8601 and March 29 adopted amendments to every section of the bill. Several of these amendments were technical (changing titles of provisions, numbers of subsections, etc.) but nine were substantive.

Attorney General Rogers appeared March 28 and Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh both days.

March 29 -- Charles J. Bloch, counsel for the Terrell County, Ga., Board of Registrars (subjects of a pending Justice Department voting rights suit), testified against the referee plan.

The most important change the Committee made in the House bill was the addition of the Kefauver amendment to the referees section. (See p. 194)

Following are the major amendments to HR 8601, aside from Kefauver's, that were recommended by the Committee and adopted March 30 by the Senate, with the exception of the first, by voice votes.

- Broadened Title I, making obstruction of court orders for school desegregation a federal crime, to apply it to all court orders; deleted language making obstruction "by any threatening letter or communication" a crime; fixed penalties at a fine of up to $1,000 and/or imprisonment up to one year. This was offered in Committee by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and approved by a 9-5 vote. The Senate adopted it by a 68-20 roll call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 485) This amendment was substantially the same as that which was offered by Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) March 11, accepted by the Senate, over Dirksen's opposition, by a 65-19 vote, only to lead to deletion of the entire section by a 49-35 vote.

- Deleted from Title II, the anti-bombing provision, a section making a bomb threat or false bomb scare a crime. Dirksen said this provision was opposed by the Justice Department and "would make a national police force of the FBI".
- Broadened Title II to outlaw transportation or possession of an explosive with the knowledge or intent that it would be used to damage any building or vehicle. Penalties were fixed at one year imprisonment and/or $1,000 fine; if personal injury resulted, 10 years and/or $10,000 fine; if death resulted, life imprisonment or a death penalty if recommended by a jury. This amendment was sponsored by Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) and was part of a similar amendment previously agreed to by the Senate March 17.
- Also made it a federal crime to use interstate facilities for bomb threats or false bomb scares, punishable by one year in prison and/or a fine of $1,000.
- Changed Title III to require preservation of voting records for 22 months instead of two years. The sponsor, Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.), said that the two-year requirement would necessitate the purchase of new ballot boxes because the old ones would still contain the records on election day. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) said it would force 165,115 districts to buy new ballot boxes.
- Deleted from Title III a provision that records requested by the Justice Department could be produced at a U.S. District Attorney's office as well as in the office of their custodian.
- Deleted from Title IV a provision that Civil Rights Commission personnel need not be appointed in accordance with civil service laws.
- Deleted a section of Title V empowering the U.S. Commissioner of Education to negotiate for the use of public schools constructed with federal aid under the impacted areas program to provide for the schooling of children of military personnel when the schools have been closed to avoid integration. Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming March 29 wrote the Committee that this section "limits the broader and more flexible authority" of another section of the same provision stating more generally that arrangements may be made to provide the schooling after the Commissioner has decided that no other educational agency would do so.

The following amendments were rejected by the Committee:

Hennings -- Add to the bill his enrollment officers plan; 6-8 vote.

Carroll -- Amend the referee plan to give the courts authority to waive the requirement that a Negro must prove to the referee that he was refused registration by a state official; 4-10 vote.

Keating -- Provide federal aid to areas desegregating their schools (6-7 vote) and establish a Permanent Commission on Equal Job Opportunity; voice vote.

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) -- To comply with earlier Senate action, strike Title I, outlawing obstruction of court orders for school desegregation, from the House bill; 6-8 vote.

Keating -- Add language endorsing the 1954 Supreme Court decision against school segregation; 3-10 vote.

The Senate March 30 agreed, on a 71-17 roll call, to begin consideration of the House-passed civil rights bill (HR 8601) as amended and reported March 29 by the Committee (S Rept 1205). (For voting see chart p. 485)

At the end of the eighth week of debate it became increasingly clear that a substantial majority of Republicans and Northern Democrats were in the mood to pass a bill closely resembling the one passed by the House and that they had the votes to ward off amendments either to strengthen or weaken it.

The only amendments accepted were two changes in the court-appointed voting referees plan. (See p. 194) A "third reading" of the bill was accomplished April 7 and the bill was thus closed to further amendment. But Southerners clearly were not ready to let the bill pass without saying a few more words. Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) spoke for more than nine hours April 5 and 6.

The Senate April 8, by a 71-18 roll-call vote, passed the bill after turning down a motion by Sen. Eastland to recommit the bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee. The Eastland motion was defeated when a tabling motion by Dirksen carried by a 70-19 vote. The 18 Southern Senators voted against final passage and were joined by Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) in voting against Dirksen's tabling motion. (For voting, see chart p. 488)

Final Action

The House Rules Committee April 19 sent the bill to the floor for final approval. (For Committee vote, see p. 190) The House April 21, by a 288-95 roll-call vote, agreed to the Senate's amendments and sent the bill to the President. (For voting, see chart p. 434)

The President signed the Civil Rights Act into law May 6 (PL 86-449). In his statement, Mr. Eisenhower said: "While I regret that Congress saw fit to eliminate two of my recommendations, I believe the Act is an historic step forward in the field of civil rights."

August Action

When Congress reconvened Aug. 8 following the Presidential nominating conventions, at which strong civil rights planks were adopted by both parties (see Political Section of this volume), the President called on Congress for more civil rights action. In his Aug. 8 message, the President asked for passage of the two provisions deleted earlier: to establish a Commission on Equal Job Opportunity and provide monetary assistance to areas desegregating their schools.

These proposals were incorporated in a bill (S 3823) offered by Dirksen and 10 Republican co-sponsors. The bill was tabled Aug. 9, by a 54-28 roll-call vote, on a motion by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.). All but four Democrats voted in favor and all but two Republicans voted against. (For voting, see chart p. 512)

Clark said civil rights was being used as a "political football" and the Senate should "get down to the business we were brought back here to do." Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) said Dirksen in April had voted to table both provisions in the new Dirksen bill. He said President Eisenhower in April had failed to take a strong stand for the provisions.

Dirksen replied that his earlier votes were in the interest of getting a civil rights bill passed at the time.

Despite Republican threats to bring the issue to the floor again before adjournment, no further civil rights votes were taken in the 86th Congress.

The fall Presidential campaign, however, kept it very much alive as a political issue.

SENATE AND HOUSE CIVIL RIGHTS AMENDMENTS

During the early Senate consideration of civil rights -- before the House bill reached the Senate -- the following amendments were offered:

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED -- SENATE

March 14 -- Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) -- Extend second section of the Administration bill, making flight across state lines to avoid prosecution for bombing a church or school a federal crime, to make it apply to the bombing of all buildings and vehicles. Roll call, 85-1. (RC 39. For voting on RCs 39, 40 and 41, see chart p. 482)

John A. Carroll (D Colo.) -- Amend section two, the anti-bombing provision, to state that the offender could be prosecuted only in the federal judicial district in which the crime was committed or in which the offender was held in custody before fleeing (deleting a section saying he could be prosecuted also in the district in which he was apprehended). Voice.

March 17 -- Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- Amend section two to also outlaw transportation or possession of explosives with intent to use them to blow up any building or vehicle and to make false bomb scares a crime. Roll call, 87-0. (RC 40)

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Amendment embodying second section of the Administration bill as amended by Goldwater, Carroll and Keating amendments. Roll call, 86-1. (RC 41)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED -- SENATE

March 2 -- Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Specify that the first section of the Administration bill, on obstruction of court orders on school desegregation, could not be interpreted as preventing freedom of speech to advocate separation of the races or legal resistance to integration. Tabling motion agreed to by roll call, 64-8. (RC 26. For voting, see chart p. 479.)

March 10 -- Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Attach to civil rights bill Part III, empowering the Attorney General to seek injunctions and court orders against discrimination in schools, housing, etc. Tabling motion agreed to by roll call, 55-38. (RC 35. For voting on RCs 35 and 36, see chart p. 481)

Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- Amend first section of the Administration bill to reduce penalties for obstructing court orders on school desegregation to a $1,000 fine and/or one year in prison. Accepted, roll-call vote, 89-0. (RC 36) Defeated when the entire section was eliminated March 11. (See Dirksen, below)

March 11 -- Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Amend first section of the Administration bill to make it apply to obstruction of any court order. Accepted, roll-call vote, 65-19. (RC 37) Defeated when the entire section was eliminated. (For voting on RCs 37 and 38, see chart p. 482)

Dirksen -- Adopt an amendment embodying the first section of the Administration bill as amended by Ervin and Lausche amendments, making obstruction of any court orders a federal crime. Tabling motion agreed to by roll call, 49-35. (RC 38)

March 18 -- Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.)-Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Add to third section of the Administration bill a provision for Presidential appointment of federal registrars to enroll Negroes after the President had received 50 complaints of discrimination and had investigated them. Tabling motion agreed to by roll call, 53-24. (RC 42. For voting on RCs 42 and 44, see chart p. 483)

March 24 -- Javits-Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Add to third section of the Administration bill a provision for court appointment of referees or Presidential appointment of enrollment officers for both, to register Negroes after a court, on the request of the Attorney General, found a "pattern or practice" of deprivation of the right to vote. Tabling motion agreed to by roll call, 51-43. (RC 44)

Amendments to HR 8601

The amendments that follow were offered to the House-passed civil rights bill (HR 8601) when it reached the Senate:

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED--SENATE

April 1 -- John A. Carroll (D Colo.) -- Amend Kefauver committee amendment to restore House language that a voting referee's hearing be held ex parte (without cross-examination) but specify that the court shall set the time and place for the hearing. Roll call, 69-22. (RC 56) For voting on RCs 56-61, see chart p. 486.)

April 7 -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Amend the referees plan to permit courts to let Negroes vote provisionally, when their applications were challenged by state officials, only if the court was satisfied the Negro met state voting qualifications. Roll call, 79-12. (RC 67)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED -- SENATE

April 1 -- Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Establish a permanent Commission on Equal Job Opportunity to prevent discrimination by firms working under Government contracts. Tabled by a 48-38 roll-call vote. (RC 57)

April 4 -- Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- Provide federal technical assistance to areas desegregating their schools and endorse the Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation decision. Tabled by roll call, 61-30. (RC 58)

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Amend Keating amendment (above) to delete reference to the 1954 Supreme Court decision. Tabled along with the Keating amendment.

Javits -- Permit the Attorney General to enter private suits filed in behalf of desegregation. Tabled by roll call, 56-34. (RC 59)

Pat McNamara (D Mich.) -- Amend Javits amendment (immediately above) to add the so-called Part III section, authorizing the Attorney General to seek injunctions to protect any civil right. Tabled with the Javits amendment.

Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) -- Amend the referee plan to require that a Negro prove to the referee only that he is qualified to vote. Tabled by roll call, 52-38. (RC 60)

Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.) -- Amend the referees plan to authorize appointment by the President of enrollment officers to register Negroes. Tabled by roll call, 58-26. (RC 61)

April 5 -- Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) -- Amend the referees plan to require each Negro who came before the referee to prove he had been discriminated against because of race or color. Voice vote.

Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) and John L. McClellan (D Ark.) -- Amend the referees plan to require a judge hearing a Negro's application for a voting certificate to observe the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, requiring adversary proceedings and opportunity for opponents of the application to be heard. Roll call, 29-64. (RC 62. For voting on RCs 62-67, see chart p. 487.)

April 6 -- Ervin -- Limit the referees plan to Congressional elections only. Tabled, roll call, 72-16. (RC 63)

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- Exempt records for primary and special elections from the requirement for preservation. Tabled by roll call, 68-18. (RC 64)

John A. Carroll (D Colo.) -- Amend the referees plan to give courts discretion to waive the requirement that a Negro seeking a voting certificate prove he had tried to register with state officials and had been refused even after a pattern of discrimination had been found by the court. Tabled by roll call, 62-32. (RC 65)

April 7 -- Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Delete the referees plan. Tabled by roll call, 73-18. (RC 66)

Ervin and 17 Southern co-sponsors -- Change the referee plan to: strike from the section defining voting qualifications the stipulation that qualifications for Negroes cannot be more stringent than those for whites; reduce the time period in which Negroes could seek court relief after a pattern of discrimination in an area has been found; remove the stipulation that in the case of challenged applications the question of literacy would be decided on the basis of the referee's report; strike the section empowering the referee as well as the court to decide on challenged applications; strike the language allowing the court to appoint an officer other than the referee to take action to enforce the court order entitling certain Negroes to vote. Rejected en bloc by tabling motion, voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED -- HOUSE

March 16 -- James G. O'Hara (D Mich.) -- Amend the referee plan to require the court to allow a Negro to vote provisionally if he applied to the referee 20 or more days before election and were challenged; if he applied within 20 days before the election, the court would have discretion. Permit the court to authorize the referee to help enforce the plan so that a Negro would have his ballot counted. Standing, 146-110; teller, 188-120.

March 22 -- William M. McCulloch (R Ohio) -- Add to the bill the Administration's referee plan (HR 11160) as amended by Celler substitute deleting the referee's authority to oversee voting and by the O'Hara amendment. Celler substitute accepted by standing vote, 199-104; agreed to as an amendment to the bill by a standing vote, 192-112, March 22 and by a 295-124 roll call March 23. (For voting, see chart p. 430)

William C. Cramer (R Fla.) -- Amend the section of the bill on schooling for military children, where public schools were closed to avoid integration, to remove the U.S. Commissioner of Education's authority to take over schools that had received federal construction aid and instead allow him only to negotiate for rental of schools from local authorities. Standing, 173-86.

March 23 -- Cramer -- Amend anti-bombing section of the bill to make flight to avoid prosecution for, or giving testimony about, bomb threats punishable by one year imprisonment and/or $1,000 fine. Standing, 119-98; teller, 132-90.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED -- HOUSE

March 15 -- George Meader (R Mich.) -- Provide that court referees register only those Negroes on whose behalf a suit has been brought and won under the 1957 Civil Rights Act. Standing, 94-138.

Robert W. Kastenmeier (D Wis.) -- Substitute for the Lindsay (R N.Y.)-McCulloch (R Ohio) court-appointed referee plan a provision for federal enrollment officers appointed by the President to register Negroes after a court or the Civil Rights Commission found that Negroes in a particular district were discriminated against. Accepted in lieu of the McCulloch substitute, standing, 115-98, teller vote, 152-128; accepted in lieu of the original Lindsay amendment, teller, 179-116; accepted as an amendment to the bill, standing, 195-155; then rejected on a teller vote, 143-170.

March 16 -- Edwin E. Willis (D La.) -- Amend the McCulloch-Celler referee plan to require that each Negro who came before the referee prove he had been discriminated against because of race or color. Standing, 113-161; teller, 121-149.

March 17 -- Willis -- Write into the referee plan that a Negro's proof to the referee that he was illegally denied the right to vote would be "prima facie evidence" he was denied the right to vote because of race or color. Standing, 121-192.

March 18 -- Meader -- Amend the referee plan to permit each judge to decide whether the hearings before the referee would be ex parte (as provided in the plan) or adversary. Standing, 62-90; teller, 91-119.

Hamer H. Budge (R Idaho) -- Amend the referee plan to provide for its use only when federal offices were at stake in the election. Standing, 129-148; teller, 134-137.

March 21 -- August E. Johansen (R Mich.) -- Limit use of the referee plan to elections in which candidates for federal offices were listed on the same ballot as those for local offices. Teller, 137-157.

March 22 -- Robert W. Hemphill (D S.C.) -- Require that referees be familiar with local, state and national election laws and voting qualifications. Voice.

Willis -- Amend the referee plan to require that the Attorney General must ask the court to find a continuous pattern or practice of discrimination. Standing, 90-120.

Meader -- Delete section of the referee plan that allowed hearings before the referee to be ex parte. Voice.

Howard W. Smith (D Va.) -- Delete words "upon request of the Attorney General" from the referee plan's provision that the court shall make a finding of whether there has been a pattern or practice of discrimination.

Meader -- Provide that court referees register only those Negroes on whose behalf a suit has been brought and won under the 1957 Civil Rights Act. Voice.

March 23 -- J. Carlton Loser (D Tenn.) -- Amend the anti-bombing provision of the bill to outlaw transportation and possession of explosives with the intent to use them to destroy any building or vehicle. Voice.

Basil L. Whitener (D N.C.) -- Strike from the bill's provision on obstruction of court orders for school desegregation the section making use of "any threatening letter or communication" a crime. Standing, 87-130; teller, 114-147.

John James Flynt Jr. (D Ga.) -- Strike from the bill the provision making obstruction of court orders for desegregation of schools a crime. Voice.

Whitener -- Write into the section on desegregation orders language defining a "public" school. Voice.

John Dowdy (D Texas) -- Add to the bill's section requiring preservation of voting records a provision that this would not overrule any state law. Voice.

Dowdy -- Declare that the section on obstruction of court orders for school desegregation would not abridge freedom of speech to argue against integration. Voice.

Robert W. Hemphill (D S.C.) -- Delete a provision permitting injunctions against obstruction of court orders on desegregation. Voice.

Court Cases

The Justice Department in 1960 brought two civil suits seeking court injunctions against alleged discrimination against voters because of race. This brought the total of voting rights cases filed since the 1957 Act, on which they were based, to six. The two suits:

BIENVILLE PARISH, LA. -- A June 7 suit charged that white citizens' groups and the voting registrar of Bienville Parish, La., had unlawfully removed 560 Negroes from voting lists prior to the 1956 election.

HAYWOOD COUNTY, TENN. -- In a suit filed Sept. 13 the Justice Department charged 27 persons and two banks with using economic pressures to prevent Negroes from voting in Haywood county. This was the first time the Government invoked the 1957 Act to halt economic pressures by individuals.

The complaint charged that the alleged intimidation followed the 1959 formation by Negro citizens of the Haywood County Civil and Welfare League, to encourage qualified Negroes to vote, and that the pressures were exerted against both those working and registering in the drive.

FAYETTE COUNTY, TENN. -- Nov. 16, 1959 a suit was filed against the Fayette County Democratic Committee and 19 of its members for holding a "white primary" Aug. 1, 1959. April 25, 1960 Deputy Attorney General Walsh announced entry of a consent judgment barring further discrimination against Negroes in the Democratic primary. The judgment had the effect of an injunction against further discrimination by the Committee and violations would be punished under contempt proceedings.

This was the first of the six suits brought under the 1957 Civil Rights Act to be settled by negotiation.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS

The Supreme Court in 1960 issued four decisions concerning the Civil Rights Acts. (1959 Almanac p. 293)

The Court Feb. 29 upheld a key section of the 1957 Act. In U.S. v. Raines, it unanimously reversed the decision of a federal judge dismissing a Justice Department suit against registrars of Terrell County, Ga., on the grounds that the 1957 Act was unconstitutional. Although the registrars were state officials, Judge T. Hoyt Davis April 16, 1959 dismissed the suit on the grounds that the 1957 Act might permit Justice Department suits against private citizens who were not state officials, which would be unconstitutional, he said.

The Supreme Court, in ordering the suit reinstated, said Davis had no power to rule on hypothetical situations, and the provision of the 1957 Act, when applied as in the Terrell County case against state officials, was clearly constitutional.

In another civil rights decision, the same day, the Court in U.S. v. Thomas unanimously affirmed the decision of a federal court in Louisiana that the names of 1,377 Negro voters must be returned to the voting rolls of Washington Parish. Relying on the Raines decision, the Court said the names of Negroes were illegally removed from the voting rolls because of regulations that apparently were applied exclusively to Negroes. The original Justice Department suit in the case was brought against Louisiana voting registrars under the same section of the 1957 Act that applied in the Raines case.

The Court May 16 held unanimously that the 1960 Civil Rights Act authorized the Justice Department to sue states in voting rights cases. In U.S. v. Alabama, the Department, holding the state responsible for alleged denials of voting rights by Macon County registrars after the registrars all died or resigned, sued the state. While the suit was pending, the 1960 Act, specifically allowing suits against states in such cases, became law. The case was sent back to a federal district court.

The Supreme Court June 20 ruled 7-2, in Hannah v. Larche and Slawson, that the Civil Rights Commission, because it was only a fact-finding body which could not decide issues or impose punishment, was not required by the Constitution, when subpenaing voting registrars, to reveal the names of Negro witnesses who had complained of violations of voting rights. The decision permitted the Commission to resume hearings in Louisiana, where it had been barred since July 12, 1959 by a federal district court from continuing its investigations without releasing the names.

Signers of Discharge Petition

Following are the names of 207 (D 163; R 44) House Members known to have signed the petition to discharge the civil rights bill from the Rules Committee. Actually, 211 signed, but the names of two of those Members were not available; in addition, Boyle (D Ill.) died and Dollinger (D N.Y.) left the House after signing. Under House rules, their signatures counted toward the required 219 until their successors were chosen.

Moderates' Votes Decisive Between Opposing Groups

A Congressional Quarterly study of Senate votes on controversial amendments to the 1960 civil rights bill identifies the members of the two groups with strikingly opposing viewpoints on civil rights and of the "moderate" group between the two. The study shows:

- 20 Senators, almost all from the Deep South (D 19; R 1), opposed a group of 30 other Senators (D 25; R 5) on more than 75% of the votes taken on the amendments.
- A group of 50 Senators held the decisive "swing" role in formulating the final bill.
- Of the 50 "moderates", 21 were Democrats (32 percent of the 65 Senate Democrats) and 29 were Republicans (83 percent of the 35 Senate Republicans).

The votes selected for the study were cast on 19 of the 22 amendments offered in the Senate during the eight-week debate in early 1960. Three amendments were omitted because they were adopted either unanimously or with only one dissenting vote. Also eliminated were the votes on all procedural questions and on passage.

On each of the 19 amendments, only five of which were offered by Southerners, the 18 Southern Senators who conducted the filibuster voted en bloc. (See 100 percent scores below.) CQ assessed the Southern position on each vote according to how the 18-member Southern bloc voted. CQ then measured the percentage of times each Senator voted with or against the Southern position.

CQ counted a "yea" vote as a vote for the Southern position in CQ Roll Calls numbered 35, 37, 38, 42, 44, 55, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 65 and 67. "Nays" were considered pro-Southern position votes in Roll Calls 26, 56, 63, 64 and 66. (These votes and individual stands on them appear in the Senate vote charts, p. 476 ff.) Announced stands and pairs were counted as votes.

The following chart illustrates the party line-up of those who voted with and against the 18-member Southern bloc on a majority of the amendments:

	All Democrats	Non-Southern Bloc Democrats	Republicans	Totals
With Southern bloc on 50% or more votes	33 (51%)	15 (32%)	22 (63%)	55
Against Southern bloc on 51% or more votes	32 (49%)	32 (68%)	13 (37%)	45
Totals:	65 (100%)	47 (100%)	35 (100%)	100

Senators' Voting Measured Against 18-Member Southern Bloc

The following list shows the number of times each Senator voted with the 18-member Southern bloc on the 19 controversial amendments, the number of times each voted against the bloc, and the percentage of votes each Senator cast in agreement with the 18-member Southern bloc position. The names of Democrats are in this type. Republicans are italicized.

Status of School Desegregation in Southern States

Of the 3 million Negro public school students in the 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, 6.3 percent were attending classes with white children at the beginning of the 1960-61 school year, an increase from the 6 percent figure recorded in 1959-60, according to the Southern School News.

The newspaper, an independent, nonpartisan publication established by Southern newspaper editors, released the figures in its December 1960 edition (Vol. 7, No. 6) following a survey of the 17 states which, along with the District of Columbia, maintained segregated schools by law before the U.S. Supreme Court's May 17, 1954 ruling holding public school segregation unconstitutional (Brown v. Board of Education).

General findings of the survey:

- Seven border states and the District of Columbia, where the first desegregation occurred, continued as the principal areas of bi-racial classrooms: 194,849 Negroes attended racially mixed classes in Del., D.C., Ky., Md., Mo., Okla., Texas and W.Va.
- An additional 776 Negroes attending mixed classes lived in Ark., Fla., La., N.C., Tenn., and Va. In each state the Negroes involved were 1 percent or less of the total Negroes enrolled.
- The four integrated Negroes in Louisiana were the first in the "deep South", leaving Ala., Ga., Miss. and S.C. as the only completely segregated states. These four states contained 36 percent of the South's Negro pupils.

Other findings by Southern School News:

Public School Faculties -- Public school faculties remained segregated in nine states, including five that had desegregated classes. Eight other states and the District of Columbia reported some degree of desegregation among faculties, although in five of these states several teachers lost their jobs in the change to bi-racial schools. Southern public school systems employed 494,054 teachers, about 20 percent of them Negroes.

Higher Education -- Of the 228 predominantly white tax-supported colleges and universities in the region, 138 in 13 states were desegregated "in practice or principle" and 15 of the 49 predominantly Negro schools were desegregated.

Anti-Integration Laws -- The legislatures of 15 states had adopted almost 300 laws and resolutions to prevent, restrict or control school desegregation. Most of these laws were passed after 1954, although some were enacted in anticipation of the 1954 decision.

Oklahoma was the only state that had taken legislative action to encourage desegregation. The legislatures of Missouri and West Virginia had removed racial designations from their school laws, recognizing desegregation as an accomplished fact. Maryland ratified the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution in 1959.

Five states, Ala., Ga., La., Va., and N.C., adopted laws giving direct tuition grants to students to attend private rather than desegregated schools. Nine states enacted pupil placement laws. The legislatures of eight states approved "interposition" resolutions, interposing the sovereignty of a state between a federal order and the state's citizens.

The chart below shows the status of desegregation in December 1960 according to the Southern School News:

Increasing tensions in U.S. relations with Cuba and the Dominican Republic made sugar legislation a top problem for Congress and the President in 1960.

Under the Sugar Act, the U.S. Government limits the amount of sugar various foreign nations may sell to U.S. concerns for domestic use. In July, in a move against Cuba, the largest exporter to the U.S., Congress authorized (HR 12311 -- PL 86-592) the President to reduce the amount of sugar Cuba could export to the U.S. and established a fixed formula for redistributing among various other nations and domestic producers any sugar cut from the Cuban quota. The President July 6 cut the Cuban quota.

Under the formula in the July law, the Dominican Republic, in addition to a quota of about 131,000 tons, was to receive an additional 321,857 tons that would have gone to Cuba.

However, after the Organization of American States Aug. 20 took action against the Dominican Republic, President Eisenhower Aug. 23 said the assignment of a "large sugar bonus" to the Republic would be "seriously embarrassing to the U.S. in the conduct of its foreign relations throughout the hemisphere" and asked Congress to give him authority to take the 321,857-ton new allotment away from the Dominican Republic.

The House and Senate each passed different versions of a bill (HR 13062) embodying the President's request, but the measure never went to conference and HR 13062 died when the 86th Congress adjourned sine die Sept. 1. As a result, the Administration was forced to authorize entry of the 321,857 tons of Dominican sugar the President had sought to bar. (For story on HR 13062, see p. 214)

The fact that Congress, in PL 86-592, extended the Sugar Act for only three months, from Dec. 31, 1960 to March 31, 1961, insured renewed Congressional debate on the issue immediately after the 87th Congress convened in January 1961.

Extension for a longer period than three months was blocked by the Senate, apparently because some Senators believed the House Agriculture Committee was attempting to railroad the measure it favored through Congress. The first sugar bill (HR 12311), originating in the House because it contained revenue provisions, did not reach the Senate until two days before the preconvention adjournment early in July; the second bill, also originating in the House, did not reach the Senate until two days before final adjournment of the 86th Congress Sept. 1. Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) of the House Agriculture Committee had maintained he wanted to avoid an extensive debate that would open the quota provisions of the Sugar Act to revision under pressures from rival producing interests.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 12311:

Extended the quota provisions of the Sugar Act, as amended, through March 31, 1961, except for the Cuban quota.

Instead of giving Cuba any fixed quota, gave the President, for the remainder of 1960 and for the period through March 31, 1961, discretion to assign Cuba a quota of whatever amount was in the United States' national interest, but not larger than Cuba would have received had its old quota simply been extended.

Authorized the President, if he assigned Cuba a new quota lower than it would have received by extension of its old quota, to obtain sufficient sugar to make up for the reduction in the supply coming from Cuba as follows:

Amounts that would have been assigned to Cuba to make up for domestic deficits could be redistributed among domestic producers if the President so wished. (This provision affected the estimated 156,000 ton 1960 deficit of Hawaii and Puerto Rico which Cuba was due to receive; under the provision the President could, for example, allocate this amount to domestic beet growers.)

Any remaining deficits from the cut in the Cuban quota would be made up first by "purchase" (not quota allocation) from countries having quotas of 3,000-10,000 tons (Costa Rica, Haiti, Panama, the Netherlands and Nationalist China) to the extent that their exports to the U.S. would be raised to 10,000 tons.

Cuban deficits remaining after this initial distribution would be made up 15 percent by purchases from the Philippines and the remainder by purchases, at specified percentages, from other quota countries including Mexico, Peru and the Dominican Republic.

If these provisions failed to provide sufficient sugar, additional supplies could be purchased from any foreign country, regardless of quota provisions, and refined sugar could be imported if sufficient raw sugar was not available.

Under the Sugar Act of 1948 (actually passed in 1947), as amended in 1951 and 1956, the Government limits the amount of sugar that may be sold in the domestic market, thereby maintaining domestic prices at a stable and "reasonable" level -- higher than the world free market price -- adequate to sustain a healthy domestic sugar industry of limited size.

Sugar Quotas

(Short tons, raw value)

The chart below shows how sugar quotas for 1960 changed after Congress enacted PL 86-592 and the President cut back the Cuban quota and allocated portions of the cutback to nations and areas other than Cuba. Column 1 shows quotas, based on an over-all national quota of 9.4 million tons, before the President acted. Column 2 shows quotas after the over-all national quota was raised to 10.4 million tons and Cuban cutbacks were reallocated in accord with PL 86-592.

The program is administered by the Agriculture Department. The Secretary of Agriculture determines how much sugar may reach the U.S. market each year, gearing the tonnage closely to expected demand. If prices rise, the supply is increased; if prices fall, supply is decreased.

In 1960 the Department appeared to be attempting to hold the raw sugar price to about 6.25 cents a pound, which was at least 2 cents a pound more than the world market price of sugar. The 2-cent differential, in effect, constituted a subsidy by the nation to sugar producers both at home and abroad, paid not through taxes (as are most farm-program subsidies) but through higher prices charged consumers (one-third housewives, two-thirds industrial users).

Although the National Confectioners Assn. has said the Sugar Act "is weighted heavily in favor of domestic producers and suppliers, without consumers getting an even break", many industrial users regard the Act as insurance against shortages and price fluctuations.

Quota System -- Each year the Secretary of Agriculture determines over-all sugar consumption requirements. The determination is made in December, subject to later revisions. What percentage of the over-all quota each sugar-producing area is permitted to sell in the U.S. is fixed by the Sugar Act, partly in terms of tonnage, partly in terms of percentages and contingencies.

Under the 1956 revision of the Sugar Act (1956 Almanac p. 493), 4,444,000 short tons, raw value, of sugar sales annually were assigned to domestic producers, as follows: domestic beet area, 1,800,000 tons; mainland cane area, 500,000 tons; Hawaii, 1,052,000 tons; Puerto Rico, 1,080,000 tons; Virgin Islands, 12,000 tons. Another 980,000 tons were assigned to the Philippines. All remaining tonnage necessary to make up an over-all national sales quota of up to 8,350,000 tons was to go to foreign countries, with Cuba getting 96 percent, all other foreign countries, 4 percent.

If the national sales quota exceeded 8,350,000 tons, 55 percent of the excess was to be allotted to domestic producers, 45 percent to foreign countries, with Cuba getting two-thirds of the 45 percent and Peru, the Dominican Republic and Mexico most of the rest. Under the 1956 law deficits caused by the inability of any group to fulfill its quota were to be made up mainly by domestic producers and Cuba.

To prevent an accumulation of domestic stocks in excess of need, the Secretary may impose acreage restrictions on domestic producers. Such restrictions were in effect for domestic beet sugar from 1955 to Oct. 18, 1960, when they were removed to offset the decreased supply from Cuba, and on mainland cane sugar from 1954-58. Tonnage restrictions were in effect in Puerto Rico from 1953-56.

Grower Payments -- Conditional special payments are made to domestic growers who do not grow more than their proportionate share, who meet minimum wage requirements set by the Secretary of Agriculture and who do not employ child labor. Growers who are also processors are required to pay fair prices for cane or beets purchased from other growers. The Secretary of Agriculture determines fair prices for each domestic area annually after public hearings. Congress annually appropriates funds for the sugar payments, which are financed out of the Treasury general fund. Treasury is reimbursed by an excise tax of one-half of 1 cent a pound, raw value, on all domestically manufactured sugar and on importers of sugar for direct consumption. The basic rate of payment to growers varies from 80 cents for 100 pounds of sugar, raw value, paid on the first 350 short tons produced per farm, to 30 cents for 100 pounds on all sugar in excess of 30,000 short tons produced per farm.

Sugar Legislation Background

The delicate and complex sugar policy spelled out in the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended, is the outgrowth of 171 years of Congressional action on sugar and the sugar industry. Highlights:

REVENUE TARIFF (1789-1890)

The first sugar legislation was a tariff act enacted in 1789 for the purpose of raising revenue. Under this act, the Federal Government collected 20 percent of all its import revenues during 1789-1890. The duty ranged from 1 cent to 3.5 cents a pound, and was about 2.5 cents a pound during most of this period. It aided development of the domestic sugar industry, especially in Louisiana. Under an 1876 reciprocal trade agreement with Hawaii, its sugar was admitted to the U.S. free of duty. This advantage spurred the Hawaiian sugar industry, which by 1890 was the Islands' most important industry.

THE SUGAR BOUNTY (1890-94)

The import tax was repealed in 1890 after a surplus in the U.S. Treasury ended the need for a revenue-producing tariff on sugar. In order to preserve protective advantages for the domestic sugar industry, however, a 2-cent bounty was given for each pound domestically produced. This step aided Cuban producers, while offsetting the Hawaiian tariff advantage. The price of Hawaiian sugar fell sharply and is credited with causing a revolt against the Hawaiian monarchy and the eventual establishment of the Republic of Hawaii in 1894.

TARIFF PROTECTION (1894-1934)

A new sugar tariff established in 1894 was designed to protect domestic industry. It also returned Hawaii to its preferred status in the U.S. market.

As a result of the Spanish-American War, free trade in sugar was extended to Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands, and preferred status was granted to Cuba.

Rigid controls were placed on sugar by Congress during World War I, when production was encouraged. After controls were removed at the end of the war, the price of sugar fluctuated widely as new methods, variations and surpluses in production, and depressions alternately drove prices sky high and to rock bottom.

The sugar tariff was raised on all foreign suppliers in 1921, 1922, and again in 1930, with Cuba's tariff somewhat lower than the tariffs imposed on other foreign suppliers. When in May 1932 the U.S. price of sugar dropped to less than 3 cents a pound, including a 2-cent tariff and the cost of freight from Cuba, it became apparent that a tariff was not the solution to the problem. The stimulus of high tariff protection was already causing over-production in certain domestic areas, thus offsetting the price benefits of protection. The 2-cent U.S. tariff imposed on Cuban sugar in 1930 and tariff increases all over the world made Cuba's sugar crop almost unsalable.

The U.S. Tariff Commission reported to the President on April 11, 1933 that the tariff had failed to solve the sugar problem. After numerous conferences between representatives of the sugar industry and government agencies, in September 1933 a Sugar Stabilization Agreement was submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, who rejected it as unworkable. But it was used as the basis for developing the Jones-Costigan Act of 1934.

THE QUOTA SYSTEM (1934-60)

On May 9, 1934, the Jones-Costigan Act was signed into law by President Roosevelt. It marked an entirely new approach to the sugar problem, based on a system of quotas, subsidies and an excise tax in addition to a tariff. The major provisions in the Act were as follows:

(1) Determination of the amount of sugar needed to supply the Nation's annual requirements.

(2) Division of the U.S. sugar market among domestic and foreign suppliers by the use of quotas.

(3) Allotment of quotas among the various processors in each area.

(4) Adjustment of production in each area to the established quotas.

(5) Levying of a tax on the processing of sugar cane and sugar beets, the proceeds of which were used to compensate producers for adjusting their production to marketing quotas.

(6) Equitable division of sugar returns among beet and cane processors, growers and farm workers.

The 1934 law remained unchanged until 1936, when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that a tax on sugar processors used as a device to control production was unconstitutional. A new law enacted in 1937 provided for payments to producers out of the Treasury from funds appropriated for this purpose.

The Act was extended by Congress in 1941, 1944 and 1946. The President lifted quota requirements when war broke out in Europe in 1939 and again from 1942-47.

In 1948 a new act changed the method of establishing quotas. Under the 1937 act, quotas for each area were set at a fixed percentage of the estimated requirements. The Sugar Act of 1948 assigned fixed quantities to domestic areas and the Philippines. Variable quotas were assigned to Cuba and other foreign countries, with the balance of U.S. requirements assigned to these countries on a percentage basis. Cuba received 98.64 percent of increased U.S. consumption. The United States felt obliged to help Cuba market its record postwar sugar crops, as Cuba had stepped up production and sold most of its crop to the United States during World War II at prices below the world market price.

Under the 1951 extension, Cuba received 96 percent and other foreign countries 4 percent of the variable quotas. Other quotas also were changed slightly.

In May 1956 the 1948 Act was again amended and extended to Dec. 31, 1960. Under the 1956 law Cuba had to share the benefit of increased U.S. consumption. Market growth in excess of 8,350,000 tons was shared 55 percent by domestic areas, 45 percent by foreign countries, as follows: 29.59 percent by Cuba and 15.41 percent by all other foreign countries. Cuba continued to share in prorated deficits resulting from inability of a domestic area to market its quota up to 8,350,000 tons, but any domestic area deficits in excess of that tonnage were prorated only to other domestic areas, under the 1956 law. The Philippine quota was unchanged.

Cuban Role

Cuba is the world's leading producer of cane sugar. The commodity accounts for 80 percent of her exports. Up to 1960, Cuba was the major single source of the U.S. supply, providing one-third of the sugar sold in the U.S. The Cuban crop has been accessible to the U.S. in time of war, and on several occasions was sold in the U.S. when higher prices were available on the world market. U.S. capital built the bulk of the Cuban sugar industry, and many Cuban sugar plantations were U.S.-owned.

Cuban growers benefited from the 2-cent-per-pound differential over the world market price that resulted from the operations of the Sugar Act in recent years. In 1959 this "premium" on 3,219,000 tons of sugar imported from Cuba amounted to more than $150 million. In addition, the U.S. gave Cuba a preferential tariff of 50 cents per 100 pounds on its sugar, compared with a 62.5-cent tariff on full-duty countries. Cuba also got an annual increase of about 50,000 tons in her quota as a share of normal increases in the U.S. market.

Relations between the United States and Cuba, which lies only 90 miles off the Florida coast, began to deteriorate shortly after Fidel Castro Jan. 1, 1959 overthrew the dictatorship of Gen. Fulgencio Batista. Charging the U.S. with "economic imperialism", the Castro government systematically took over U.S.-controlled sugar lands and other U.S. holdings, with little or no regard to payment. Beginning first with confiscation of the cane fields in order to "drive up the prices to the mills", the government later in 1960 moved into the mills themselves.

Cuba Feb. 13 signed a trade pact with the Soviet Union which made the latter the second largest purchaser of Cuban sugar. The Soviet Union agreed to buy 1 million tons of Cuban sugar annually for five years -- about one-sixth of the crop -- with 200,000 tons annually to be paid for in U.S. dollars at the world market price and the remaining 800,000 tons to be exchanged for Soviet farm and industrial machinery, petroleum, fuel oil, metals, chemicals, wheat, other products and technical advice. The U.S.S.R. also extended Cuba a $100 million credit to be repaid over 12 years at 2.5 percent interest.

President's Requests

In his Jan. 18 Budget Message, President Eisenhower asked Congress simply to extend the Sugar Act beyond its Dec. 31 expiration date. At his news conference Jan. 26 the President said "we are not going to be a party to reprisals or anything of that kind."

However, as a result of mounting tension between the U.S. and Cuba, Administration officials in early March sought the support of House Agriculture Committee Chairman Cooley for a four-year extension of the Act with a new provision giving the President authority to cut quotas for Cuba or other foreign countries if he felt the national interest required it.

The Administration request resembled an earlier proposal by Robert H. Shields, president and general counsel of the United States Beet Sugar Assn. Shields Feb. 2 called for limited Presidential authority to cut the sugar quota of any foreign country "in the interest of national security." Shields' statement, the association said, was the first public announcement of support from within the domestic sugar industry for a cut in the quota of sugar imported into the U.S. from Cuba.

Shields said that giving the President the emergency authority to cut the Cuban quota would be compromise between a "drastic" cut of the quota by Congress and an extension of the Sugar Act without change. "A simple extension of the law without change for any period would not give American consumers the added protection they now need," Shields said, "and would not give the President of the United States the additional negotiating power he needs in the interest of the national security to deal with Castro."

Cooley refused to support the Administration plan and said March 9 that it constituted a "weapon of reprisal". Cooley stuck to a proposal he had advanced earlier: a simple one-year extension of the Act without any quota changes, allowing more time for the Cuban situation to clarify. Cooley's position was that he had "no desire to open up the general quota section of the Act, which would bring a lot of amendments from the floor and perhaps campaigns from Mexico, Peru, the Dominican Republic, the Philippines and Brazil," and "no intention of surrendering to the Executive Branch the responsibility and authority of Congress, nor do I intend to create a sugar king or sugar czar in any Executive department." Cooley March 19 introduced HR 12311, calling for a one-year extension of the Sugar Act "as is".

An Administration sugar bill (S 3210) was introduced March 16 in the Senate by Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah). The bill proposed to extend the Act for four years -- to Dec. 31, 1964 -- and make the following quota changes:

(1) Give the President standby authority to reduce the quota of any foreign producer, other than the Philippines, for any calendar year and permit the importation of a corresponding quantity from other countries.

(2) Increase basic marketing quotas for U.S. producers by 200,000 tons (50,000 tons and 150,000 tons respectively for mainland sugar cane and beet producers) and reduce basic foreign quotas, 96 percent of which went to Cuba, by a corresponding 200,000 tons.

(3) Prorate deficits from Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, recently amounting to about 200,000 tons annually, on the basis of 96 percent to Cuba and 4 percent to other foreign countries. Under existing law deficits for these territories were to be made up by U.S. producers. The effect of the Administration plan would be a "swap", giving U.S. producers an assured 200,000 ton increase in place of the unassured 200,000 Puerto Rico deficit, and giving Cuba the Puerto Rico deficit instead of the assured figure.

(4) Empower the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce quotas for foreign countries other than the Philippines when they were found to be unable to meet their quotas and their deficits had been apportioned to other countries. The Administration said this provision would prevent countries from dumping surpluses on the U.S. market after they had been declared to be in deficit.

(5) Change certain procedures for balancing deficits among U.S. producers.

President Eisenhower at his news conference March 16 said there was no "justification" for interpreting his request for standby power as "a reprisal" against Cuba, but he said "there have been many activities taking place in Cuba that could easily endanger our source of supply."

House

COMMITTEE -- Agriculture.

HEARINGS -- None.

ACTION -- June 1 rejected, by a 10-20 vote, the Administration proposals. The Committee also rejected by a 14-19 vote, a substitute measure proposed by Rep. Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) to extend the Sugar Act for one year and give the President authority to cut any nation's quota when Congress was not in session. The Hoeven proposal was similar to a Senate bill (S 3361) sponsored by Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) and 11 other Senators.

The Committee June 6 reported the Cooley bill (HR 12311 -- H Rept 1746), extending the Sugar Act for one year, with a single amendment authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce the quota for any country which he determined was unable to fill its quota in that year.

The Committee said its amendment would give the Executive Branch the authority it had requested to reduce the sugar quota for a given country, but would do so under procedures which were fully understood by all areas participating in the sugar program.

Under existing law the Secretary of Agriculture could redistribute foreseen unused quotas but he could not reduce any country's quota. The Committee amendment would enable him to reduce a country's quota during a calendar year by the amount redistributed, so that the country could not dump sugar on the U.S. market later in the year and thus disorganize or deliberately disrupt the U.S. market.

The Committee said its amendment would base quota reduction on economic considerations already established in the sugar program, whereas the Administration proposal would base quota reductions on determinations of the "national interest", without safeguards against arbitrary action, or the appearance of arbitrary action, on the part of the President.

SUBSTITUTE BILL APPROVED

Following the June 6 Committee action, Hoeven the ranking Republican member, June 7 and June 14 introduced bills (HR 12534, 12624) which would authorize the President to reduce Cuba's quota when Congress was not in session. The Committee reconsidered the question in June 22 and 23 meetings.

Secretary of State Christian A. Herter, testifying June 22 said there was a question "as to whether Cuba will be a dependable (sugar) source in the future" and "it would be a serious mistake to deny the President authority to act in this area."

A partisan wrangle developed in the Committee as a result of a June 20 statement by Rep. William E. Miller (R N.Y.), chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, that the bill reported June 6 was "pro-Castro" and a "bonus for communism".

The Committee June 27 approved an amendment, in the form of a substitute bill, giving the President the requested authority to reduce Cuba's quota in the national interest. However, in apparent reaction to the "bonus for communism" charge, the Democratic-controlled Committee worded the amendment so that instead of receiving mere standby authority to cut Cuba's quota, the President would be responsible for giving Cuba any quota whatever, effective upon signature of the bill. The Committee amendment included the same provisions for extending the Sugar Act for one year and empowering the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce quotas for economic reasons as were contained in HR 12311 as reported June 6.

The amendment specified that any reductions in the Cuban quota could be made up by domestic producers if the President so wished, but only to the extent that Cuba had been supplying domestic deficits and only so long as 75 percent of any tonnage so reallocated to domestic producers went to new producers. The remainder of the Cuban reduction was required to be distributed initially to Costa Rica, Haiti, Panama, the Netherlands and Nationalist China, and then to the Philippines, the Dominican Republic, Peru, Mexico and other countries.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- June 27 -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon said Cuba was "an ideological satellite of the Soviet Union."

June 28 -- Cuban Commerce Minister Raul Cepero Bonilla called the House Committee action "a declaration of economic war".

Floor Action

The House June 30, acting under a closed rule, passed HR 12311 by a 395-0 roll-call vote after agreeing by voice vote to the Committee amendment. (For voting, see p. 462)

The amendment authorized the President, in the national interest, to assign Cuba any quota he chose, and redistribute any cuts on a specified formula basis. The amendment allowed supplies from other countries to be obtained on the basis of increased quota allocations as well as "non-quota" purchases and required that 75 percent of any Cuban allocations reassigned to domestic producers go to new producers. Retained were the two major provisions of the bill as it was originally reported, extending the Act for one year and empowering the Secretary of Agriculture to cut and redistribute quotas to insure adequate sugar supplies.

DEBATE -- Katharine St. George (R N.Y.) -- U.S. sugar producers favor the Act "because it boosts the price of their own commodity by paying a bonus to Cuba", but this was not a "valid reason to subsidize the enemies of our country."

L. Mendel Rivers (D S.C.) -- "Let us revise our sugar quota and take the next step tomorrow, and probably the ultimate step will be to occupy that island to save those people. Let us take that step. Our stature is dwindling. Let us build it up while time remains."

Watkins M. Abbitt (D Va.) -- "I am wondering whether we are confusing sugar policy with foreign policy."

John W. McCormack (D Mass.) -- "The Democratic leadership was requested through the State Department and later by a message from the White House to try to get this bill up today because of the urgency of the situation."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARINGS -- None.

ACTION -- July 1 reported S J Res 217 (S Rept 1833), empowering the President to determine Cuba's sugar quota for the balance of 1960 on the basis of the "national interest" but setting no mandatory formulas for quota redistribution. The resolution barred the President from giving Cuba a larger quota than it would have received under the quota provisions of the Sugar Act, and authorized him to make up Cuban reductions from any foreign or domestic sources provided he did not alter the existing quota rights of any country except Cuba.

Floor Action

On a motion by Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), who said many Members would "vehemently oppose" the House bill, the Senate July 2 took up S J Res 217 in lieu of HR 12311. The Senate passed its measure by an 84-0 roll-call vote after accepting by voice vote an amendment by George A. Smathers (D Fla.) striking out everything but the provision empowering the President to determine Cuba's quota for the balance of 1960 on the basis of the national interest. (For voting, see chart p. 511)

The House, upon receipt of the Senate bill, adopted by voice vote H Res 598, sending S J Res 217 back to the Senate on grounds that it was unconstitutional and an infringement of the privileges of the House. (The alleged unconstitutionality lay in the fact that the Sugar Act included excise tax revenue provisions and revenue bills are required to originate in the House.)

At this point, according to Congressional leaders, representatives of the Administration made it known that President Eisenhower would call Congress back into session the following week unless sugar legislation was passed, and House and Senate leaders held an unofficial conference to work out compromise language on HR 12311.

The reason cited for urgency was that Cuba was reportedly planning to rush enough sugar to the U.S. to fulfill its remaining quota for the year, and the Administration wanted power to head off this expected Cuban action.

Another reason was that without new legislation, Cuba would have been entitled to a 156,000-ton "windfall" to make up for deficits anticipated because of the inability of Puerto Rico and Hawaii to meet their quota shipments.

SECOND SENATE BILL

Following the informal conference, the Senate July 3 took up and passed by voice vote the House bill, HR 12311.

Before passage, the Senate by a 50-7 roll-call vote, agreed to an amendment by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) which limited the bill to 1960; made the quota redistribution formulas permissive rather than mandatory; required additional sugar to be "purchased" from foreign countries on a formula basis but not formally allocated to them as quota shares; and deleted the requirement that 75 percent of any deficit allocations to domestic producers go to new producers. (For voting, see chart p. 511)

Supporters of the "purchase" provision said it would help avoid the resentment that would result if countries were given actual quota increases only to have them withdrawn after a temporary period.

An amendment by Wayne Morse (D Ore.), substituting the language of S J Res 217 (as previously passed) for the language of HR 12311, was rejected by a 29-30 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 511)

Conference

The Senate and House versions of HR 12311 were sent to conference, where the House conferees agreed to recede from the 75 percent requirement regarding new domestic producers and from the provision allowing the Secretary of Agriculture to cut and redistribute quotas, and to accept the requirement that additional sugar be purchased rather than formally allocated. Senate conferees, receding from the permissive redistribution language, agreed that the formulas for redistribution be made mandatory. The conferees agreed to continue the Sugar Act until March 31, 1961. Because this would empower the Secretary of Agriculture in December to set quotas for the whole of 1961 under provisions of the law which were not subject to conference, the conferees stated it was their intention that the Secretary set quotas only for a quarter of the year. The House conferees also agreed to have a new sugar bill passed and sent to the Senate "on the earliest possible date after the reconvening of the House in August", so that Senate committee hearings could be held.

On the morning of July 3, the conference report (H Rept 2090) was agreed to by a 32-24 roll-call vote in the Senate and by voice vote in the House. (For voting see chart p. 511)

Concluding an all-night session which had seen the bill shunted back and forth between the two chambers throughout the evening of July 2 and early morning of July 3, Congress thus cleared HR 12311 for the President's signature and recessed until August.

SENATE DEBATE -- July 3 -- Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- It was a matter of "great concern" to the President that under the mandatory redistribution requirements he would "have to buy sugar from Trujillo -- from the Dominican Republic". The House was holding the Senate "at bay", forcing acceptance of a bill "dictated by the House".

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- "On the House Committee on Agriculture there are few members who are very interested in domestic sugar production."

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- The House redistribution provisions "can create serious difficulties throughout Latin America". "We are making a serious foreign policy blunder".

CUBA QUOTA CUT

President Eisenhower signed HR 12311 July 6 and immediately proclaimed a 39,752 ton Cuban quota for the balance of calendar 1960, thus wiping out 700,000 tons of Cuba's unfilled normal quota for the year, plus 156,000 tons constituting the amount Cuba would have been entitled to supply to make up domestic deficits from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. The President said Cuba had "embarked on a course of action to commit steadily increasing amounts of its sugar crop to trade with the Communist bloc, thus making its future ability to fill the sugar needs of the United States ever more uncertain".

Cuban Premier Fidel Castro July 7 charged that the President had acted in a "moment of hate, degradation, insanity and stupidity".

Following enactment of the 1960 law, the Agriculture Department increased the original 1960 quota of 9,400,000 tons in three stages: On July 8 to 9,600,000 tons, on July 15 to 10,000,000 tons and on Aug. 1 to 10,400,000 tons. The purpose of the increase was two-fold: to off-set price rises and to prepare for a year-end demand which normally is supplied by Cuba. In addition, Administration critics suggested that a portion of the increase was made in order to provide a "paper increase" in the allocation to the Dominican Republic. Domestic sugar producers have speculated that U.S. sugar consumption in 1960 would not reach the 10.4 million ton mark.

Meanwhile, Cuba, deprived of the largest single market for its sugar, by July 23 had made agreements with Communist China, the Soviet Union and other Soviet bloc countries to increase its supply of sugar to them in 1960 sufficiently to compensate for the 700,000-ton reduction in the U.S. quota.

SECOND SUGAR BILL

The 86th Congress adjourned permanently Sept. 1 without taking final action on President Eisenhower's Aug. 23 request for authority to cut 321,857 tons from the 1960 sugar allotment of the Dominican Republic. The 321,857 tons represented a mandatory quota windfall to the Republic resulting from cutbacks of the Cuban quota July 6 by the President, under powers voted him by Congress a few days earlier.

Despite White House claims that in view of the condemnation of the Trujillo regime Aug. 20 by the Organization of American States, failure of Congress to grant the President's request would create an "extremely serious" situation, the House and Senate were unable to agree on a compromise bill.

The House Aug. 30 had passed a bill (HR 13062) in effect permitting the President to take the 321,857 tons away from the Dominican Republic only if the OAS voted and implemented economic sanctions against the Republic by Oct. 15. The Senate version, passed Sept. 1, gave the President unrestricted authority to cut the 321,857 tons. The cut, in the Senate version, was not made contingent on OAS action. (For exact provisions, see below)

Failure of the two chambers to agree on a compromise version of HR 13062 meant that the Agriculture Department, which on Aug. 2 had assigned the windfall to the Dominican Republic (as required by the law passed in July by Congress), but had not permitted the sugar to be shipped to the U.S., was compelled to license the 321,857 tons for entry. It did so Sept. 23. However, it imposed an entry fee of 2-cents-a-pound raw value on the 321,857 tons, to be paid by the importers of the sugar. The assumption was that the added 2-cents-a-pound cost would be passed back, by the importers, to those in the Dominican Republic from whom the sugar was purchased. In this way, Dominican sugar growers would be deprived of the benefits of selling in the U.S. market, where prices (because of the quota system) were 2 cents a pound higher than in the world market.

Background

Congress July 3 enacted and the President July 6 signed a measure (HR 12311 -- PL 86-592) permitting the President to reduce Cuba's sugar quota under the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended, and extending the Act, scheduled to expire Dec. 31, 1960, for three months, to March 31, 1961. PL 86-592 contained provisions defining exactly how most of any allotment cut from the Cuban quota was to be redistributed. (See story, p. 208)

President Eisenhower July 6 exercised the authority granted him by PL 86-592 and cut back the Cuban quota. In addition, the Administration Aug. 1 increased the overall national sugar sales quota to 10.4 million tons.

The net effect of these actions was to give the Dominican Republic, under the formulae established in PL 86-592, a quota of 131,000 tons in 1960, and in addition, a special windfall of 321,857 tons that normally would have gone to Cuba. The Agriculture Department Aug. 2 made the formal allocation but withheld actual approval of import applications for the windfall. The Administration said it based its refusal to authorize entry on a section of PL 86-592 permitting the President to regulate sugar imports "subject to such terms and conditions as he deems appropriate."

OAS ACTION

The Organization of American States Aug. 20 adopted a resolution condemning the Dominican Republic for aggressive acts against Venezuela, including an attempt to murder the Venezuelan president, Dr. Romulo Betancourt. The resolution called on OAS members to break diplomatic relations with the Republic and to suspend trade in arms with the Republic.

PRESIDENT'S REQUEST

President Eisenhower Aug. 23, in a special message to Congress, said the Dominican Republic, which had originally been scheduled to export only 84,000 tons of sugar to the U.S. in 1960, was now scheduled to send 131,000 tons to the U.S., plus the special windfall of 321,857 tons. In view of the Aug. 20 OAS action, the President said, the assignment of a "large sugar bonus" to the Republic would be "seriously embarrassing to the U.S. in the conduct of its foreign relations throughout the hemisphere."

The President asked Congress to give him authority to take the 321,857-ton windfall way from the Republic and authorize its purchase elsewhere, without regard to allocations. He also asked Congress to extend the Sugar Act to the end of 1961, instead of only through March 31, 1961, as in the July law. (For text of message see p. 634)

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Aug. 26 -- The U.S broke off diplomatic relations with the Dominican Republic. (The State Department Nov. 2 told CQ that, in addition to the U.S. and seven Western Hemisphere nations that had broken off relations with the Dominican Republic even before Aug. 20, all the remaining nations in the hemisphere except Canada severed relations with the Republic following the Aug. 20 OAS action.)

House

COMMITTEE -- Agriculture.

HEARINGS -- Aug. 23-26. Highlights of testimony:

Aug. 24 -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon, in reply to a question, said the objective in cutting the Dominican sugar allotment was to bring about a change in the country's government. He said the State Department had adequate grounds to believe that if a change did occur a moderate free government, rather than a Communist one, would replace the Trujillo regime. The objective of the Aug. 20 vote of the Organization of American States to break off diplomatic relations with the Dominican Republic, Dillon said, was that the country eventually would have a government which abided by human rights and did not "commit aggressive acts against its neighbors." He added that "nothing would promote Communism in this hemisphere more than to have the United States uphold Trujillo."

During questioning of Dillon, Reps. Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) and W.R. Poage (D Texas) criticized the Administration's handling of the July sugar law which they said had specifically increased the Dominican quota and in no way provided that the Administration could deny purchase of the increase. Both also defended Trujillo's government.

Aug. 25 -- G.D. Debevoise, president of the South Puerto Rico Sugar Co. with plants in the Dominican Republic, said his firm was "frankly scared to death" of what could happen in the Dominican Republic if the United States carried out its plan to cut the sugar quota.

ACTION -- Aug. 29 reported (H Rept 2200) HR 13062. The bill extended the Sugar Act, as most recently amended in July, through the end of 1961, as the President had requested. In broad language (see provisions, below), HR 13062 gave the President power to cut the 1960 or 1961 sugar quota of any nation, if economic sanctions against it had been voted by an international organization and put into effect by the majority of members. If the President wished to cut any 1960 quotas, the required sanctions would have to be voted and in effect by Oct. 15, according to the language of the bill. In effect, this meant the President could cut the 1960 Dominican windfall only if the OAS -- by a vote of two-thirds of its membership -- imposed sanctions before Oct. 15, and a majority of OAS members put them into effect by then -- a possibility considered remote. Another provision of the bill -- similar to one inserted in the earlier July bill by the Committee but later deleted -- gave new producers in the U.S. 75 percent of any portion of new allocations assigned to domestic producers to compensate for reduced supplies from other nations.

Floor Action

The House Aug. 30 passed HR 13062 by voice vote, without debate.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 13062:

Extended the Sugar Act, including the provisions permitting the President to reduce the Cuban quota "in the national interest", and fixing the manner of redistribution of Cuban reductions, through Dec. 31, 1961.

Provided that for the 1961 sugar crop, 75 percent of any increase in domestic quotas due to reallocated deficits or reduced quotas would go to new producers.

Permitted the President to cut sugar purchases from any country in the U.S. sugar-quota system if the U.S. and other nations, pursuant to international treaty, voted economic sanctions against that country and a majority of the nations involved in the treaty took effective specific action to implement the sanctions.

Limited the cuts, in such a case, to any amounts above the basic minimum quota assigned under the Sugar Act to the nation subject to sanctions.

Stipulated that for 1960, no such cut could be made unless the sanctions were implemented by Oct. 15; if sanctions were not invoked by that date, allocations must be authorized for purchase in sufficient time to permit shipment and receipt of the entire amount in the U.S. before Dec. 31, 1960.

Permitted the President to make up for the cuts by purchase from any other foreign country, without regard to quotas but with preference to those agreeing to buy U.S. agricultural goods.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

ACTION -- Aug. 31 reported an amended version of HR 13062 (S Rept 1940) that retained the House proviso that no quota cut be made in 1960 unless economic sanctions were imposed by Oct. 15.

The chief amendment authorized the President to permit purchases of sugar from both domestic and foreign (instead of just foreign) sugar producers, if needed to offset the Cuban cut.

Floor Action

The Senate early Sept. 1, by voice vote, passed an amended version of HR 13062 after adopting an amendment, by a 62-17 roll-call vote, striking out the qualifying clauses of the House bill that required OAS action before the President could move and giving the President immediate authority to cut the 321,857 tons from the Dominican sugar allotment. (For voting, see chart p. 518)

The amendment, offered by Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), extended the Act through Dec. 31, 1961 and permitted the President to authorize the purchase of the Dominican allocation from any foreign or domestic producer without regard to quota assignments.

Dirksen and other Administration spokesmen argued that OAS economic sanctions required by the House version would be impossible by Oct. 15 and that the President needed immediate authority to cut off sugar purchases from the Dominican Reublic.

Opposition to the Dirksen amendment was led by Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) who said that its rejection would permit prompt action on a compromise version of the bill. He said the House version endorsed a concept of collective action in Latin America. He also doubted whether the Dominican Republic was still a dictatorship since Gen. Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina was not in power any longer, he said, and a reform government was in charge. Ellender added that "much progress" had been made toward a free government.

Conference Blocked

After Senate passage, HR 13062 was returned to the House Agriculure Committee for its consideration of the new version. The Committee Sept. 1, by an 11-18 vote, rejected the Senate version, which Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) termed unacceptable, preventing further action on the measure unless the Senate requested a conference. A motion to send the bill to conference would have required unanimous approval by the House; otherwise, the bill would have gone to the House Rules Committee. The Senate, however, never requested a conference.

When Congressional leaders Sept. 1 informed the President the work of Congress had been completed and asked if he had any new measures to place before it, a routine procedure before sine die adjournment, he replied he had none but said he regarded the "situation resulting from failure to act" on sugar legislation as "extremely dangerous" and that he was disappointed a bill similar to the one passed by the Senate had not been enacted.

DOMINICAN SHIPMENTS AUTHORIZED

Failure of Congress to grant President Eisenhower's Aug. 23 request meant the Agriculture Department had no alternative but to license for entry the 321,857 tons of sugar allocated to the Dominican Republic Aug. 2. The Department Sept. 23 authorized conditional entry of the sugar, but imposed a 2-cent-a-pound entry fee, designed to be passed back by importers to Dominican sugar producers, thereby depriving the latter of the benefit of selling in the quota-protected U.S. market where prices were 2 cents a pound higher than on the world market.

The Department said the entry fee was imposed because "under prevailing circumstances" it was in the United States' national interest that Dominican sugar interests should not derive any special economic benefit from selling in the United States. While licensing entry of the sugar, the Department informed the Dominican Republic that the authorization would be reduced if the sugar was not made available as promptly as required and in sufficient quantity to meet U.S. needs. (Under various provisions of the Sugar Act, the Secretary of Agriculture is permitted to shift to others part of any nation's statutory quota if that nation appears unable to fulfill its quota or meet it on time.)

The State Department Sept. 27 said licensing entry of the 321,857 tons did not violate the Aug. 20 OAS resolution on the Dominican Republic, since the resolution called for suspension of trade only in munitions, and not for "further economic sanctions."

LATIN AMERICA AID

S 3861 — Reported Aug. 17, 1960 by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 1838).
- Passed Senate Aug. 19 by roll-call vote of 54-19. (See p. 515)

HR 13021 — Reported Aug. 25 by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 2163).
- Passed House, amended, by voice vote Aug. 31.

PL 86-735 — Signed into law Sept. 8.

The post convention session of Congress approved what some called an "11th-hour" Presidential appeal for a $500 million authorization for aid to Latin America and a $100 million authorization for Chilean earthquake relief. Specifically requested by the President Aug. 8, the authorizations received final Congressional approval by voice votes of both the House and the Senate Aug. 31. Although the authorizations were not signed by the President until Sept. 8, they were partially implemented by Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon at the Economic Conference of the American Republics, held in Bogota, Colombia, Sept. 5-13. Dillon offered American assistance for economic development plans prepared by Latin American countries.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 13021:

Authorized the appropriation of $500 million for Latin America aid, to be available until expended, but subject to such further legislative provisions as might be enacted.

Expressed the sense of Congress in support of a joint inter-American development program based on self-help and mutual efforts.

Requested the Secretary of State to keep Congressional committees informed of plans and programs for the utilization of the funds.

Barred the use of funds under the program for assistance to nations being subjected to economic or diplomatic sanctions by the Organization of American States.

Authorized the appropriation of $100 million for use in the reconstruction of Chile.

Authorized a one-year waiver of a provision in the Mutual Security Program curtailing the use of the President's contingency fund in administering the disposal of surplus agricultural commodities and certain other programs.

Background

Just before leaving on his Feb. 23-March 3 goodwill tour of South America, President Eisenhower Feb. 21, in a nationally broadcast speech, said "our neighbors' problems are many and vexing -- the lack of development capital, wide fluctuations in the prices of their export commodities, the need for common regional markets to foster efficiency and to attract new credits, the need to improve health, education, housing and transportation."

He proposed a Latin America aid program July 11 and specifically requested a $500 million authorization for it Aug. 8. At his Aug. 10 press conference the President said that he was not asking for a specific program beyond the authorization which would serve as "an expression of the sentiment in Congress." He did not plan to have the U.S. propose definite programs at the September Bogota conference, he said, but wanted instead to have the Latin American nations make plans in which the United States could cooperate. The President asked Congress to complete action on his request before the Bogota conference started Sept. 5.

Congressional interest in Latin America was partially expressed in 1959 and 1960 by studies done for the Senate Foreign Relations American Republics Affairs Subcommittee by private groups, mostly universities. Conclusions of some of these studies were:

- Soviet Union and Communist policies had been more aggressive in Latin America than the United States' efforts.
- U.S. economic policies in the area had not been carried out effectively.
- The scope of aid programs in which the U.S. cooperated could be best determined by the recipient nations.
- Military control of Latin American governments was on the wane, a trend which should be encouraged by the U.S., particularly through greater stress on economic assistance and less on aid to military establishments.
- The Organization of American States lacked "vigorous leadership".

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARINGS -- Aug. 11, 15.

TESTIMONY -- Aug. 11 -- Secretary of State Christian A. Herter said the program would supplement existing forms of financial assistance and would be devoted primarily to projects for the utilization and settlement of land and for housing and public facilities.

Aug. 15 -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon said the plan would permit Latin American countries to help themselves through cooperative programs. The Administration purposely did not develop specific plans in order to avoid being criticized for economic intervention in Latin America, Dillon said. He added that he expected the development of programs for use of the aid would begin at the Bogota conference. Although most of the load of economic development must be carried by the countries themselves, Dillon said, they could not "bear the entire burden. They need our help and encouragement." He said the Administration would not ask for appropriations during the current session of Congress.

During the hearings, Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) criticized the Administration for waiting so long to present the proposal and for not developing a specific plan.

ACTION -- Aug. 16 reported a clean bill (S 3861 -- S Rept 1838) authorizing $500 million to aid in the social development and economic growth of Latin America and $100 million to aid Chilean recovery from earthquakes.

As reported, the bill provided that Congress could enact provisions controlling the actual use of funds and instructed the Secretary of State to keep the House Foreign Affairs and Senate Foreign Relations Committees informed of his plans for their use. The bill made a broad policy statement recognizing that sound social and economic progress in each Latin American country was important to all the American Republics and the lack of such progress in any country might have serious repercussions in others. It expressed the hope that all Latin American countries would exert "sustained common efforts" to achieve the goal of economic cooperation and recommended that the President develop with Latin American countries cooperative programs with detailed plans of action based on joint aid, mutual effort and common sacrifice. It also proposed the "gradual development" of regional common markets.

The clean bill as reported differed slightly from an original bill (S 3839), embodying the Administration's proposals, introduced Aug. 12 by Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.). Additional provisions of the clean bill permitting later enactment of legislation controlling the use of the funds were included to satisfy Committee members who objected to granting the authorization without outlining a specific program.

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 19, by a 54-19 roll-call vote, passed S 3861 with no floor amendments. (For voting, see chart p. 515)

Fulbright said the Administration planned to use the Inter-American Bank and the Inter-American Economic and Social Council to administer the program, but that "there may be a need for new institutions" as the program continued. He said the Administration estimated that 85 percent or 90 percent of the funds would be used as loans and the remainder as grants.

Fulbright said that though he supported the bill, he was "unenthusiastic" because the aid program had been presented by the Administration "at the 11th hour" after eight years of ignoring any "really adequate, long-term program of assistance of economic development in Latin America". He also objected to its being a "stop gap measure", under which the Administration asked Congress for a "blank check", since "no program" had been presented by the Administration to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) opposed S 3861 because he said the Administration had not given assurances that program funds would go to the Latin American "masses", instead of "politicians and wealthy families." Long said he feared land reform and other Latin America aid would cost $1.5 billion to $2 billion in 1961, if the bill were DEBATE -- Aug. 19 -- Fulbright -- The bill was necessary "in order to convince the Latin American countries that we are really serious".... The need for the aid program was evident from Latin American "danger signals": the "falling off of U.S. exports to Latin America ...the insults which were hurled at Vice President Nixon as he traveled in South America", and the number of recent Latin American revolutions.

Long -- "Although personally I should like to see a soundly developed program" for Latin American economic development, "in this instance we have no assurance at all about what the program would be, and we have no way at all to estimate either the cost of the program or its potential effectiveness."

George A. Smathers (D Fla.) -- The general language of the bill would enable the State Department to be more "resourceful" and "flexible".

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

HEARING -- Aug. 23.

ACTION -- Aug. 25 reported HR 13021 (H Rept 2163), an amended version of S 3861, adding to the Senate language an expression of support for "the strengthening of free democratic trade unions to raise standards of living through improved management-labor relations."

Floor Action

The House Aug. 31 by voice vote passed HR 13021 after incorporating the committee amendment by voice vote and accepting, also by voice vote, an amendment sponsored by Rep. Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.). The Bentley addition prohibited assistance under the program for any nation which was being subjected to economic or diplomatic sanctions by the Organization of American States.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Aug. 31 -- Bentley -- Prohibit use of funds for assistance to any Latin American country subjected to economic or diplomatic sanctions by the Organization of American States. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Omar Burleson (D Texas) -- Delete the $500 million authorization for Latin America. Voice.

Bentley -- Put a June 30, 1962 time limit on the use of funds appropriated under the Latin American program. Voice.

DEBATE -- Aug. 31 -- Burleson -- "This proposal is without precedent.... We are taking our friends in Latin America for a bunch of idiots.... We are committing ourselves to undefined obligations and unidentified programs...."

Sam Rayburn (D Texas) -- Latin Americans "have been led to believe that we are going to do something about this.... The Secretary of State called me on the telephone and expressed his deep interest in this thing."

FINAL ACTION -- The Senate Aug. 31 agreed to the House bill by voice vote.

FOOD FOR PEACE

S Con Res 116 -- Reported Aug. 26, 1960 by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 1922).
- Passed Senate by voice vote Aug. 27.

The Senate Aug. 27 endorsed a Presidential proposal for international consideration of a food-for-peace program envisioning the use of the United Nations' Food and Agriculture Organization as a broker to help transmit surplus food from wealthy nations to "less favorably situated peoples."

The endorsement came in voice vote approval of a resolution (S Con Res 116) which modified the President's Aug. 8 request for Congressional support by adding a statement of aims to the Administration-sponsored resolution (S Con Res 114). The House took no action on the measure before adjournment, although the President Aug. 8 had asked both chambers to endorse his general aims to strengthen his position when he presented the U.S. proposals to the UN.

The President's basic plan was offered to the UN General Assembly's Economic and Financial Committee Oct. 18 under the sponsorship of the U.S., Canada, Haiti, Liberia, Pakistan and Venezuela. In a revised form, without spelling out the details of the food-for-peace mechanism proposed by Mr. Eisenhower, and with safeguards added against the "dumping" of surplus commodities and the disruption of existing markets, the plan won unanimous Committee approval Oct. 26 and unanimous General Assembly endorsement the next day. It was transmitted immediately to the FAO Council meeting ending Oct. 28 in Rome, in the hope that the Council could ask the FAO's General Director to use it as a basis for preparing plans to be submitted to the full FAO in January 1961.

Although S Con Res 116 received bipartisan Senate support, its sponsor, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), in Aug. 9 speeches, said the idea of channeling food surpluses to needy nations through an international agency had been initiated as early as the 83rd Congress (1953-54) by Sen. James E. Murray (D Mont.) in the form of a proposal for a world food bank, and had originally been opposed by Mr. Eisenhower. In 1956, Humphrey said, a Mutual Security Act provision asking the President to discuss the idea with other nations was passed by the Senate but dropped in conference because, according to Humphrey, the President opposed the idea. (1956 Almanac p. 424) Humphrey frequently in recent years sponsored similar proposals.

PROVISIONS: S Con Res 116, as approved by the Senate:

Expressed the sense of Congress that the President "should continue to explore with other nations the establishment of an international food program" which would have as its aim the use of surplus food to combat extreme price fluctuations in the international (food) market; to alleviate famine and starvation; to help absorb temporary farm surpluses; and to aid, through the use of local currencies made available in the purchase or trade of farm surpluses, international economic and social development programs.

Required that U.S. participation in such a program be contingent on the approval by Congress of an appropriate statute or authorization.

Senate

BACKGROUND -- 1959 Almanac p. 230-232.

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARING -- Aug. 25.

TESTIMONY -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon outlined to the Committee the plan which the U.S. later submitted to the UN for expanding the FAO's activities by giving it two new functions. The first would be to coordinate existing programs by which surplus-producing nations moved food overseas through other-than-normal trade channels. The FAO would receive information from surplus producers on what food was available, and on what terms, and from needy nations on what was needed. The FAO would then recommend exchanges best suited to fit the needs of both surplus and needy nations, taking into account the objectives of furthering agricultural development in the importing nations and avoiding upsets to normal markets. The FAO's recommendations would be advisory, and not binding, and therefore no new legislation by Congress would be required to put this program into effect, Dillon said.

The second new FAO function, Dillon said, would require creation of a new semi-autonomous unit within FAO, to receive outright food grants from surplus-producing nations and distribute them to needy nations. Where it was possible to sell foods under this program for local currencies, the proceeds would go to the donor nation, except for certain portions to be retained by the FAO to support technical assistance programs in the recipient nation. Dillon said this second program would require new legislation by Congress, if it were accepted by the UN, either substantially as the President proposed it or in some modified form.

ACTION -- Aug. 26 reported S Con Res 116 (S Rept 1922), modifying the Administration's request as embodied in S Con Res 114.

FLOOR ACTION -- The Senate Aug. 27, with little debate, adopted S Con Res 116 by voice vote without amendments.

RELATIONS WITH PANAMA

H Con Res 459 — Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee Jan. 25, 1960 (H Rept 1225).
- Passed by the House Feb. 2 by a roll-call vote of 382-12. (See p. 424)

Despite House passage of a resolution (H Con Res 459) specifically aimed at preventing such action, President Eisenhower Sept. 17 directed that the flag of the Republic of Panama be flown alongside the U.S. flag in the Canal Zone.

His action, taken after the adjournment of Congress provoked sharp criticism from two Members, one of whom was Rep. Armistead I. Selden Jr. (D Ala.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Inter-American Affairs Subcommittee and sponsor of H Con Res 459, which passed the House Feb. 2 by a 382-12 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 424)

H Con Res 459 was aimed at preventing any relinquishment of U.S. rights in the Canal Zone without Senate approval. The Senate itself took no action on the resolution, which expressed the sense of Congress that any "variation in the traditional interpretation" of existing treaties with Panama, with special reference to questions involving sovereignty, should be made only by treaty procedure, i.e., submission to the Senate. The resolution, even if approved by the Senate, would not have had the force of law, but might have served to restrict the President's freedom of action in the matter of the Panamanian flag.

Background

Although the Canal Zone has been solely governed by the U.S.-owned Panama Canal Zone Co. as the result of a 1903 treaty, the flying of the Panamanian flag had been urged to provide evidence of Panama's "titular sovereignty" over the 10-mile-wide strip that runs about 50 miles through the Republic. The treaty granted the Zone to the U.S. in perpetuity. Two riots in November 1959 had occurred when Panamanian nationalists invaded the Zone to demand the right to fly their country's flag there.

Troubles in the Canal Zone also prompted a renewal of suggestions that the Canal be internationalized to prevent any one country from using it as a weapon of national policy. On his return from a trip to Latin America, Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.) reported Feb. 1 to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that it was likely that America's position in Panama would "continue to deteriorate."

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

ACTION -- Jan. 25 reported H Con Res 459 (H Rept 1225), specifically noting that any decision to display the Panamanian flag in the Canal Zone should receive Congressional approval.

Floor Action

The House Feb. 2 voted 382-12 to suspend the rules (a procedure requiring a two-thirds majority) and pass H Con Res 459 as reported from Committee. (For voting, see chart p. 424)

In asking the House approval of his resolution, Selden said the State Department was expected to recommend to the President that favorable action be taken on a request from Panama to fly its flag in the Canal Zone, and that the President reportedly did not feel that Congressional sanction was required in the matter. "This Congress must not permit our State Department to capitulate to political blackmail," he said.

DEBATE -- Feb. 2 -- Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (D Mo.) -- The Administration was "trying to 'buy' a proud people with driblets of handouts and being blackmailed in turn."

Francis E. Dorn (R N.Y.) -- "My interpretation...has always been that sovereignty in the Canal Zone lay in the United States. If this is to be altered it is up to Congress to do it."

Frank M. Coffin (D Maine) -- The resolution would set a "dangerous precedent in shackling Executive prerogative."

Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) -- It "may do harm to our relations with Panama" and prove a "burdensome interference" on the State Department.

The Senate took no action on the resolution, although Sen. George A. Smathers (D Fla.) had suggested a compromise plan under which a plot of ground would be set aside within the Canal Zone for the flying of both the U.S. and Panamanian flags side by side.

Presidential Action

President Eisenhower criticized the House supporters of the Selden resolution at his press conference Feb. 3, the day following the House vote. He said that "people...have suddenly gotten themselves into a state..." because the flag might be flown "as a courtesy to a nation in which titular sovereignty resides" (Panama). Such people, he said, were "getting a little beyond the rule of reason."

Later in the year, the President announced a nine-point plan for "improvement of relations between the United States and Panama in reference to operations in the Canal Zone." The April 19 announcement made no mention of the flag dispute, but included pay increases and other social benefits for Canal Zone workers.

The President's action Sept. 17 in directing that the Panamanian flag be flown alongside the U.S. flag in the Canal Zone provoked an immediate protest from Selden. The Congressman said, "There is grave danger that future generations of Panamanians will look back on this so-called 'act of grace' as a major first step in the surrender of treaty rights."

Rep. Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) Sept. 17 called the President's decision "a further appalling example of American diplomatic appeasement, loss of leadership and weakened integrity in the eyes of the world."

SEA LAW TREATIES

Execs J, K, L, M and N — Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee April 27, 1960 (Exec Rept 5).

● All but Exec N were ratified by unanimous consent of the Senate May 26.

Executive N — Rejected by a 49-30 roll-call vote of the Senate May 26 (53 "yeas" were necessary for ratification). (See p. 497)

Following a complicated parliamentary maneuver that left many Senators in the dark as to the matter on which they were voting, the Senate rejected by a 49-30 roll-call vote (four short of the required two-thirds majority) a resolution ratifying an optional protocol attached to four conventions on the law of the sea (Executive N, 86th Congress, first session). It was the first time the Senate had rejected a treaty sent to it for ratification by President Eisenhower. (For voting, see chart p. 497).

The vote on the treaty reflected Senate opposition to efforts to repeal the Connally Amendment to the 1946 law permitting U.S. membership in the International Court of Justice. (See story p. 230)

Senate

The four conventions on the law of the sea (Executives J, K, L and M, 86th Congress, first session) and the accompanying "Optional Protocol of Signature Concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes" (Exec N) were signed Sept. 15, 1958 at Geneva, the products of a United Nations conference on the law of the sea. The four conventions dealt with the codification and establishment of international law dealing with the territorial sea and contiguous zone (Exec J); the extent of the high seas, pollution thereof and piracy thereon (Exec K); fishing and conservation of living resources of the high seas (Exec L); and the limits of the Continental Shelf (Exec M).

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee held a public hearing on the conventions and protocol Jan. 20, 1960 and recorded no opposition to their ratification. The Committee reported the conventions and the protocol April 27 (Exec Rept 5).

When it reached the floor, however, the protocol ran into trouble. Some Senators saw in it a contradiction of the 1946 Connally Amendment, which reserved to the U.S. the right to decide whether or not a dispute proposed for consideration by the World Court was a domestic concern of the U.S. The protocol, if ratified, would have made arbitration by the World Court compulsory in cases involving the four conventions. On March 29 the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, by a 9-8 vote, had indefinitely postponed consideration of a resolution designed to repeal the Connally Amendment. (See story p. 230).

Floor Action

No debate or controversy preceded the rejection of the protocol May 26. Originally it had been approved on a 77-4 roll-call vote that ratified, en bloc, the four sea law treaties, the protocol, and an unrelated treaty (Exec V). (For voting, see chart p. 497)

But the Senate then gave unanimous consent to the motion of Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) to reconsider the treaties on an item-by-item basis and rejected the protocol, again without prior debate, by a roll-call vote of 49-30. Having accomplished this, the Senate gave its unanimous consent to the previous ratification of the four conventions and the non-related treaty, which authorized duty-free importation of visual and auditory materials of an educational, scientific and cultural character. This agreement (Exec V, 81st Congress, second session) had been signed by the U.S. Sept. 13, 1949 at Beirut and reported by the Foreign Relations Committee March 8, 1960 (Exec Rept 4).

That the situation was confused was testified to by Sen. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.), who interrupted the roll call on ratification of the protocol to make a parliamentary inquiry: "Mr. President, we do not know whether it is a vote to reconsider or a vote upon ratification." After the failure to ratify the treaty, Russell B. Long (D La.) announced that he would be willing to vote for the protocol if the Connally reservation could be attached to it. John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) explained that he had voted against the protocol "reluctantly...because the Senate does not know its terms and to what it refers."

Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) explained that he had voted against the treaty because he had expected the Senate to debate it first, in order to clarify the issues involved. Dodd said it was "physically impossible" for every Senator to "keep abreast of everything that is going on", adding that he had found many Senators who had not "understood what they were voting on".

Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) called the rejection of the treaty "a pretty tragic thing" and suggested that the Senate reconsider its action "rather than send the treaty down the drain, with no debate, pro or con, on this matter." A motion to reconsider was filed May 27, but no further consideration was given the protocol in the course of the 86th Congress. Unlike legislation, unratified treaties carry over from one Congress to the next, unless they are withdrawn by the President.

RELIGIOUS DESECRATION

H Con Res 465 — Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 1223) Jan. 25, 1960.

● Adopted by the House Feb. 2, by a 393-0 roll-call vote. (See p. 424)

The House in 1960 adopted a resolution (H Con Res 465) expressing Congress' "profound sense of indignation and shock" at the outbreak of acts during Christmas week 1959 aimed at desecrating places of worship in the United States and abroad. The Senate took no action.

The measure, reported Jan. 25 by the House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 1223), was one of 51 identical resolutions introduced by House Members to deplore the wave of swastika-daubings and other anti-Semitic demonstrations which started in West Germany and spread to other parts of the world. Although H Con Res 465 was passed unanimously by the House by a 393-0 roll-call vote Feb. 2, some Members said they would have preferred stronger language in the resolution. Reps. Marguerite Stitt Church (R Ill.), William A. Barrett (D Pa.) and Steven B. Derounian (R N.Y.) suggested that Congress make religious desecration a federal offense. (For voting, see chart p. 424)

AGREEMENT ON I.D.A.

S 3074 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee May 13, 1960 (S Rept 1349).

- Passed, amended by the Senate June 2, by voice vote. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 498)

HR 11001 -- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee June 8 (H Rept 1766).

- Passed, with amendment, by the House June 29, by a 249-158 roll-call vote. (See p. 460)
- Passed by the Senate June 29 by voice vote.

PL 86-565-- Signed into law June 30.

HR 11001 authorized United States participation in the International Development Assn., a new international lending agency tied to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank).

The IDA was drawn up in 1959-60, under U.S. leadership, as a vehicle to channel non-Communist development financing into the underdeveloped nations under easier credit terms than are available for loans from the World Bank.

HR 11001 authorized appropriations of $320,290,000 as the U.S. subscription to the Association, and an initial $73,666,700 was provided in a supplemental appropriations bill (PL 86-651) enacted July 14. (See p. 393)

The U.S. formally signed as a member of the IDA Aug. 9 and the organization came into being Sept. 26 when 15 countries had met the subscription requirements.

PROVISIONS -- As it became law, HR 11001:

Authorized the President to accept membership for the U.S. in the IDA.

Authorized appropriation of $320,290,000 for the U.S. subscription to the Association, without fiscal year limitation.

Prohibited any additional U.S. subscription, provision of loans or other financing to the IDA, or acceptance of amendments to the articles of agreement, unless authorized by Congress.

Background

Although an IDA program originally was proposed in 1951 by Nelson A. Rockefeller, then chairman of the International Development Advisory Board, chief impetus for establishment of the Association is attributed to Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.). (1958 Almanac p. 256)

A Monroney resolution calling for a study of IDA proposals was passed by the Senate June 23, 1958 by a 62-25 roll-call vote. The study was undertaken by the U.S. National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (consisting of the Secretaries of State, Commerce and the Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board chairman and the Export-Import Bank president). The Council submitted a favorable report to Congress Aug. 14, 1959; the World Bank meanwhile agreed Oct. 1, 1959 to draw up articles of agreement; and the President Feb. 18, 1960, submitted the articles of agreement to Congress and urged enactment of legislation authorizing U.S. participation. (For President's message, see p. 630.)

Although Monroney apparently saw the IDA as a means for putting to use vast quantities of U.S.-owned foreign currencies accumulated under various aid programs, it remained to be seen how much of a factor these currencies would be in IDA operation. (See Fact Sheet on Foreign Currencies that follows.)

A more immediate factor influencing official support for the plan, evidently, was the U.S. balance of payments deficit in hard currencies. By encouraging other non-Communist nations to devote their resources to the underdeveloped areas in multilateral efforts through IDA, the drain on U.S. payments might be alleviated.

According to the articles of agreement, the total subscriptions to IDA would be built up to $1 billion over a five-year period, with $763 million of the amount provided in hard currencies. (The country-by-country subscription schedule, appears in a chart in the Foreign Currency Fact Sheet noted above.)

The articles also provided that members could contribute "supplementary resources" to the IDA in the currency of other members, provided all parties concerned agreed. This would have enabled the U.S. to put some of its foreign currencies at IDA's disposal, but the deletion of certain authorizing provisions in HR 11001 during House floor action appeared to prevent the U.S. from utilizing this procedure without further Congressional action.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARINGS -- March 18-21 on S 3074, to authorize U.S. membership in IDA.

TESTIMONY -- March 18 -- Assistant Secretary of the Treasury T. Graydon Upton said the IDA was intended to complement the development financing already provided by private investors and national and international agencies and would not be used to finance projects which could be undertaken by the other agencies on their normal credit terms.

Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon said the affiliation of the IDA with the International Bank would assure it of sound management and skilled staffing.

March 21 -- John J. McCloy, president of the Chase Manhattan Bank and former head of the World Bank, C. Cheever Hardwick for the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., and Herbert E. Harris II for the American Farm Bureau Federation said participation in the IDA would be in the best interests of the United States.

Bert Seidman, AFL-CIO, and Elton Atwater, Friends Committee on National Legislation, said the total subscription to the IDA should be larger than the proposed five-year build-up to $1 billion.

ACTION -- S 3074 was reported May 13 (S Rept 1349).

Voting May 9 to report the bill were Democratic Sens. Fulbright (Ark.), Green (R.I.), Sparkman (Ala.), Mansfield (Mont.), Morse (Ore.), Gore (Tenn.) and Church (Idaho) and Republicans Wiley (Wis.), Hickenlooper (Iowa) and Capehart (Ind.). Voting against reporting S 3074 were Sens. Lausche (D Ohio), Aiken (R Vt.) and Williams (R Del.).

Floor Action

The Senate June 2 passed S 3074 by voice vote after adopting, by a 39-33 roll-call vote, an amendment by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) barring the U.S. from making "gifts" to the IDA without specific Congressional authorization. (For voting, see chart p. 498)

As reported, S 3074 allowed a duly authorized U.S. agency to provide "loans or other financing" to the Association, without limitation or further Congressional authorization, in addition to the authorized U.S. subscription; the Williams amendment excluded "gifts" from such "loans and other financing".

During debate, Sen. Prescott Bush (R Conn.) said he had discussed the meaning of "other financing" with the Treasury and was "satisfied what it means is that the United States may place these soft currencies on a certificate of deposit, so to speak," with the IDA. Bush said this would enable the IDA "to conserve its hard currencies, to the extent that it can draw upon the soft currencies which we have on deposit in various countries".

However, Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.) said the "other financing" provision would permit the U.S. to commit foreign currencies to the IDA "and deposit those funds in banks in foreign countries, for the most part branches of American banks, where it will lie, with no interest being paid to this country, and then be loaned by these branch banks at very high rates of interest. This is...a handout. This is what the bill is without the (Williams) amendment."

DEBATE -- June 2 -- Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- U.S. expansion in the 19th century "depended heavily on development financing from overseas. We must accept a similar entrepreneurial role if our free enterprise system is to compete successfully with Communist methods."

A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) -- "The fact that we have failed to find a use for a billion dollars of (foreign) currency indicates how difficult it is for the United States to usefully dispose of the tremendous quantity of such currency which we are earning through sales of agricultural products.... Certainly an international institution staffed by experts from every country of the free world would be more likely to find alternative sources of goods and services which could be purchased with currencies that are not generally convertible."

Williams -- "It is proposed under this bill that we confer on an agency of the Government the right to turn over to this international lending agency all or any part of the foreign currencies which are now or which may at some future date be in their possession.... I think that is going just a little bit too far."

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- "We thwart our own objective when we impair the mobility with which we can use the soft currencies."

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

HEARINGS -- March 15-17 on HR 11001, the counterpart of S 3074.

TESTIMONY -- March 15 -- Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson said the U.S., as originator of the proposal, should "proceed firmly" in passing the authorizing legislation. IDA would complement other U.S. and international lending agencies by making flexible loans in cases where conventional "hard currency" payment and interest terms could not be met by the recipients, Anderson said. Because IDA resources would revolve slowly in the case of long-term loans, its hard currency resources would need replenishment, Anderson said, so that requests for additional authorizations could be expected in future years.

Anderson said the U.S. would pay out its $320 million contribution in payments of $73.7 million in fiscal 1961 and $61.7 million annually for the next four years.

March 16 -- Spokesmen for the AFL-CIO and Chamber of Commerce endorsed the IDA.

March 17 -- Representatives of the Bank of America and the United States Council of the International Chamber of Commerce Inc. supported the bill.

SUEZ CANAL SNAG

Committee approval of the bill met a snag when several members proposed an amendment which would prohibit IDA loans to countries impeding free navigation through international waterways. The effect would be to bar loans to the United Arab Republic, which had closed the Suez Canal to Israeli ships. (A similar amendment was attached by the Senate to the 1960 Mutual Security Act -- see p. 166.)

Treasury Secretary Anderson April 29 wrote a letter to Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) urging the Committee to reject the amendment, since it would necessitate a renegotiation of the articles of agreement and in all probability scuttle IDA entirely.

During House debate June 28, Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) said the Committee decided to reject the amendment after Anderson indicated the U.S. would "instruct our representatives to act and vote" in the IDA in accordance with the objectives of freedom of navigation.

ACTION -- The Committee June 8 reported HR 11001 (H Rept 1766).

Floor Action

The House June 29 passed HR 11001 by a 249-158 roll-call vote (see chart p. 460) after a provision allowing a duly authorized U.S. agency to provide "loans and other financing" to the Association was deleted on a point of order by Rep. Frank T. Bow (R Ohio). This was the same provision which had been amended in the Senate to exclude "gifts" from "loans and other financing."

The House began debate on HR 11001 June 28.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

June 28 -- H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Require the IDA to make loans to distressed or less developed areas within the United States. Standing vote, 45-46; teller, 48-61.

DEBATE -- June 28 -- Gross -- "If these so-called loans are ever repaid it will be in the funny money of the country that gets the loans. The dollars filched from the pockets of our taxpayers will be gone where the woodbine twineth and the whangdoodle whangeth."

Brent Spence (D Ky.) -- "I think this organization will follow a policy of requiring payment in the currencies loaned; the special accommodation will come in the form of longer maturities, low interest rates, and other favorable terms rather than in permitting repayment in local currencies."

Florence P. Dwyer (R N.J.) -- IDA will help the free world "do a much more effective job of helping the less-developed countries strengthen their economies." By enlisting other industrialized nations "it will place an increasing amount of our economic assistance on a multilateral, rather than unilateral basis."

Final Action

The Senate June 29, by voice vote, accepted HR 11001 in place of its own bill, thus clearing the measure for the President's signature. Sen. Fulbright, in urging Senate approval, indicated a separate bill would be introduced at a later date "to remedy what needs to be taken care of" because of the section deleted on the House floor.

CQ Fact Sheet On Foreign Currencies

PROBLEM: HOW TO USE U.S.-OWNED LOCAL CURRENCIES

The birth of the International Development Assn. Sept. 26 led to a Congressional Quarterly review of a complex, widely misunderstood, and increasingly embarrassing facet of United States foreign aid programs -- the growing accumulation of U.S.-owned local currencies, for which constructive uses are limited for many reasons.

IDA itself was conceived as a mechanism for dealing with this problem, yet prospects are that the new agency will contribute little or nothing to the solution. In fact, no acceptable answer has been formulated.

The complexities of the local currency problem are rooted in the multiplicity of programs for generating currency, of provisions for its use, and of legislative and other restrictions that lurk in every corner. Such is the confusion that it invites over-simplification, of which the most common example is that the U.S. owns approximately $2 billion in foreign currencies. Stating the sum in this fashion leads, in turn, to the initial and governing misconception -- that this is the same as two billion dollars, freely usable anywhere for any purpose. And it is this assumption that has reinforced the policies and principles from which the entire local currency problem stems. These boil down to the notion that "giveaways" must be replaced by "businesslike" loans.

Whatever the merits of this concept, it has no particular bearing on the value of money, which is no more than a claim on resources. Where those resources are limited, the value of money is correspondingly restricted. It is for this reason that the currencies of most of the underdeveloped countries are "soft" or "nonconvertible" and cannot be used freely in international exchange. To overcome this difficulty without resorting to "giveaways", the United States has agreed to accept "soft" currencies in payment for surplus commodities and for dollar loans, and to re-loan the currencies thus acquired on the same basis. It is this process, according to one estimate, that could make the United States the owner of more than $150 billion "worth" of foreign currencies by the year 2,000.

Background

America's experience with large amounts of foreign currencies began with the Marshall Plan after World War II, when the U.S. pumped more than $10 billion into the European Recovery Program, chiefly in the form of commodities. This was grant assistance; the recipient nations were required, however, to set aside in special "counterpart" accounts all local-currency receipts from the sale of the commodities. About 5 percent of these "counterpart" deposits was reserved for U.S. use in the country concerned, as in meeting Embassy expenses. The remainder belonged to that country, but its use was subject to joint control with the U.S.

This scheme was the outgrowth, in part, of the U.S. desire to funnel its grants through commercial channels, and gave rise to the concept that one dollar of aid could be made to do the work of two. In fact, however, only the original gift of a dollar's worth of commodities represented an addition to Europe's resources; the principal value of "counterpart" funds lay in the voice they gave the U.S. in the fiscal and monetary policies of some of the countries concerned. But the concept of "counterpart" gained great favor in the U.S., not least among Members of Congress who enjoyed free access to the portion reserved for U.S. uses during their inspection trips to Paris and other capitals. (For Congressional spending of "counterpart" in 1959, see this volume, p. 408-12)

With the inauguration of the Mutual Security Program in 1951, the focus of American foreign aid shifted from economic recovery to military preparedness and, later, from Europe to Asia. Military assistance, in the form of grants of surplus and obsolescent U.S. equipment, was extended without "counterpart" obligation. But the two-for-one rule continued to be applied to nonmilitary grant assistance. This type of aid, now called "defense support" and "special assistance," amounts to about $1 billion a year. It is heavily concentrated in a few countries, chiefly in Asia, and generates about $750 million a year in "counterpart" funds, of which the U.S. now reserves up to 10 percent for its own uses.

In general, current accumulations of country-owned "counterpart" present no serious problem. In countries like Korea and Vietnam, "counterpart" is a key ingredient of the aid program: the local currency derived from the sale of dollar-financed commodity imports is a major component of the government's revenues. The unexpended balance of country-owned "counterpart" amounted to less than $400 million on Dec. 31, 1959. Only two country accounts present any difficulties: $126.2 million in Greek drachmae, which the State Department would like to release to the Greek government for debt retirement, a step opposed by Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) and others in Congress; and $44.6 million in Austrian schillings, accumulated under programs since terminated, for which no use has been agreed upon by the U.S. and Austrian governments.

Surplus Disposal

To the 5-to-10 percent of "counterpart" funds reserved for its own uses, the United States in 1954 added a new source of local currencies, with enactment of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act, better known as Public Law 480. Title I of PL 480 authorized the sale of $700 million worth of surplus farm commodities for foreign currencies, and specified the uses to which these could be put, including development loans and grants to the purchasing countries. Title II authorized outright grants of surplus commodities, up to $300 million worth, for famine and other relief purposes. Title III provided for the exchange of surplus commodities for strategic materials under barter agreements. The entire program was authorized for three years. (1954 Almanac p. 120)

Congress increased the Title I authorization to $1.5 billion in 1955 and to $3 billion in 1956. In 1957 the law was extended for one year, in 1958 for 18 months, and in 1959 for two years; the Title I authorization was raised, at the same time, to $4 billion, then $6.25 billion, and finally $9.25 billion. In addition, Title II authority was increased over the years, reaching $1.4 billion in 1959. (See Almanacs: 1956 p. 489; 1957 p. 641; 1958 p. 277; 1959 p. 230.)

As of Dec. 31, 1959, the cumulative total of sales agreements signed under Title I had reached $4.2 billion at export market value ($5.8 billion in terms of cost to the Commodity Credit Corp.). Sales had been made to 38 countries under 172 agreements, which stipulated the uses to be made of the foreign currencies received, as follows (in millions of dollars equivalents):

PL 480 Authority	Amount	Share
Common defense grants-#104 (c)*	$ 316	7.6%
Economic dev. grants-#104 (e)	340	8.2
Private enterprise loans-#104 (e)	282	6.8
Economic dev. loans-#104 (g)	1,953	47.0
U.S. obligations-#104 (f)	653	15.7
Other U.S. uses	615	14.7
Totals	$4,159	100.0%

Numbers indicate section of law involved.

In summary, from 1954 through 1959 the U.S. agreed to sell $5.8 billion worth of surplus commodities for the equivalent of $4.2 billion in foreign currencies, of which almost $2 billion would be loaned back to the countries concerned, to be repaid with interest in local currencies. Specific loan agreements pursuant to these sales agreements totaled $1.7 billion on Dec. 31, 1959, with another $230 million under negotiation.

Mutual Security Program

PL 480 was not the only authority for selling surplus U.S. farm commodities for foreign currencies. The Mutual Security Act of 1954 provided, in addition, that $350 million be earmarked for financing the sales of surplus commodities for foreign currencies. Subsequent earmarking in the annual extensions of the 1954 Act has brought the total MSA sales authorization to $1.5 billion. Currencies acquired under this authority have been used both for current mutual security purposes and for loans to the countries concerned. Less than $250 million of these U.S.-owned currencies remained unexpended on Dec. 31, 1959.

The Mutual Security Act of 1954 also provided that not less than $200 million in foreign aid funds be used to make loans to cooperating countries, repayable in local currencies. Similar provisions were contained in annual extensions of the Act, and by the end of 1959 the International Cooperation Administration and its predecessor agencies had negotiated agreements for loans, both of dollars and of local currencies received from sales of surplus commodities, totaling $2.6 billion, of which $768 million was repayable in local currency.

In 1957, Congress created still another mechanism for extending assistance to other countries by the technique of exchanging dollars for "soft" currencies. This is the Development Loan Fund, authorized to make long-term, low-interest loans to other countries, repayable either in dollars or local currency. So far, Congress has appropriated $1.4 billion to DLF. Loan agreements concluded through 1959 totaled $752 million, of which $569 million was repayable in local currency. (See Almanacs: 1954 p. 275; 1955 p. 301; 1956 p. 418; 1957 p. 602; 1958 p. 183; 1959 p. 178.)

Current Situation

Loan agreements made under the authority of these three programs -- PL 480, MSP, and DLF -- thus added up to $5.1 billion by the end of 1959. Of this amount, about $2.1 billion was repayable in dollars and $3 billion in local currency. These are not the proportions, however, in which loans are being made today. Of the $2.1 billion repayable in dollars, almost $1.7 billion represents loans made between 1948 and 1954, principally in Western Europe; from 1954 through 1959, such loans added up to $412 million. By contrast, the entire $3 billion worth of loans repayable in local currencies has been negotiated since 1954. (See chart following text)

Additional amounts of U.S.-owned foreign currencies continue to be generated, of course, by the operations of the various aid programs. Substantial authority remains under PL 480 to sell surplus commodities for local currencies, and there is no sign as yet that the disposal problem will be solved in the near future. Nor is it expected that the DLF will soon stop making loans at the rate of $500 million or more a year, with approximately 75 percent repayable in local currency.

Is there any prospect that the U.S. can make use of this accumulation of currencies for its own purposes? Some indication of the nature of the problem is contained in the President's Budget for fiscal 1961 (Special Analysis E). U.S. requirements for foreign currencies to meet operating expenses abroad are estimated at $2.3 billion for the year. To meet this need, only $474 million will be available, the balance of $2.9 billion being restricted to loans, grants, and other purposes. Of the $474 million, however, only $130 million can be used, since supply and demand do not jibe. In India, for example, the U.S. can use only $7.2 million of the $140 million in rupees that will be available. But in Germany, where U.S. requirements in 1961 are estimated at $917.5 million, only $16.9 million in marks will be available.

More than 80 percent of U.S. requirements for foreign currencies are concentrated in Germany, Canada, Japan, France, and the United Kingdom, where the supply generated by U.S. aid programs is negligible. Where the supply is large and growing, however, is in the underdeveloped countries, where U.S. needs are limited. Thus it is clear that the bulk of the nonconvertible currencies being generated by U.S. aid programs will continue to be useful only for loans or grants to the countries concerned.

It is the loan technique that promises to swamp the boat, according to a projection made for ICA in 1958 by three consultants -- Robert L. Berenson, William M. Bristol, and Ralph I. Straus. They made five assumptions: new PL 480 loans of $700 million a year, new DLF loans of $600 million, new MSP loans of $50 million, interest of 4 percent compounded semiannually, and all payments of principal and interest reloaned. Assuming these conditions obtained for five years, the U.S. would own $10 billion in foreign currencies at the end of the five years, and $37 billion by the year 2,000. If, however, new loans were to continue to be made at the same rate, until the year 2,000, the U.S. would wind up with claims to the equivalent of $154 billion in foreign currencies.

Monroney Plan

A seemingly attractive answer to the accumulation of local currencies occurred to Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) in 1956. This was, quite simply, to turn them over to an International Development Assn., on the premise that a multilateral agency could make better use of them. Monroney made little progress at first, in the face of expert opinion that his plan was without any real merit. By 1958, however, the Treasury was becoming concerned over a mounting deficit in the U.S. balance of payments, and looking for ways to ease the load. One method, it was decided, would be to persuade the now-prosperous countries of Europe and Japan to shoulder part of the development burden in the poorer nations. Monroney's IDA became the vehicle, but was radically redesigned.

As submitted to Congress by the President Feb. 18, 1960, the articles of agreement for IDA called for a fund of $1 billion to be administered by the World Bank (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development). The fund, to be established over a five-year period, is to consist of $763 million in gold or dollar contributions from 17 hard-currency countries (including $320 million from the U.S.), and $237 million -- 90 percent in local currencies and only 10 percent in gold or dollars -- in subscriptions from 51 soft-currency nations. The only provision bearing on U.S.-owned local currencies is one permitting members to contribute "supplementary resources" in the currency of other members, provided all parties concerned agree.

Even this trace of the original Monroney plan contains little substance. As shown in the chart on the next page, listing U.S. loans to IDA members, almost $2.8 billion of the $3 billion repayable in local currencies is owned by the soft currency countries in Part II. Although the "supplementary resources" provision is intended to apply to local currencies generated under future PL 480 sales agreements, and would therefore not involve the $3 billion now owed to the U.S., the pattern of accumulation promises to remain the same. Since there is no prospect that the bulk of these currencies can be used outside the countries of origin within the foreseeable future, there is equally little chance that any of them can be transferred to IDA.

SENATE ACTION

Nevertheless, when the Senate took up the bill (S 3074) to authorize U.S. participation in IDA June 2, debate centered on the objection by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) that the bill would "confer on an agency of the Government the right to turn over to this international lending agency all or any part of the foreign currencies which are now or which may at some future date be in their possession." Williams insisted that any such grants be subject to Congressional appropriation, and the Senate accepted his amendment by a 39-33 roll-call vote.

The essential fact about IDA is that it is a device for transferring $763 million worth of resources from 17 prosperous countries to 51 poor countries. The U.S. supports the plan for two reasons: it commits the 16 other hard currency countries to put up $443 million for development purposes without insisting that the funds be spent to finance their own exports -- the "tied loan" practice now followed by most nations; and it meets the objections of many underdeveloped countries to bilateral loans. The potential uses of soft currencies -- both those that make up 90 percent of the IDA subscriptions assigned to Part II countries, and any the U.S. might contribute -- are a negligible factor in official thinking.

A further clue is the fact that IDA almost certainly will insist on repayment of its loans in hard currencies, just as the World Bank does. The difference will be in the duration of the loans and the interest charges, with IDA charging less than the Bank, or possibly no interest at all. If, as is expected, the Bank uses IDA to cover the "non-bankable" portion of projects for which it is prepared to make its own loans, the net effect will be to lower the cost to the borrowers of development assistance from this quarter.

Outlook

The obvious answer to the local currency dilemma, most economists agree, is grants. Congress, however, is in no mood to abandon its preference for "sales" of surplus commodities and "loans" of the proceeds, and return to the era of "giveaways." The applicable laws, consequently, are stringent.

As already noted, PL 480 sales agreements concluded through 1959 allocated $656 million worth of foreign currency proceeds to grants -- $316 million for defense purposes under Section 104 (c), and $340 million for economic development under Section 104 (e). The latter provision, however, is subject to Section 1415 of the Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1953, requiring Congress to appropriate foreign currencies before they can be used.

The President can waive this proviso and has done so. On May 4, for example, the U.S. and India signed a PL 480 sales agreement for the delivery of 16 million tons of wheat and 1 million tons of rice over four years. Of the $1,276,000,000 India is to pay in rupees, $200 million is reserved for U.S. use and the remainder for India's use, one-half as loans and one-half as grants. The Budget Bureau, however, regards this 50-50 split of country-use proceeds as an absolute maximum for grants.

Surplus commodities themselves may be given away for relief purposes under Title II. The Administration in 1959 asked Congress to expand this authority, under Titles I and II, to permit grants of commodities for national food reserves and for economic development. When Congress refused to go along, an amendment to Title II only, permitting development grants, was attached to the 1960 Mutual Security Act. The Senate, however, voted 45-38 to delete the provision, and the bill as enacted authorized such grants of commodities for one year only.

According to Edward S. Mason, dean of the Harvard Graduate School of Public Administration, "the first and most obvious corrective step that needs to be undertaken is to eliminate the phony sales of agricultural surpluses." Writing in the Atlantic (May 1960), he said that "unless and until this is done, Uncle Sam's foreign funny money will continue to expand like a tub full of Asian steamed rice." So far, however, there is little evidence that either Congress or the Administration is prepared to come to grips with the issue.

JAPANESE SECURITY TREATY

Exec E -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (Exec Rept 8) June 14, 1960.

- Ratified by a 90-2 roll-call vote of the Senate June 22. (See p. 507)
- Went into effect June 22 (U.S. time) after the exchange of ratification instruments in Tokyo.

Against a background of anti-American riots in Japan, the Senate ratified, by a roll-call vote of 90-2 on June 22, a new Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security between the United States and Japan, replacing an agreement which had been signed Sept. 8, 1951. The new pact, which Japan had ratified June 20, provided that the two countries would take action if either were attacked in the territories under Japanese administration.

A hurry-up call for Senate ratification was made June 20 by Secretary of State Christian A. Herter, who stressed the urgency of putting the treaty into effect before violent Socialist, student and labor union protests toppled Japan's pro-Western Liberal-Democratic government, headed by Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi. Immediately after the exchange of ratification instruments between the U.S. Ambassador to Japan and the Japanese Foreign Minister in Tokyo June 22, Kishi announced plans for dissolution of his government and new elections. Rioting against the security treaty had already caused Kishi to cancel his invitation to President Eisenhower for a four-day state visit to Japan, to have begun June 19.

PROVISIONS -- Although the new treaty (Executive E, 86th Congress, second session) superseded the 1951 security pact, it did not affect the 1951 U.S.-Japan peace treaty. (1952 Almanac p. 169) In Articles V and VI, particularly, it established a different basis for defensive arrangements between Japan and the United States than that which Japan had been given at the end of the post-war occupation period.

Specifically, Article V committed the two parties to defensive action if either were attacked "in the territories under the administration of Japan". The U.S. was thus obligated to defend Japan against attack, and Japan was committed to act if there were an attack against U.S. bases in Japan; but Japan was not obligated to act if U.S. territories or bases outside Japan were attacked. Both parties agreed to report any attacks on Japanese territories and any joint measures taken against the attacks to the Security Council of the United Nations. Both also agreed to terminate their counter-measures "when the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to restore and maintain international peace and security".

Article VI granted the U.S. land, air and naval bases in Japan, though an agreement between Secretary Herter and Prime Minister Kishi gave Japan the right of "prior consultation" before the U.S. made major changes in the number or equipment of its troops in Japan, or used the U.S. bases for combat operations, except in implementing Article V. Testimony by Herter and statements on the Senate floor by Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) made clear that "prior consultation" in Article VI meant assent by the Japanese government. In effect, Japan was given the right, if no attack on Japan or U.S. bases there had occurred, to veto troop increases, bar equipment of U.S. troops in Japan with nuclear weapons and prevent use of U.S. bases for combat operations in which Japan was not involved.

Article VI also provided a new status of forces agreement which was almost identical to the old (1951) one and to similar agreements between the U.S. and North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations.

In other portions of the treaty, the parties agreed to settle their international disputes peacefully, to "refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state," and to strengthen the United Nations (Article I); to strengthen their democratic institutions and understanding of them, to avoid "conflict in their international economic policies" and to encourage economic cooperation (Article II); to maintain and develop, both individually and in mutual cooperation, their defensive capabilities (Article III); to consult together whenever international peace or Japanese security is endangered (Article IV); to consider their rights and obligations under the United Nations Charter unchanged by the treaty (Article VII); to ratify the treaty constitutionally (Article VIII); and to consider the earlier security pact to have expired "upon the entering into force of this treaty" (Article IX).

Article X stipulated that the treaty would remain in force until United Nations arrangements to provide international security "in the Japan area" to the satisfaction of both nations had come into force. Ten years after the effective start of the treaty, however, either party might terminate it on one year's notice.

Background

The treaty was signed Jan. 19 in Washington by Secretary Herter and Prime Minister Kishi. In a communique issued by President Eisenhower and Kishi the day the treaty was signed, "The President assured (Kishi) that the United States Government has no intention of acting in a manner contrary to the wishes of the Japanese Government with respect to the matters involving prior consultation under the treaty." Mr. Eisenhower sent the treaty to the Senate March 10, requesting ratification.

Student rioting against the treaty grew in violence during April in Tokyo and peaceful demonstrations included 70,000 paraders in the Japanese capital on April 26 and an estimated 218,000 participants in rallies elsewhere in the country. Though Socialist members of Japan's House of Representatives staged "sit-down" protests and were forcibly removed from the chamber before the ratification vote on May 20, the treaty carried and was automatically ratified June 20 when the House of Councillors failed to act on it within 30 days of the lower chamber's approval.

The violence included a demonstration June 10 by an estimated 10,000 Japanese who besieged White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty's car when he arrived in Tokyo to make final plans for the President's visit. Hagerty, Ambassador Douglas MacArthur 2nd and White House appointments secretary Thomas E. Stephens were trapped in the car for 80 minutes while the mob threw stones. They were rescued by a U.S. Marine Corps helicopter.

Two days later President Eisenhower made a statement in Washington before leaving for Anchorage, Alaska, the first stop on his trip; he said events in Japan had led him to "reexamine my individual responsibility" and he had decided not to cancel his trip because it represented "an important phase of a program whose paramount objective was, and is, to improve the climate of international understanding." But Prime Minister Kishi June 16 canceled the scheduled visit, saying he could not guarantee the President's safety because of violent, Communist-fomented riots.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARINGS -- June 7 on the treaty.

TESTIMONY -- Secretary Herter testified that the treaty, beyond strengthening "the fabric of international peace and security," would be of mutual benefit to the U.S. and Japan, not a one-sided agreement benefiting the United States, as did the earlier security pact. The 1951 agreement had been signed when Japan was just emerging from its status as an occupied former enemy. The new treaty, according to Herter, was more equitable in recognizing Japan's status as a partner of the U.S.

ACTION -- The treaty was reported by a 15-0 vote June 14 (Exec Rept 8).

The Committee report said the treaty recognized "Japan's rebirth as a fully sovereign nation" and would eliminate "certain overtones of the post-World War II period" in formulating "the genuinely co-equal character" of the "present relationship" between the U.S. and Japan.

Floor Action

The Senate June 22 ratified the treaty by a 90-2 roll-call vote. Sens. Russell B. Long (D La.) and Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) voted against, and Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) was paired against. (For voting, see chart p. 507)

DEBATE -- June 22 -- These were the major arguments pro and con the treaty:

Sens. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) and Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) said the new treaty was more favorable to Japan than the old one in five major respects: (1) The old treaty permitted the use of U.S. bases for combat operations outside Japan in which Japan was not involved, incurring a risk of war for Japan regardless of its wishes; this had been amended by Article VI. (2) The old treaty gave the U.S. unlimited rights to bring in troops and any kinds of weapons it wished; this had also been changed by Article VI. (3) The old treaty permitted use of U.S. troops, at the Japanese government's request, to put down domestic disorder; the new treaty had no such provision. (4) The old treaty gave the U.S. the right to veto transit or stationing of any foreign troops in Japan; the new treaty had no such provision. (5) The old treaty had no termination date; the new one could be ended in 11 years.

Supporters of the new treaty also pointed out that it did not give Japan any power to restrict U.S. military operations on Okinawa or at other U.S. bases in the Ryukyu Islands. Under the 1951 U.S.-Japan peace treaty, Japan, while retaining "residual sovereignty" over the Ryukyus and several other groups of islands, ceded to the U.S. the right to exercise "all and any powers of administration, legislation and jurisdiction" over these islands. The peace treaty, as distinct from the 1951 security treaty being superseded, remained in force.

Criticism of the new treaty, led by Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.), centered on the five major changes. Long said the new treaty was "entirely a one-way street. We give much and gain practically nothing that we do not already have." He objected to the fact that the Japanese pact, unlike NATO treaties, did not commit Japan to fight if the U.S. were attacked outside of the Japanese islands, and even permitted Japan, in such a case, to bar the U.S. from using its Japanese bases as staging areas. Long said neutralist or left-wing governments elected in the future conceivably might permit Communist forces to be stationed on Japanese soil. He also said that unless the Japanese constitution were amended to permit formation of a Japanese army, Japan's contribution to any mutual defense effort would be almost nil.

In answering comments that the Japanese riots reflected anti-American sentiment, Fulbright and others said the opposition to Kishi's domestic policies played a part, as did a post-war residue of pacifist feeling. From this sentiment stemmed the fear that the treaty, in committing Japan to defensive military action (the 1951 treaty gave the U.S. sole responsibility for defending Japan), would eventually lead to revision of Article IX of the postwar constitution, which barred the nation from raising an army and fighting overseas. This Article permitted development only of internal security forces, currently numbering about 160,000.

Several Senators also said that since the incident of the U-2 plane shot down over Russia, many Japanese were frightened by Soviet threats to retaliate against countries that permitted U.S. bases to be used for intelligence flights over the Soviet Union.

ANTARCTIC TREATY

Exec B -- Reported June 23, 1960 by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (Exec Rept 10).

- Ratified by the Senate on a 66-21 roll-call vote Aug. 10. (See p. 512)

Eight months after the United States and 11 other nations, including the Soviet Union, signed a treaty to ensure the permanent use of Antarctica for "peaceful purposes", the Senate ratified the treaty (Executive B, 86th Congress, second session) by a 66-21 vote, Aug. 10, 1960.

PROVISIONS -- The Antarctic Treaty, as ratified by the Senate, contained the following key provisions:

Article I specified that the use of Antarctica was restricted to peaceful purposes, thereby prohibiting all military operations, including the establishment of bases, maneuvers and weapons testing, but not the use of military personnel and equipment for scientific expeditions.

Articles II and III provided for the complete freedom of scientific investigations in Antarctica and for the exchange of plans, personnel and results of any scientific expeditions to the greatest extent "feasible and practicable."

Article IV provided that ratification in no way renunciated previously asserted rights to any Antarctic territory and that no action taken by signatory countries while the treaty was in force would constitute a basis for claim of territorial sovereignty.

Article V prohibited nuclear explosions or the disposal of radioactive waste material in Antarctica.

Article VII specified that any signatory nation could designate observers to carry out inspections, including aerial observations, in any part of Antarctica.

Article IX provided that signatory nations meet periodically in order to make recommendations for technical implementation of the treaty.

Article XI provided that disputes between signatory nations concerning the interpretation or application of the treaty should be resolved by negotiations between the two parties. If the parties were unable to resolve the dispute in this manner, it would be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article XII provided for modification or amendment of the treaty at any time by unanimous agreement. No expiration date was placed on the treaty, any signatory nation could give notice of its withdrawal if an amendment which it offered after the treaty had been in effect 30 years was not accepted by majority vote of the signatory nations within two years.

BACKGROUND -- An outgrowth of International Geophysical Year activities in Antarctica, the treaty was signed Dec. 1, 1959 by the U.S., the U.S.S.R., Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Chile, France, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, the Union of South Africa and the United Kingdom. President Eisenhower transmitted it to the Senate Feb. 15, 1960.

Senate

Although the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had been unanimous in its recommendation June 23 (Exec Rept 10) that the Senate ratify the treaty, three days of spirited debate preceded final Senate approval. Opposition to the treaty was led by Sens. Clair Engle (D Calif.), Strom Thurmond (D S.C.), Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) and Richard B. Russell (D Ga.).

Engle testified June 14 before the Foreign Relations Committee that the treaty should be rejected because it did not fully insure against secret Soviet military operations in Antarctica's five million square miles and because it gave Russia equal rights with the U.S. in an area where the U.S. had previously held predominant interests. In debate Aug. 10 Engle charged that the treaty gave "the Soviets the power of veto in Antarctica" and moved that consideration of the treaty be postponed to Jan. 25, 1961 in order to allow the new Administration to review its attitude toward the treaty. His motion was defeated on a roll-call vote of 29-56. (For voting, see chart p. 512)

Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) characterized the opposition to the treaty as "based on the old-fashioned theory of complete and absolute sovereignty; the right of any nation to do as it sees fit in a world which has become too small to permit that kind of conduct." Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and a leading supporter of the treaty, argued that it preserved "the real value" of Antarctica in keeping it open for scientific investigations by all nations. Fulbright further warned that the Soviet Union would regard U.S. rejection of the treaty as meaning "that we intend to build (military) bases there."

In defense of the treaty Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) noted Aug. 9 that it gave the U.S. and all other signatory powers "a right of unfettered unilateral inspection". Any clandestine Soviet military operations would, he said, be "immediately detected and publicized".

On a roll-call vote the Senate ratified the treaty 66-21, Aug. 10.

CONNALLY AMENDMENT

S Res 94 -- Postponed indefinitely by a 9-8 vote of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee March 29, 1960.

Despite considerable bipartisan support S Res 94, a resolution to repeal the so-called Connally Amendment dealing with U.S. acceptance of compulsory World Court jurisdiction, died in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in 1960. The Committee voted 9-8 March 29 to defer consideration of the resolution for an indefinite period. This negative action was attributed, in part, to a heavy letter campaign in support of the Connally Amendment and to the Administration's failure to give high legislative priority to the repeal resolution. (Only one GOP member of the Committee voted against the postponement motion.)

The measure had been introduced March 24, 1959 by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), and hearings on it had been held Jan. 27 and Feb. 17, 1960 by the Foreign Relations Committee. If adopted by a two-thirds vote of the Senate, it would have removed the clause, "as determined by the United States of America," which was added Aug. 2, 1946 by a 55-12 vote of the Senate to the U.S. agreement accepting the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in various international matters. The eight-word rider was attached to a section stating that the U.S. did not accept the principle of compulsory jurisdiction in "disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction" of the U.S. The amendment, sponsored by then Sen. Tom Connally (D Texas 1929-53), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, gave the U.S. the right to determine whether or not a dispute was within its domestic jurisdiction. (1946 Almanac p. 479)

Background

Although the American Bar Association went on record against the Connally rider as early as 1947, the issue received little attention until a series of speeches in 1958 and 1959 by ABA president (1957-58) Charles S. Rhyne revived public concern over the matter. Rhyne, a Washington, D.C., lawyer and chairman of the ABA's Committee on World Peace through Law, in a speech March 10, 1959 urged repeal of the Connally Amendment as a "first step" in a "program to put nations under the rule of law internationally". President Eisenhower's State of the Union message Jan. 9, 1959 had promised a "reexamination of our own relation" to the World Court, but it was not until his similar message of Jan. 6, 1960 that the President specifically requested repeal. In a Nov. 17, 1959 letter to Sen. Humphrey the President avowed his support of the repeal effort.

Following the introduction of Humphrey's resolution leading Republicans and Democrats announced their backing for repeal. Vice President Richard M. Nixon in a speech to the Academy of Political Science April 13, 1959 declared, "The time has now come to take the initiative in the direction of establishment of the rule of law in the world to replace the rule of force". Nixon said that his support of repeal had "not yet been adopted as the official U.S. position" but added that he had discussed it "at length with Attorney General Rogers and with officials of the State Department".

Among Democratic supporters of the repeal resolution were four candidates for the party's Presidential nomination: Sens. Humphrey, John F. Kennedy (Mass.) and Stuart Symington (Mo.), and Adlai Stevenson.

On the other side, supporters of the Connally Amendment generally argued that its repeal would jeopardize the sovereignty of the U.S. By yielding its right to determine whether or not a dispute were domestic and hence, whether or not it would come under World Court jurisdiction, the pro-Connally forces said, the U.S. would be forced to accept the decisions of a foreign court which currently included two judges from the Soviet bloc. They argued that the Court might interfere with U.S. policy on such matters as the Panama Canal, immigration, tariffs and foreign aid.

Would-be repealers, however, declared that the self-judging clause actually works to the disadvantage of the U.S. Following the approval of the Connally Amendment in 1946, nine other nations belonging to the Court wrote similar reservations into their memberships. Allowing member-nations to decide for themselves which issues are domestic and which should be subject to international jurisdiction, the repeal forces said, reduces the Court's effectiveness and hampers the ability of the U.S. to take other countries before the Court.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 27 and Feb. 17 on S Res 94.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 27 -- Secretary of State Christian A. Herter, testifying in favor of the resolution, said its adoption would not give the World Court jurisdiction over domestic matters as this was precluded by the United Nations Charter, the Statute of the Court, and the portion of the declaration of U.S. acceptance of Court jurisdiction that would be retained in S Res 94. What would be repealed would be the "self-judging reservation" through which the U.S. becomes a judge in its "own cause", Herter said.

He added that the reservation handicapped the U.S. in bringing other nations before the Court, because any adversary had the reciprocal right to invoke the same reservation.

Attorney General William P. Rogers, supporting Herter, said the Connally reservation caused other nations to doubt the "good faith" of the U.S. in accepting the Court's jurisdiction.

In opposition to S Res 94 Mrs. Wilson King Barnes, of the Daughters of the American Revolution, said the International Court of Justice had "no definitive body of law" and included members who had "no belief in moral principles" (two of the 15 judges were from Communist countries). Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.), on the other hand, said International Court judges had shown high impartiality. He cited an American Bar Assn. report favoring the resolution.

Feb. 17 -- Representatives of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, For America, the Congress of Freedom and the National Sojourners testified in opposition. Speakers for the Women's International League for Peace and for Americans for Democratic Action announced their support of the repeal measure.

After the hearings ended, supporters of S Res 94 warned that a planned correspondence drive aimed at defeating the bill was underway and asked that the Senate not be misled by the efforts of a minority. Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) of the Foreign Relations Committee declared that the 3,000 anti-repeal communications received by the Committee as of Feb. 17 were the "products of an organized campaign". Sen. Humphrey, addressing the Senate March 10, characterized the directors of the "letterwriting campaign" as "isolationist", believers in the "completely unrealistic" concept of a "fortress America".

Fulbright later said, "The Committee is split, the country is split and the Senate is split" over the issue. Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) March 15 said he thought the Committee would eventually report S Res 94 but that the resolution would not receive the two-thirds majority necessary for adoption by the Senate.

REPEAL REJECTED

ACTION -- The Foreign Relations Committee March 29 voted 9-8 to postpone indefinitely Committee consideration of S Res 94. Voting to postpone were Sens. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), who introduced the motion, John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), Russell B. Long (D La.), Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), Frank Carlson (R Kan.) and John J. Williams (R Del.). Voting against the motion were Sens. Fulbright, George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Wayne Morse (D Ore.), Albert Gore (D Tenn.), Frank Church (D Idaho), Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Humphrey and Kennedy.

After the Committee vote there were reports that leadership polls of the Senate had indicated the repeal resolution would have failed to receive the necessary two-thirds majority.

At least one supporter of the repeal bill attributed its failure, in part, to the Administration's failure to give the measure real backing. Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) charged in a May 19 speech to a section of the American Bar Association, "Obviously the repeal proposal has been assigned a low legislative priority by the Executive." He said that Administration support had been only "formal" and that supporters of the resolution had had to prod the Attorney General and the Secretary of State in order to get them to testify personally for S Res 94.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- The Connally Amendment was indirectly considered by the Senate May 26, 1960 in relation to Senate ratification of a protocol accompanying four treaties dealing with the international law of the sea. By a roll-call vote of 49-30 the Senate rejected the protocol, giving it four votes less than the required two-thirds majority. (For voting see chart p.497)

The "Optional Protocol of Signature Concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes" would have bound the U.S. to accept World Court jurisdiction in disputes arising under the treaties, in contradiction to the Connally Amendment. The Foreign Relations Committee had reported the four treaties and the protocol April 27 (Exec Rept 5), noting that the protocol meant the U.S. "would not attempt to reserve to itself the right to determine whether or not a matter lay within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States." (For further details, see story p.220)

The American Bar Association Sept. 1 reiterated its long-standing opposition to the Connally Amendment when its full Assembly concurred in a 114-107 vote taken in the ABA House of Delegates Aug. 31. The vote came after a stormy debate and after speeches in support of repeal by President Eisenhower, Attorney General Rogers and Sen. Fulbright. The ABA's Special Committee on World Peace through Law, headed by Charles S. Rhyne, had urged Aug. 27 that the Senate repeal the rider immediately.

RULES GROUP STALLS SCHOOL-AID LEGISLATION

S 8 — Reported (S Rept 1011) by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee Sept. 12, 1959.

- Passed, amended, by the Senate Feb. 4, 1960 by a 51-34 roll-call vote. (See p. 475)

HR 10128 — Reported, amended (H Rept 1426), by House Education and Labor Committee March 25, 1960.

- Passed, amended, by the House May 26 by a 206-109 roll-call vote. (See p. 450)
- Senate asked for a conference June 8.

A general aid-to-education bill came close to passage by Congress in 1960 but was stymied when the House Rules Committee, by a 5-7 vote (D 5-3; R 0-4), refused to authorize a House-Senate conference that might have compromised differences between the House and Senate versions of the legislation. Between June, when the Rules Committee voted, and Sept. 1, when the 86th Congress adjourned, proponents of federal aid to local school districts were unable to generate enough pressure to force final action on the legislation.

The Senate had passed a bill (S 8) authorizing expenditures of $1.8 billion in grants to the states for school construction and teachers' salaries, the payments to be spread so that poorer states would receive more money per school-age child than richer ones. The House passed a bill (HR 10128) providing $1.3 billion in grants for school construction only, with no provision to equalize payments. It also included a proviso that schools receiving aid under the program must be open to students without discrimination.

1960 was the first year since 1950 in which the Senate had passed a school construction bill and the first time the House ever had passed one. The Senate bill was passed by a substantial vote margin, but the battle for passage in the House was nip-and-tuck.

Even had the legislation not been balked by a coalition of four Republicans and three Southern Democrats on the Rules Committee, its provision of direct federal grants to school districts was expected to lead to a Presidential veto. President Eisenhower in 1959 had submitted an aid-to-education bill that represented a change of approach from his earlier programs. Rather than direct grants, as requested in the past, Mr. Eisenhower proposed that the Government help districts pay the costs of long-term school construction bonds, thus spreading the federal costs over a period of 30-35 years. This was dubbed a "bankers' bill" by Democrats and never came close to passage. But White House aides repeatedly warned of the President's displeasure at the alternative -- a program of direct grants that would be more short-run, but more costly in each year of its existence. Democrats would have liked to put an education grants bill on the President's desk and dare him to veto it, but they never succeeded in sending the bill to the White House.

In addition to financing policy, the Administration and many Democrats were at loggerheads over whether an education bill should contain aid for teachers' salaries. The Democrats said it should; that in many areas the need for higher teachers' salaries was greater than for more classrooms, and that states should have the option on how to spend the money. The President, when asked about teachers' salary aid at his Feb. 12 press conference, said: "I do not believe the Federal Government ought to be in the business of paying a local official. If we're going into that, we'll have to find out every councilman and every teacher and every other person that's a public official of any kind...and try to figure out what his right salary is...I can't imagine anything worse for the Federal Government to be into."

This developed into a major issue in the subsequent Presidential campaign. Vice President Richard M. Nixon sided with President Eisenhower and said aid for teachers' salaries would invite dangerous federal control over what is taught. Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) called for salary aid as passed by the Senate, pointing out that the Government had been aiding teachers' salaries under the program of education aid to federally impacted areas (PL 81-874) since 1950, that about 60 percent of the nearly $2 billion that had been appropriated under the program went for teachers' salaries, and that there had been no complaints of federal control. The program covers about one-fourth of the Nation's school children.

Background

Rising school enrollment and the increasing cost of construction after World War II produced a serious shortage of public school classrooms. (See box) For over a decade, there has been consistent pressure for legislation authorizing the Federal Government to provide grants to the states for school construction and teachers' salaries. But opposition to federal aid to education has been strong and, so far, has succeeded in blocking legislation. (1955 Almanac p. 265; 1958 Almanac p. 213)

Certain underlying themes recurred in Congressional and public debate on this major issue of federal-state relationships: Would federal aid lead to federal control; should the Government aid private and religious schools as well as public schools; should it grant money for teachers' salaries as well as school construction; and, since 1954, should it aid areas that refuse to desegregate their school systems?

The Administration in 1959 submitted a plan calling for federal payments stretched out over a period of 30-35 years to help local public school districts pay off the debt service (interest and principal) costs of $3 billion in long-term school construction bonds, which were to be issued within five years of enactment of the bill. There were no provisions for teachers' salaries or direct grants to needy areas in its bills (S 1016, HR 4268). (1959 Almanac p. 300)

Northern Democrats supported proposals for immediate large-scale grants to the states for both public school construction and teachers' salaries. Their initial Murray-Metcalf bill (S 2, HR 22) called for $4.4 billion annually in non-matching grants for these purposes, to continue indefinitely. The bill took its name from its first sponsors, Sen. James E. Murray and Rep. Lee Metcalf (both D Mont.).

The House version of the Murray-Metcalf bill (HR 22), sharply cut so that it provided only $1.1 billion a year

Two School Problems

● CLASSROOM SHORTAGE -- The Nation was short 132,400 public elementary and secondary school classrooms at the beginning of the 1959-60 school year, the U.S. Office of Education reported Dec. 23. That was the number needed to handle 1,883,000 students enrolled in excess of normal classroom capacity and to replace obsolete facilities.

Despite state construction of 63,000 to 72,000 new classrooms annually since the 1955-56 school year, the over-all classroom shortage declined only slightly. Rising enrollment (enrollment jumped from about 25 million in 1948-49 to over 35 million in 1959-60) and the obsolescence of existing classrooms prevented a sizeable reduction of the backlog. Summarizing the construction situation on Dec. 23, Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Athur S. Flemming said, "We have barely been building enough schools each year to take care of annual enrollment increases and to replace classrooms that have been abandoned." Thus, while the states built 68,700 new classrooms in the 1956-57 school year, 72,100 in 1957-58 and 70,000 in 1958-59, the over-all shortage from September 1956 to September 1959 dropped by only 17,000 classrooms -- from 159,000 to 132,400.

Flemming said that while voter approval of school bond issues proceeded at a good pace ($1,230,736,000) during the first 11 months of 1959, 55.9 percent of all bond issues between October 1953 and June 1959 were concentrated in seven states -- California, New York, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Texas and Pennsylvania -- with New York and California alone accounting for 27.6 percent.

● TEACHER SALARIES -- The average annual salary of teachers, principals and supervisors was $5,160 in the 1959-60 school year, according to the National Education Assn.'s "Estimates of School Statistics, 1959-60." The national average compared with earlier years:

for only four years for school construction and teachers' salaries, was reported July 8, 1959 by the House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 447) but was never sent to the House floor by the Rules Committee. With HR 22 blocked in the Rules Committee, Senate Democrats on the Labor and Public Welfare Education Subcommittee wrote a new bill (S 8) that was reported by the full Committee Sept. 12, 1959 (S Rept 1011).

S 8, introduced by Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.), called for an emergency two-year program of federal matching grants to the states for school construction only.

The bill authorized $500 million in federal payments each year and provided variable matching from $2 federal and $1 local in low income states, to $1 federal for $2 local in high-income states. It allotted funds on the basis of per capita income, school-age population and school financing efforts. The result of these provisions would be a variable 3-1 equalization between wealthiest and poorest states -- the poorest states would receive three times as much in allocations per school-age child as the wealthiest states.

Like HR 22, S 8 did not require a Government-approved state plan. McNamara said the bill would build 75,000 classrooms (his estimate was based on costs of $30,000 a classroom), but others said the result would be only 50,000 (based on $40,000 a classroom).

All the Committee's Democrats and three Republicans -- John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), Clifford P. Case (N.J.) and Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.) -- voted to report the bill, but Cooper and Javits later offered their own bill. This bill (S 2637) combined features of the Administration's debt-service plan with provisions for grants to districts already at their legal debt limit. Cooper and Javits, in a Jan. 20, 1960 meeting with the President, sought Mr. Eisenhower's backing for their bill. Javits said afterwards the President had reservations, particularly about their grant provisions, and asked them to have further meetings with White House aides.

Senate Action

The Senate Feb. 4, by a 51-34 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of S 8, providing a two-year program of federal grants to be matched by the states and to be used for school construction or teachers' salaries or both. The bill authorized appropriations of $20 per child of school age (5-17), or about $917 million for each of the two years. (For voting, see chart, p. 474-75)

Senate approval of the bill was an outright rejection of the position of President Eisenhower. When Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) Feb. 4 offered the Administration plan as a substitute bill, it was defeated by a 25-61 roll-call vote. The Cooper-Javits bill also was beaten, by an 18-71 roll-call vote.

The amendment expanding S 8 to almost twice its monetary size and including aid to teachers' salaries was offered by Sens. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) and Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) and adopted by a 54-35 roll-call vote.

An amendment offered earlier by Clark and co-sponsored by 22 other Senators, authorizing appropriations of $1.1 billion a year for an indefinite period for school construction and teachers' salaries, narrowly missed acceptance on a 44-44 roll call. A motion to table a move to reconsider the vote carried, 45-44, Vice President Richard M. Nixon casting the deciding vote.

Other amendments which would have provided loans for private and parochial schools and barred the loans to Southern areas which had closed their public schools also were beaten down.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 8, the School Assistance Act of 1960:

Authorized appropriation of $20 per child of school age (5-17) -- or about $916,880,000 per year -- for two years.

Provided that the money could be used by the states for school construction or teachers' salaries or both.

Required the states, in order to receive their second-year allotments, to have increased their school expenditures by about $345 million over their 1959-60 expenditures, based on varying percentages averaging 2.26 percent for all states.

Allotted funds to the states on the basis of income per child of school age, school-age population, and school financing efforts ("school effort index" in relation to national "school effort index").

(The result of the last provision would be a variable 3-1 equalization between the wealthiest and poorest states

-- the poorest states would receive three times as much in allocations per school-age child as the wealthiest states.)

Required no Government-approved state plan, but provided that states must assure the U.S. Commissioner of Education that funds they received would be allotted on the basis of need.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Feb. 4 -- A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) as amended by Clark -- Amend Committee bill to provide $20 per school-age child for two years for school construction and teachers' salaries. Roll-call vote, 54-35.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Feb. 3 -- Norris Cotton (R N.H.) -- Appropriate annually to each state for school construction, teachers' salaries, equipment and other educational purposes 1 cent of the federal tax on each package of cigarettes sold within the state (about $200 million annually). Voice vote.

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Substitute for the Committee bill the text of the Cooper-Javits bill (S 2637), providing $400 million over four years to pay one-half the interest and principal on 20-30 year school construction bonds and a two-year program of direct grants to areas up to their legal debt limit, the grants to be deducted from the state's total allocation. The Treasury outlay would be $2,974,000,000 over 20-30 years. Roll call, 18-71.

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Authorize $25 per school age child per year -- about $1.1 billion -- for an indefinite period for school construction and teachers' salaries. Roll call, 44-44.

Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) -- Amend Clark amendment to allow authorizations to be used for general educational purposes according to the laws of each state. Standing.

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Amend Clark amendment to provide $10 per school-age child, or about $400 million per year. Voice.

Case -- Amend Clark amendment to provide $15 per school-age child, or about $660 million. Roll call, 33-54.

Feb. 4 -- Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Amend Committee bill to include a two-year program of $75 million in loans to private schools at 2.75 percent interest rate for school construction only. Roll call, 37-49.

Morse -- Add to Morse amendment a provision that the Commissioner of Education would give priority to applicants proposing to construct schools in areas where public schools are in operation. Standing.

Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Amend Committee bill to base allotments on the school-age population in public schools only. Standing.

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Substitute for Committee bill language of the Administration bill (S 1016) allocating $600 million per year for five years to pay half the interest and principal on local school construction bonds. Roll call, 25-61.

DEBATE -- Feb. 3 -- Cooper -- His and Javits' amendment "is a proposal which we believe has an excellent chance of being signed by the President because it is based upon the principle which the President has espoused," that is, "guarantee of bonded debt."

McNamara -- The Cooper-Javits plan would commit the Federal Government for 20 to 30 years and raise interest costs.

Clark -- Teachers are in critical need of aid; their "chances of ever earning more than $7,000 a year are only 1 to 7."

Dirksen -- "I do not want to go down the road of teachers' salaries, only to discover at the end" that nothing but a political issue was accomplished.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) -- "There should be some aid given our states for educational purposes" but "to tell the states how they shall spend federal-aid school money...is objectionable."

Feb. 4 -- Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) -- S 8 "would open a Pandora's box" that "would run federal education expenditures into a multi-billion-dollar program."

House

COMMITTEE -- Education and Labor.

ACTION -- March 25 reported an amended bill (HR 10128 -- H Rept 1426) to provide a $325 million-a-year program for three years in federal grants to the states for school construction. The Committee made no substantial changes in the bill as sent to it Feb. 18 by the General Education Subcommittee.

In the first year of the three-year program provided in HR 10128, grants were to be outright; in the second and third years, the states would be required to match the federal grants on a 50-50 basis.

Allocations to individual states under the bill were to be based on each state's number of school-age children (5-17 years); there was no equalization formula giving poorer states proportionally larger allocations than rich ones.

In the second and third years, states would have the choice of using the federal allocation either for direct grants to local districts or for making commitments to pay the debt service (principal and interest payments) on long-term school construction bonds floated by the local school districts.

Eighteen Democrats and one Republican, Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (N.J.), voted to approve HR 10128; nine Republicans and two Democrats, Reps. Graham A. Barden (N.C.) and Phil M. Landrum (Ga.), voted against approving the bill. It was voted on in executive session March 15.

Before the final vote, the Committee rejected, 12-15, an amendment by Rep. Joe Holt (R Calif.) restricting aid to areas with segregated schools. It also rejected Frelinghuysen amendments to substitute the Administration bill for HR 10128; to extend the debt service option and the matching requirement to the first year; and to insert an equalization formula. The equalization attempt was co-sponsored by Rep. Carl Elliott (D Ala.). Frelinghuysen March 11 introduced the latest version (HR 11122) of the Administration debt-service bill. The bill, identical with an amendment offered during Senate floor action Feb. 4 by Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), differed from the original Administration bill in deleting a repayment requirement for districts receiving debt-service aid and in giving states two years after the program started, without loss of allocations for those years, in which to change their bond laws to permit districts already at their legal debt limit to borrow more money.

In earlier meetings on the bill, the Committee Feb. 24 rejected a Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.) amendment to provide up to $48,750,000 in loans to private schools for construction; March 1 rejected a Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.) amendment to reduce the grants to $750 million; and March 2 rejected equalization formulas offered by Elliott and Frelinghuysen to base state allocations on need rather than school-age population alone.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

The majority report on the bill said it would provide for about 25,000 classrooms and, through its provision for federal-state matching funds, encourage the states to finance the cost of another 15,000 to 16,000 classrooms. The report said although 62,700 rooms were scheduled for completion in 1959-60, states estimated 41,000 rooms would be needed by the fall of 1960 just to provide for the annual enrollment increase of 1.2 million pupils, and another 18,000 rooms would be needed for replacements, "leaving but 3,700 classrooms to be applied against the backlog".

Minority views, which termed the bill "seriously defective", were signed by seven of the 10 Republican Committee members. The minority report said an accurate analysis of the classroom backlog "would reveal that a very considerable volume" of it was either unavoidable or temporary and had "no direct bearing on the issue of federal aid". The report said "the real core of the problem" was that "most of our states, while appropriating state funds for operating our schools, have not used the broader tax base of the state for school-construction purposes".

GOP Reps. Edgar W. Hiestand (Calif.) and Charles E. Goodell (N.Y.) submitted additional individual views. Hiestand said the bill had a "fatal weakness of distributing these tax moneys without regard to need." Goodell said the most acute state and local education problem was to find adequate sources of tax revenue and that the Government should release federal taxes to the states.

HR 10128 was sponsored by Rep. Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.) and reportedly had the backing of House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) and the Democratic Study Group, of which Thompson was secretary. It was deliberately tailored to meet some Administration objections to the broader bill (HR 22) reported by the Committee in 1959: the $325 million-a-year authorization paralleled the amount suggested in the Administration's 1957 bill; teachers' salary aid was omitted; and the Administration's debt-service plan was offered as an alternative to grant aid.

RULES COMMITTEE PRODDED

On May 12, when HR 10128 had been pending before the Rules Committee for almost two months without action, the Education and Labor Committee voted 17-7 to bring the bill to the House floor in the following week under the rarely used procedure of Calendar Wednesday. The Rules Committee had been bypassed by this procedure earlier in the year, when the Area Redevelopment bill was called up and passed on Calendar Wednesday. (See story, p. 292). Later, the education bill's sponsors agreed to postpone the threatened action in order to give the Rules Committee a chance to clear the bill.

The Rules Committee May 19, by a 7-5 vote, granted the bill an open rule (H Res 536) for House debate. Voting to clear the bill were Reps. Madden (D Ind.), Delaney (D N.Y.), Trimble (D Ark.), Thornberry (D Texas), Bolling (D Mo.), O'Neill (D Mass.), and Reece (R Tenn.). Voting against clearance were the Committee's other Republicans, Reps. Allen (Ill.), Brown (Ohio) and Budge (Idaho) and two Southern Democrats, Reps. Smith (Va.) and Colmer (Miss.).

Floor Action

The House May 25 adopted the rule for debate by a 309-97 roll-call vote and the next day passed an amended version of the bill by a 206-189 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 448-50) It was the first time the House had ever approved a general school construction bill. As sent to the Senate, the bill contained an amendment by Rep. Adam C. Powell Jr. (D N.Y.) declaring that the school aid must be available to all students without discrimination.

To meet an Administration objection, expressed in a May 25 letter from HEW Secretary Arthur S. Flemming to Rep. Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.), that federal funds should be matched in every year of the program, Rep. Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.) May 26 offered an amendment making the bill a four-year program (at $325 million annually) and requiring 50-50 matching in all four years. Under the Thompson amendment, which was adopted by a standing vote of 112-87, matching funds in the first two years could be provided either by the states or by local areas. This allowed state governments two years to find means of raising the matching funds required of them in the third and fourth years.

THREATS TO PASSAGE

The Thompson bill as amended narrowly escaped several major threats to its passage. In the one day of House voting on the measure May 26, it was clear that those for and against passing a school construction bill were about evenly pitted against each other. This led to a series of maneuvers and votes which took no predictable course -- even to floor leaders -- until the final moments when enough votes for passage of the amended Thompson bill were cast.

The greatest threat to passage of the bill was the Powell amendment. Adoption of a similar -- though more stringently worded -- amendment led to the defeat of a 1956 school bill. (1956 Almanac p. 411) Since then, proponents of bills for such purposes as housing, education, etc., had avoided attaching an anti-segregation rider, fearing it meant sure death of a bill. For a while May 26 it appeared that the sequence of events in 1956 might be reenacted in 1960: First, most of the Southerners abstained while almost all the Republicans and a few Northern Democrats from areas with high Negro populations voted to accept the Powell amendment by a standing vote of 126-108 and a teller vote of 151-103. In a later roll-call, more Northerners went on record as favoring the Powell amendment, and it was adopted by a 218-181 vote. But a combination of Republicans and Southern Democrats was not quite large enough to kill the bill containing the Powell amendment when it came to the vote on final passage.

(In a June 7 letter to his constituents, Thompson said: "The best proof" that "the Southern Democratic-Republican coalition" was "responsible for the inclusion" of the Powell amendment was "that 78 Republicans who voted for the Powell amendment turned an about-face and voted against the bill on final passage. This group includes the Minority Leader, Rep. Halleck, the Chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee (William E. Miller -- N.Y.) and the Chairman of the Republican Policy Committee (John W. Byrnes -- Wis.). There can be little doubt that, these amazing facts having been revealed, the policy of the Republican party is to oppose any federal aid to education.")

Another major threat to the Thompson bill occurred when Republicans and Southern Democrats rallied to a substitute bill offered by Rep. Frank T. Bow (R Ohio). The Bow bill would have returned to each state, for construction of public schools, 2 cents out of the 8-cent federal tax collected on each pack of cigarettes sold in that state during the preceding year. The bill contained a statement of Congressional belief that "responsibility for and control over education is one of the powers not delegated to the United States but reserved to the states or to the people".

The Bow bill was first rejected in the Committee of the Whole by a standing vote of 121-122, then accepted by a teller vote of 154-129 and finally rejected by a roll-call vote of 181-219 (D 86-175; R 93-44). (A similar proposal offered by Sen. Norris Cotton (R N.H.) was rejected by voice vote of the Senate Feb. 3.)

A third amendment which had an effect on the final vote and which also received see-saw treatment in the House was offered by Rep. Carl Elliott (D Ala.). His amendment would have added to the bill an equalization formula under which federal funds would be allocated on the basis of need, with the poorest state receiving twice as much per student as the wealthiest state. The Elliott amendment brought the House bill more in line with the Senate-passed bill and was designed to meet objections to the original bill by the Administration and Congressmen from poorer states. The addition of such a formula, though opposed by some Representatives of wealthier states, could be expected to attract more votes for final passage. The Elliott amendment was first rejected by a standing vote of 76-103, then accepted by a teller vote of 130-112, and later rejected by voice vote when the bill came from Committee of the Whole to the House itself.

PARTY SWITCHES

On a roll-call vote to accept HR 10128 as reported by the Education and Labor Committee and amended by the House -- with the Powell and Thompson amendments but without the Elliott equalization formula -- most Republicans voted "yea" and Northern Democrats, led by floor leaders Thompson, Stewart L. Udall (D Ariz.) and Lee Metcalf (D Mont.), voted "nay". The result of this vote was 223-177 (D 108-154; R 115-23).

Had the "nays" prevailed on that vote (CQ Roll Call 51) the next vote would have come on HR 10128 as reported by the Education Committee, without the Powell amendment. When, however, the amended bill was approved (and after an intervening vote on a recommittal motion) the House once more voted on exactly the same proposal, HR 10128 as amended by Powell and Thompson, and the party lines switched, with Northern Democrats voting for the bill and the majority of Republicans this time against it (D 162-97; R 44-92). President Eisenhower had opposed the Powell amendment for four years.

ADMINISTRATION AND PAROCHIAL PLANS

The House twice rejected the Administration bill (HR 12259), which would have provided federal payments stretched out over a period of 30-35 years to help local public school districts pay off the debt service (interest and principal) costs of $3 billion in long-term school construction bonds, which were to be issued within five years of enactment. The estimated total cost to the Federal Government over the 35-year period was about $2,143,000,000. The bill, offered by Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.), was first rejected by voice vote. Then, a motion by Kearns to recommit the Thompson bill with instructions to substitute the Administration bill was rejected by an 80-320 roll-call vote.

Two amendments which contained other potentially controversial features were ruled out of order, on the grounds they were not germane, by Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), who was presiding. The first, offered by Rep. Lee Metcalf (D Mont.), was a substitute bill (HR 12316) providing a two-year program of federal grants, averaging $10 per school-age child -- or about $888,000,000 -- for school construction and teachers' salaries. The other, offered by Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.), would have provided loans for private and parochial schools.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 10128, the School Construction Assistance Act of 1960:

Authorized $325 million a year for four years in federal grants to the states for school construction.

Provided that the funds must be matched on a 50-50 basis by the states or local areas in the first two years, and by the states alone in the last two years.

Based allocations to the individual states on each state's number of school-age children (5-17 years).

Declared that school facilities constructed with funds provided in the bill "shall be available to students without regard to race, creed, color, national origin or religion, in accordance with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court."

Gave the states a choice of using the federal funds either for direct grants to school districts or for annual payments for debt service (principal and interest) on long-term school construction bonds.

Provided penalties, in reduction of allotments, if a state's rate of spending on education -- the "school effort index" -- fell below the national average.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

May 26 -- Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.) -- Amend HR 10128 to authorize annual expenditures of $325 million for four years, rather than three years; require matching of federal funds on a 50-50 basis for all four years; and permit matching in the first two years by states or local areas. Standing vote, 112-87.

Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.) -- Amend the Thompson bill to provide that school facilities constructed with funds provided in the bill must be available to all students in accordance with Supreme Court decisions. Standing, 126-108; teller, 151-103; roll call, 218-181.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

May 26 -- Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.) -- Substitute for the Thompson bill the Administration bill (HR 12259), authorizing federal-state matching funds to pay off the interest and principal (debt service) costs of long-term school construction bonds to be floated by local school districts. Voice vote.

Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (R N.J.) -- Substitute for the Thompson amendment (above) an amendment holding the program to three years and requiring 50-50 matching in the first year from state and local sources. Standing, 46-135.

Carl Elliott (D Ala.) -- Add to the Thompson bill an equalization formula which would allow the poorest state to receive two times as much per student as the richest state in federal allocations. In the Committee of the Whole: rejected on a standing vote, 76-103; accepted on a teller vote, 130-112; later in the House itself: rejected by voice vote.

Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) -- Substitute for the Elliott amendment a distribution formula basing allocations to each state on per capita income per child in public schools only (in effect, the formula barred aid to nearly 20 of the wealthier states, according to Quie). Voice.

Phil M. Landrum (D Ga.) -- Amend Thompson bill to prevent any federal action that would bar funds to the states because of any law or customs of the states or local areas. Standing, 78-151.

Frank T. Bow (R Ohio) -- Substitute for the Thompson bill a measure that would aid public school construction by returning to each state 2 cents of the 8-cent federal tax on every pack of cigarettes sold in that state. In the Committee of the Whole: rejected on a standing vote, 121-122; accepted on a teller vote, 154-129; later in the House: rejected by roll call, 181-219.

Thomas M. Pelly (R Wash.) -- Amend the Bow substitute to return to the states 6 cents on each pack of cigarettes sold in the state. Voice.

METHODS OF AID

DEBATE -- May 25 -- Edgar W. Hiestand (R Calif.) -- School assistance should go to "the districts and the people who need it". The absence of a needs test was a "basic weakness" in the bill as reported from Committee.

Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.) -- The Federal Government has "only one avenue of assistance in upgrading educational opportunities: utilization of its broader tax base to provide the necessary funds."

George McGovern (D S.D.) -- "It is not encouraging to note that we spend slightly more on alcohol and cosmetics and more than twice as much on advertising as we do on education...." Federal aid for education should enable each state to deal with its own needs, whether the shortage of qualified teachers or classrooms, "without dictation by the Federal Government."

May 26 -- E.L. Forrester (D Ga.) -- "The main purpose (of the bill) is federal control and intervention in the schools of this country."

William G. Bray (R Ind.) -- "What we should do is to return to the states a part of the money they are paying to the Federal Government in excise taxes. Our schools need it. We can do this without any of the evils of federal aid to education."

Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (R N.J.) -- The Administration school aid plan "would have far less impact on the federal budget" than HR 10128 but would promote "an extensive program of help in the building of classrooms".

Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.) -- His amendment "represents merely an affirmation of the Supreme Court decision.... A vote against this is a vote against civil rights."

Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.) -- Individual school districts defying court orders to desegregate could be denied funds under the bill "without the addition of any amendment...we do not need legislation with respect to self-enacting clauses of the Constitution."

Conference Attempts

The Senate June 9, by voice vote, agreed to a motion by Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) that the Senate insist upon its version of the education bill (S 8) and request a conference with the House. Senate conferees appointed were Lister Hill (D Ala.), James E. Murray (D Mont.), Pat McNamara (D Mich.), Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), Clifford P. Case (R N.J.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), and Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.).

In the House June 9, a motion to send the bill to conference was objected to by a bipartisan group led by Reps. James C. Davis (D Ga.) and August E. Johansen (R Mich.). The next step was for the bill's sponsors to ask the House Rules Committee to report out a resolution to send the bill to conference.

After newspaper reports that House Minority Leader Halleck was working behind-the-scenes to prevent final agreement on a school-aid bill, Vice President Richard M. Nixon's office June 17 announced that Nixon was working for enactment of a school bill and had met June 16 with Halleck and other House Republicans and White House representatives. Herbert G. Klein, the Vice President's press secretary, said Nixon thought there was "a good chance a school construction bill will come out of conference and be acceptable to the White House".

The House Rules Committee, however, June 22, by a 5-7 vote, rejected a request for a rule allowing the House to agree to a conference. The majority was composed of Reps. Trimble (D Ark.) and Reece (R Tenn.), who had voted in May to send HR 10128 to the House floor, plus the five Committee members who had voted May 19 against granting a rule.

Following the Rules Committee's June 22 vote, Thompson said, "The Vice President was completely repudiated by all of the Republicans on the Rules Committee. This is a great victory for Charlie Halleck, who has more influence here than Nixon does."

Despite reports that House and Senate leaders had agreed on compromise provisions of a final bill, no further steps were taken to release the bill.

Platform Education Planks

The platforms of both political parties, adopted in the 1960 nominating conventions in July, contained sections on aid to education.

The Democratic party platform, adopted July 12 in Los Angeles, pledged federal aid for school construction and teachers' salaries: "The assistance will take the form of federal grants to states for educational purposes they deem most pressing, including classroom construction and teachers' salaries." (For text, see p. 783-84)

The Republican platform, adopted July 27 in Chicago, pledged: "Federal support to the primary and secondary schools by a program of federal aid for school construction -- pacing it to the real needs of individual school districts in states and territories, and requiring state approval and participation." The Republicans made no mention of teachers' salaries. (For text, see p. 799)

At a July 31 press conference in Hyannis Port, Mass., the Democratic Presidential and Vice Presidential nominees, Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) and Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), outlined a five-point program on which they said they would concentrate in the August session of Congress. One of the five points was an aid-to-education bill.

STUDENT AFFIDAVIT

S 2929 -- Reported (S Rept 1347) by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee May 12, 1960.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate June 15 by voice vote.

The Senate in 1960 passed a bill (S 2929) eliminating the non-Communist affidavit requirement from the National Defense Education Act of 1958 (PL 85-864) and instead making it a crime for a Communist (or other "subversive") to receive federal aid under the Act. The only House action was a one-day hearing.

Under the 1958 Act, a student applying for a federal education loan was required to submit with his application an affidavit attesting that he did not believe in violent overthrow of the Government, and did not support or belong to organizations believing in or teaching violent overthrow. The applicant was also required to swear an oath of allegiance to the United States.

S 2929, as passed by the Senate, eliminated the affidavit, but not the oath of allegiance. In place of the affidavit, the bill made it a crime for any person to apply for or accept aid under the 1958 Act if at the time he applied he (a) was a member of the Communist party or any other group which had as a purpose violent overthrow of the U.S. or a state government; and (b) was aware of that purpose. If the applicant had been a member of the party or any other such organization within the previous five years, but no longer was, he could legally apply for aid but was liable to criminal penalties if he failed to submit with his application a full statement of the facts of his past membership.

As originally introduced by Sens. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), S 2929 simply repealed the affidavit requirement. The other provisions were added by floor amendment. President Eisenhower in his Jan. 18 Budget Message had asked repeal of the affidavit.

Background

The affidavit and loyalty oath requirements were inserted in the 1958 National Defense Education Act in the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee by former Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R N.J. 1945-59) and were mentioned during Senate floor consideration only in a brief exchange between Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.) and Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.). (1958 Almanac p. 213)

The affidavit had precedents in the 1947 Taft-Hartley Act (officers of unions seeking to use the facilities of the National Labor Relations Board had to certify they were not Communists) but was eliminated from that Act in the 1959 labor reform bill (1959 Almanac p. 156), and in the National Science Foundation Act of 1950. (1950 Almanac p. 183).

Following is the language of the 1958 Defense Education Act loyalty oath and affidavit provision:

> No part of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available for expenditure under authority of this Act shall be used to make payments or loans to any individual unless such individual (1) has executed and filed with the Commissioner (of Education) an affidavit that he does not believe in, and is not a member of and does not support any organization that believes in or teaches, the overthrow of the United States Government by force or violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods, and (2) has taken and subscribed to an oath or affirmation in the following form: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America and will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States against all its enemies, foreign and domestic."

Under the Act, a college submitting a loan application to the U.S. Office of Education on behalf of one of its students was responsible for transmitting the student's signed affidavit and a notarized statement saying the student had sworn the oath.

Perjury penalties of up to $10,000 fine and five years imprisonment were provided for making a false statement in the affidavit. However, Kennedy's office told Congressional Quarterly Jan. 29 that there had never been a perjury prosecution under this provision of the Act, nor under the National Science Foundation Act.

COLLEGES PROTEST

When the Defense Education Act went into effect, nine educational institutions immediately declined to participate because of the affidavit requirement. Another 20 later withdrew from the student loan program for the same reason.

A major objection to the affidavit, according to some educators, was that it inquired into the personal beliefs of student applicants for loans, rather than merely into their overt acts, and consequently presented a danger to freedom of speech and conscience.

A number of education organizations also took stands against the affidavit, but other groups, like the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, opposed the repeal move. In 1959 Kennedy and Clark introduced a bill (S 819) to eliminate both the affidavit and the oath. The bill reached the floor but was recommitted to the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee July 23. There was no House action. (1959 Almanac p. 299)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare.

ACTION -- Feb. 2, 1960 voted 12-3 to report S 2929, repealing the affidavit but not the oath. Nine Democrats and three Republicans voted for the bill; Sens. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.), Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) voted against. The report (S Rept 1347) was filed May 12.

The report charged the disclaimer affidavit was not effective as a security device; it reflected "unnecessarily and undeservedly" on the academic community; it discriminated against needy students applying for loans; and it impeded the educational process. It claimed concern over the affidavit was "widespread" in the academic community.

The report said the Government was protected against subversives receiving aid by the Smith Act of 1940, which made it a crime to teach and advocate violent overthrow of the Government or to organize or belong to a group that did so. Another protection, the report said, was provided by a statute (18 USC 1001) making it a crime to willfully omit or conceal certain information in any dealings with the Government. The Committee said this statute would be used against applicants who omitted or falsified information about belonging to a subversive group on loan applications under the Act.

MINORITY VIEWS -- Sens. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) and C. Norman Brunsdale (R N.D.) said there should be a substitute for the affidavit to make it a crime for anyone to accept loans while advocating overthrow of the Government.

In separate views, Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) said passage of S 2929 would not leave the Act with sufficient protection against its use by those advocating overthrow of the Government.

Floor Action

The Senate June 15 passed S 2929 by voice vote after accepting, also by voice vote, a major amendment offered by Prouty. The amendment added to the affidavit repeal new language making it a crime for anyone who belonged to the Communist party or any other group having as a purpose violent overthrow of the U.S. or a state government, and who knew of that purpose, to apply for or accept federal aid under the 1958 education act.

The amendment also required anyone who had belonged to such a group within the previous five years, but no longer did, to state the full facts of his membership when applying for aid, or face criminal penalties.

As originally offered, the Prouty amendment would also have eliminated the oath-of-allegiance requirement. The amendment was modified, however, before being accepted, so that it left the oath of allegiance in the 1958 Act.

Kennedy said the Prouty amendment was acceptable, although he preferred the bill as reported by the Committee. However, Kennedy said, "in the atmosphere which exists in Congress", the Prouty amendment would enhance the bill's chances of approval by the House.

After the Senate had voted to pass the amended version of S 2929, Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) entered a motion to reconsider the vote. Holland said he and several other Senators had been out of the Chamber when the Prouty amendment was agreed to.

On June 16, the Senate by voice vote tabled the Holland motion to reconsider and sent S 2929 to the House.

House

COMMITTEE -- Education and Labor, Special Education Subcommittee.

HEARING -- June 22.

TESTIMONY -- June 22 -- Harvard University President Nathan M. Pusey, testifying for the Assn. of American Universities, said the affidavit was "futile, ineffective and unnecessary" and contained "threats to some of the basic elements in our democratic tradition." Pusey said the substitute provision passed by the Senate was acceptable to the Association.

Committee Chairman Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) told Pusey he was "deeply disturbed" by the bill and said he did not think "in these times we should just turn loose and not give young people any guidance or caution." Barden said students abroad had "insulted our Vice President, taken over governments, insulted the President." He said U.S. students were "the hope of America" but "they have their proportion of bad eggs... one Communist is a bad egg too many."

Pusey said he thought the country should stay away from "any implication that students ought to be careful..."

VETO OF FEDERAL PAY RAISE BILL OVERRIDDEN

HR 9883 -- Reported, amended, by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee (H Rept 1636) May 23, 1960.

- Passed, amended, by the House June 15 by a 378-40 roll-call vote. (See p. 454)

S 3672 -- Reported by Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee (S Rept 1590) June 15.

HR 9883 -- Passed by the Senate by a 62-17 roll-call vote June 17. (See p. 503-504)

- Vetoed June 30.
- Veto overridden July 1 by a 345-69 roll-call vote of the House (69 more than the necessary two-thirds majority), and by a 74-24 roll-call vote of the Senate (eight more than the necessary two-thirds majority). (See p. 462, 510)

PL 86-568 -- Became law July 1.

Congress in 1960 overrode the President's veto of a bill (HR 9883 -- PL 86-568) raising the salaries of postal workers and other Government employees by an average of about 7½ percent.

It was only the second time Congress had overridden an Eisenhower veto during the President's eight years in office. (See p. 641 for vetoes) It was also only the second time since 1923 that a measure brought to the House floor through a discharge motion ("petition") was ultimately enacted into law. The first was the Wages and Hours bill in 1938. (See p. 247)

The successful final passage of the pay-raise bill, whose cost to the Government was estimated at $746 million a year, was due largely to lobbying efforts of federal employees' unions -- efforts the President sharply criticized in his veto message. The Administration had requested that Congress delay an over-all federal pay raise pending a study of comparative wages in private industry and Government, but indicated it would accept extension of a 2.5 percent temporary pay increase for postal workers, scheduled to expire in January 1961.

The pay raise was the second setback delivered by Congress to the President's requests for action to relieve the $600 million annual postal deficit. Mr. Eisenhower's request for an increase in postal rates was not acted on. (See page 249)

Although sponsors of the bill said the pay raises would average 7½ percent, the Civil Service Commission said that the average salary increase for Government employees subject to the classification Act would be 7.7 percent and for postal workers 8.35 percent. Postal field service employees, the CSC said, would get raises in some cases as high as 8.8 percent; GS 18 classified employees only 5.7 percent.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted over the President's veto, HR 9883 provided federal pay increases (effective July 1, 1960) whose annual costs, the Administration said, would come to:

Type of Employment	Number	Cost
Classified (white collar) workers in the Executive Branch	980,000	$452,000,000
Postal Field Service	535,000	252,000,000
Medical, dental personnel in Veterans Administration	19,300	12,400,000
Foreign Service personnel in State Department	8,100	$8,600,000
County employees of Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service	15,000	15,500,000
Legislative and Judicial Branch employees	12,500	5,500,000
TOTAL	1,569,900	$746,000,000

The bill also:

Added in additional $5 to the base rate and annual increments in the lower six levels of the postal field schedules, with similar adjustments for rural carriers.

Established the position of Assistant Secretary for Administration of Health, Education and Welfare.

Adjusted the number of supergrade positions in the Interstate Commerce and Civil Service Commissions.

Provided the standing and pay of an Assistant Secretary for the legal advisor, solicitor or general counsel of each executive department (excluding the Justice Department).

Made permanent a temporary 2½ percent pay raise for postal workers enacted in 1958 and scheduled to expire Jan. 1, 1961. (Raises listed above were in addition to this 2½ percent.)

Background

The 1960 pay raise was the eighth for postal workers and the ninth for classified workers in 15 years. Three times -- in 1954, 1957 and 1960 -- pay bills were pried from House committees through discharge petitions. A summary of action, 1945-59, on federal-postal pay:

Postal Employees

- 1945 -- Congress passed and President Truman approved a bill providing a flat $400 increase for employees paid on an annual basis with proportionate increases for hourly rate employees and fourth class postmasters (PL 134, 79th Congress).
- 1946 -- Congress passed and the President signed a bill providing a flat $400 increase for employees paid on an annual basis, $.20 an hour for hourly employees and 20 percent for fourth class postmasters (PL 386, 79th Congress).
- 1948 -- Congress passed and the President approved a bill providing a flat $450 increase for employees paid on an annual basis, $.25 an hour for hourly employees and 25 percent for fourth class postmasters (PL 900, 80th Congress).
- 1949 -- Congress passed and the President signed a bill providing a $120 increase for employees paid on an annual basis, $.02½ an hour for hourly employees and 5 percent for fourth class postmasters; a $200-increase was provided for entrance salaries for regular employees, $100 for temporary employees; also provided that employees who were in grades lower than grade 3 on the effective date of the act should be placed in grade 3 and that all new appointees after the effective date of the act be placed in grade 3; provided three additional longevity grades for certain employees not previously entitled to such compensation (PL 428, 81st Congress).

● 1951 -- Congress passed and the President signed a bill providing a $400 increase for employees paid on an annual basis, $.20 an hour for hourly employees and 20 percent for fourth class postmasters; also eliminated first two salary grades and one or two grade advancements for certain employees (PL 204, 82nd Congress).

● 1954 -- Congress passed and President Eisenhower pocket vetoed a bill providing a 5 percent increase for all postal employees (HR 7774, 83rd Congress).

● 1955 -- Congress passed and the President vetoed a bill providing a 7 percent pay increase and creating an additional salary grade above grade 4 for clerks, carriers and motor vehicle operators (S 1, 84th Congress).

● Congress passed and the President signed a bill providing a 6 percent increase for all postal employees and reclassifying certain employees to provide an additional 2 percent increase; also continued carriers, clerks and special delivery messengers in existing salary grades (PL 68, 84th Congress).

● 1957 -- Congress passed and the President vetoed a bill providing a flat $546 increase for employees paid on annual and hourly bases and a 12 percent increase for fourth class postmasters (HR 2474, 85th Congress).

● 1958 -- Congress passed and the President approved a bill providing a 7.5 percent increase for all employees plus a temporary (three years) 2.5 percent increase for grades 1-6 and a 1.5 percent increase for grade 7 (PL 426, 85th Congress). The 2.5 percent temporary increase was later extended to all grades by PL 462, 85th Congress.

Classified Employees

● 1945 -- Congress passed and President Truman signed a bill providing pay increases of 20 percent on first $1,200, 10 percent on the next $3,400 and 5 percent on the remainder; average increase -- 15.9 percent (PL 106, 79th Congress).

● 1946 -- Congress passed and the President approved a bill providing increases of 14 percent or $250, whichever was greater, with a $10,000 ceiling (PL 390, 79th Congress).

● 1948 -- Congress passed and the President approved a bill providing across-the-board increases of $330; average increase -- 11 percent (PL 900, 80th Congress).

● Congress passed and the President approved a bill providing increases averaging $140 per year or 4.1 percent (PL 429, 81st Congress).

● 1951 -- Congress passed and the President approved a bill providing an increase of 10 percent with minimum increase of $300 and maximum of $800 (PL 201, 82nd Congress).

● 1954 -- Congress passed and President Eisenhower signed a bill providing longevity increases in grades 11-15 of the General Schedule (PL 763, 83rd Congress).

● 1955 -- Congress passed and the President approved a bill providing an increase of 7.5 percent (PL 94, 84th Congress).

● 1957 -- Congress passed and the President pocket vetoed a bill providing an 11 percent increase for classified employees and employees in the legislative and judicial branches (HR 2462, 85th Congress).

● 1958 -- Congress passed and the President approved a bill providing a 10 percent increase, creating 292 new supergrade positions and extending temporary cost of living raises to postal employees not covered in PL 426 (PL 462, 85th Congress).

EISENHOWER PROPOSALS

In his Jan. 18 Budget Message, President Eisenhower criticized "continued patching" of individual federal salary systems. He recommended authorization of a joint commission or "some other equally effective means" to develop a comprehensive federal pay policy. "Pending development and adoption of such a comprehensive policy, a general pay raise would be unwarranted, unfair to the taxpayers of the United States, and inequitable as among employees compensated under different and unrelated pay systems," the President said. Mr. Eisenhower noted that the budget estimates for the Post Office Department assumed that Congress would extend a 2.5 percent temporary pay increase for postal workers scheduled to expire Jan. 1, 1961.

The Budget Bureau March 11 sent to Congress a draft bill to establish a temporary 15-man commission to develop a coordinated salary policy. Identical bills (HR 5719, 5721) incorporating the draft were introduced March 16 by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.) and senior Republican Rep. Edward H. Rees (Kan.). No action was taken on either bill in 1960.

A press release issued by the Government Employees' Council Jan. 14 said the GEC would present to Congress a measure calling for a pay increase averaging 12 percent "with fringe benefits that are similar to those recently secured by the steelworkers (and) negotiated with considerable help" from the Vice President and the Secretary of Labor. (Vice President Richard M. Nixon was widely credited with playing an important role in the settlement Jan. 4, 1960 of a 116-day-old steel strike.)

A bill embodying the GEC proposals was introduced Jan. 25 by Rep. James H. Morrison (D La.), chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Civil Service. Subsequently, 84 identical bills were introduced in the House.

House

COMMITTEE -- Post Office and Civil Service.

HEARINGS -- March 15 - April 29 on HR 9883 and other pay raise bills.

TESTIMONY -- March 15 -- Maurice H. Stans, director of the Budget Bureau, in a letter to the Committee, said the Administration could see "no justification" for a raise for either classified or postal workers.

Roger W. Jones, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, in a similar letter, said the proposals would only increase the imbalance in Government pay plans.

William C. Doherty, president of the National Assn. of Letter Carriers, said the Committee should approve a postal pay raise plan before considering postal rate increases.

March 17 -- E.C. Hallbeck of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks (AFL-CIO) said the "Administration's role in achieving pay raises for steel workers demands that it use the same yardstick" for all groups of workers. He said it came with "poor grace for the Administration to deny at least equal increases" for federal employees.

Fred O'Dwyer, president of the National Assn. of Postal Supervisors, said federal pay raises would not lead to an inflationary spiral and suggested that economy in Government should not "always begin with federal employees."

March 22 -- Hobart A. Wehking, president of the National Assn. of Postmasters, recommended a 10 percent pay raise for postal workers. He said such an increase would cost the Government an additional $300 million yearly and recommended the increase be absorbed by postal rate increases.

March 28 -- James A. Campbell, president of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFL-CIO), supported the salary raises proposed in HR 9883.

March 31 -- Vaux Owen, president of the Independent National Federation of Federal Employees, said that "an average increase of 15 percent" for classified workers would be justified.

April 21 -- Budget Director Maurice H. Stans opposed HR 9883, calling the proposal "fiscal irresponsibility" and "wasteful Government that cannot be defended", since passage would cost the Treasury an additional $1.6 billion annually. Under the proposal, Stans said, raises would not be equally distributed and in some cases federal salaries would rise above comparable industrial rates. He said Congress should delay consideration of federal and postal pay raises until the Bureau of Labor Statistics completed a comparison of Government and private industry pay rates. (Results of the BLS study were originally scheduled for release in September but later rescheduled for release in December; see p. 246)

April 22 -- Jones said pay increases should be postponed until Government payroll policies were modernized. Pay increases merely add to the existing patchwork policy, Jones said, and make no provisions for "continuing payroll costs".

April 26 -- BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague said the pay rates for classified employees had not kept up with increased living costs. The consumer price index had risen 113 percent since 1939, Clague said, but the salaries for employees in Civil Service Grade 6 had risen by only 107 percent and higher grades by even less.

Stans said the Administration would move quickly to put into effect necessary and desirable changes "in the pay and grade structure indicated by the BLS survey".

April 27 -- Secretary of Commerce Frederick H. Mueller said pay increases would have an adverse effect on the entire economy. Mueller said the proposal would place a heavy burden on the taxpayers and result in inflation.

April 28-29 -- Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield said there was no justification for any pay increases and without provisions for raising additional revenue, the proposals could double the expected $603 million postal deficit for fiscal 1961. (The Treasury and Agriculture Departments also opposed the bill during the hearings.)

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- April 26 -- Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) said President Eisenhower opposed HR 9883.

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Committee May 4 ordered reported an amended version of HR 9883, providing a pay raise averaging 9 percent for 1.6 million federal workers. The bill guaranteed a minimum pay increase of $350 a year for all classified and postal employees except fourth class postmasters. The cost of the 9 percent raise was estimated at about $846 million annually. The bill also made permanent the 2.5 percent pay increase for postal workers which was enacted in 1958 and scheduled to expire

Jan. 1, 1961. The 9 percent raise was to be over and above the 2.5 percent raise.

The Committee voted 16-4 to approve the bill, with Chairman Murray and Republican members Rees, H.R. Gross (Iowa) and August E. Johansen (Mich.) reportedly voting against the measure.

Earlier, the Committee May 3 rejected an average 10 percent raise by a 10-12 vote and an average 6 percent raise by a 2-20 vote, and May 4 rejected an average 7½ percent raise by a 9-13 vote.

The Committee report (H Rept 1636), filed May 23, said: "Committee deliberations on the salary problem this year demonstrate once more that the federal employees can expect and obtain sympathetic and fair salary consideration only through appeals to their elected representatives in Congress. They cannot hope for proper recognition at high executive levels...for the loyal and efficient services they render."

The Committee termed "specious" the Administration's arguments that pay raises would "adversely affect their rather optimistic prognosis of a $4.2 billion budget surplus" and that "everybody should await" the Bureau of Labor Statistics survey of comparative salaries in government and industry. The Committee said, "It is reliably reported that at least 45 Presidential commissions have been established since 1953, but many of the studies later were abandoned and in some cases not even a report or public record was left."

The minority report, signed by Murray and Johansen, opposed HR 9883 as "unjustified and unfair," because factual data presented during hearings indicated that federal employees were "being paid in accord with the pay in private industry." In addition, the minority view held that increases should be made on a selective, not a uniform basis, that the bill created "new distortions and inequities in the postal field service and rural carrier schedules" and that it represented "financial irresponsibility"

DISCHARGE PETITION

The bill's sponsors took steps to force the bill to the House floor even if the Rules Committee failed to grant the bill a rule. The strategy was for the sponsors to introduce a rule for floor debate (in the form of a resolution), which would automatically be referred to the Rules Committee. If the Rules Committee failed to act on the resolution, or some other resolution to bring the bill to the floor, sponsors of the pay raise measure would seek to discharge their resolution from the Rules Committee. To do this, it would be necessary to obtain the signatures of 219 House Members on a motion ("discharge petition") to discharge the Rules Committee of the resolution for floor debate.

The procedure was started May 23, the same day the pay raise bill was reported, when Morrison introduced a resolution (H Res 537) providing for floor debate on HR 9883. Under House rules, a resolution must be in committee seven days without action before a motion may be made to discharge it from committee. Then, after the 219 signatures on the discharge motion are obtained, the motion must "lie on the table" for seven more days before it can be called up to the floor, and then it may be called up only on the second and fourth Mondays of the month.

With Congress facing adjournment at the beginning of July to attend the Democratic and Republican National Conventions, backers of the pay raise bill found it necessary, because of the waiting periods needed, to line up all the required 219 signatures in two days if they were to be certain to get the measure to the floor before adjournment.

This was the procedure: when seven legislative days had passed, and the Rules Committee had failed to act on H Res 537, T. Ashton Thompson (D La.) June 2 offered the discharge motion ("petition") on H Res 537. In two days, June 2-3, supporters of the pay raise bill succeeded in getting the required 219 signatures.

To do that, it was necessary for them to hold the House in session late on June 3 until the signatures had been obtained; a motion by Rep. Paul C. Jones (D Mo.) for early adjournment -- to prevent the discharge petition from being completed -- was rejected on a 77-196 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 452)

At the crucial moment, the Government Employees' Council (AFL-CIO) organized a drive to help speed the bill to the House floor. GEC leaders alerted local union officials to be ready to come to the Capitol if the Rules Committee did not clear HR 9883 for floor debate by May 31; postal and other employee union representatives from all over the Nation converged on Washington May 31-June 1 to urge House Members to sign the discharge petition. (For names of signers, see box)

Discharge Petition Signers

The following 219 House Members (D 173, R 46) on June 2-3 signed the successful motion ("discharge petition") to discharge a rule (H Res 537) for floor debate on the federal pay raise bill (HR 9883) from the Rules Committee. Members are Democrats unless otherwise noted.

Just before the bill was debated in the House June 15, backers worked to enhance chances of passage over an expected Presidential veto. The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee met that day and approved an amendment reducing the average pay raise to about 7½ percent and striking out the guaranteed $350 minimum increase. Under H Res 537 the rule under which HR 9883 was scheduled to come to the floor, only amendments approved by the Committee could be offered. The amendment was approved in Committee by a 17-4 vote, with Murray and several Republicans opposed. The amendment retained the provision making permanent the 2½ percent postal raise of 1958.

Floor Action

The House June 15 passed HR 9883 by a 378-40 roll-call vote, after agreeing to the Committee amendment, offered by Morrison, by voice vote. The House on a 94-324 roll call rejected a motion by Rees to recommit the bill with instructions to substitute an average 5 percent pay raise. (For voting, see chart p. 454)

Before acting on the bill itself, the House by voice vote agreed to the motion to discharge the resolution for debate (H Res 537) from the Rules Committee, and then, also by voice vote, adopted H Res 537.

DEBATE -- June 15 -- Murray -- "I have never seen such tactics employed as these lobbyists have been using during this fight for the pay bill. I think it is high time for the Members of the Congress to stand up and let these lobbyists know that they are not to be controlled by them... If we do not, it will be a sorry picture regarding any future pay legislation."

Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) -- "I said when I started that I did not think this measure would become law. I do not need to tell you that it is not in accord with the President's program.... I say to you on my individual responsibility, because the President has never committed himself as to what he would do, I have no question in my mind as to what his action will be on this measure if and when it reaches the White House." The Post Office Department was already at a deficit of $600 million, but instead of meeting the President's request for a postal rate increase, the Committee proposed a pay raise that would add $225 million a year to the postal deficit alone.

Joel T. Broyhill (R Va.) -- "This is a reasonable, a fair bill...a good compromise."

James G. Fulton (R Pa.) -- "I firmly believe that all groups in our economy should move ahead economically at the same rate, and this pay raise is necessary to meet this test."

J. Arthur Younger (R Calif.) -- "Until this Congress gets to a point of putting salaries under the control of a board and making them on a regional basis you will never have justice for the employees in high cost areas."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Post Office and Civil Service.

HEARINGS -- April 28-May 17. The same organizations and Administration representatives testified as at the earlier House hearings.

ACTION -- June 15 reported S 3672 (S Rept 1590), identical to HR 9883 as passed by the House the same day. The report said salaries for federal white-collar employees had "not kept pace" with salaries of comparable employees in private industry and that the Federal Government was losing many highly trained personnel because of the pay differential.

Floor Action

The Senate June 17 passed HR 9883 by a 62-17 roll-call vote, without any change from the House version.

Six amendments to HR 9883 and a motion to recommit, offered in attempts to reduce the pay raise, were defeated. Some opponents of HR 9883 hoped, by amending it, to send the bill to conference with the House, thereby raising the possibility that the bill would be sent to the President late enough for a pocket veto (on which there would be no chance to override because Congress would be in adjournment to attend the political conventions). (For voting on passage and amendments, see charts p. 503-504.)

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) offered a motion to recommit the bill to the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee with instructions to report back two separate bills providing pay increases for postal workers and other federal employees. The motion was rejected by a 21-56 roll-call vote.

Two amendments were offered by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.). The first would have substituted for the 7½ percent pay raise a plan whereby the President would adjust federal pay schedules to comparable pay levels of private industry. The adjustment would take effect Jan. 1, 1961 and would be based on the study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The amendment was rejected by a 11-70 roll-call vote.

A second Dirksen amendment added the body of a bill (S 3192) to increase postal rates to raise an additional $550 million annually in postal revenues. The amendment was rejected by a voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 17 -- Frank Carlson (R Kan.) -- Reduce the 7½ percent pay raise to 6 percent. Roll-call vote, 28-54.

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Omit employees of the Legislative Branch from the pay raise. Roll call, 19-63.

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Amend the Ellender amendment (above) to give individual House Members discretion on raising the salaries of their employees (as the bill already provided for Senators). Voice.

Case (S.D.) -- Amend Ellender's amendment to provide that pay raises for Senators' employees would occur automatically unless disapproved by the Senator concerned. Voice.

Ellender -- Confine the pay raise to employees earning less than $10,000 annually and prohibit increases that would bring any salary above $10,000. Roll call, 23-58.

Frank Church (D Idaho) -- Limit the pay increase to postal workers. Roll call, 22-58.

Dirksen -- Substitute for the bill a plan whereby the President would make federal pay rates comparable to wages in private industry. Roll call, 11-70.

Dirksen -- Increase postal rates to raise an additional $550 million annually in revenues. Voice.

DEBATE -- June 17 -- Dirksen -- "Realizing...the circumstances under which the bill was rushed along, and the desire that no amendment be agreed to so as to avoid a conference, in order to send the bill to the President...to make sure there will be no pocket veto, it seems to me in that kind of haste we are playing with the fiscal responsibility of the country, because three-quarters of a billion dollars are involved in the bill."

Church -- "We will vote to override the President's veto (in order) to fatten the Federal payroll, but not to meet the critical needs of this country (unpolluted water, housing, etc.)...I cannot, in good conscience, support a three-quarter billion dollar bill to fatten federal pay, when the proof is not before us to justify it."

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- "The proposed increase is but half of what it would be if we were to raise the pay to what is paid by the big corporations. However, we cannot afford to do that at this particular time, so we want to pass a bill which will be within the limits of the Government's ability to pay."

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- "One of the reasons I believe we are second in space to the Soviet Union, and in many other technological fields, (is) because people (in Congress) say, 'I won't vote for higher salaries'" for federal workers in the top positions. Postal workers need a raise because their families "are trying to exist on less than $300 a month".

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- The Dirksen amendment to increase postage rates is the only chance Senators will have to show "we are willing to pay the bill" in order to give postal workers the benefits they need.

Bill Vetoed

President Eisenhower June 30 vetoed the bill.

In his veto message on the pay bill, the President said the bill represented "fiscal and legislative irresponsibility".

He said HR 9883 ignored the only fair method of computing Government salaries -- making them equivalent to private industry scales for similar work. Instead, he said the bill provided increases that actually favored those Government workers who already were getting as much as they would in private industry. Before acting, the President said, Congress should have waited for the completion in September of a Labor Department study comparing Government and private industry wages.

The President characterized as "utterly without foundation" the argument that a 7½ percent raise was needed to keep pace with the rising cost of living. Since 1953, the consumer price index had risen only 11 percent but Government wages had gone up by 17½ percent to 20 percent, he said, and since 1958, when Government salaries were increased 10 percent, the index had risen only 2.1 percent.

Among other Presidential objections to the bill were that it would increase the annual postal deficit by $248 million, to $851 million, and that it extended federal retirement and life and health insurance benefits to certain locally elected employees of county stabilization and conservation committees. Such persons were not really federal workers, the President said.

Mr. Eisenhower said he still favored making permanent the 2½ percent temporary increase given postal field service employees in 1958, and that he would be willing to approve a general federal pay increase commensurate with the rise in the cost of living.

The President concluded by saying it was "disturbing" and "shocking" that "intensive and unconcealed political pressure" had been exerted on Congress in behalf of the bill by postal employee unions.

Veto Overridden

HOUSE

The House July 1 overrode the President's veto by a 345-69 roll-call vote. This was 69 votes more than the two-thirds required to override. Voting to override were 256 Democrats and 89 Republicans. Voting to sustain the veto were 13 Democrats and 56 Republicans. (For voting, see chart p. 462)

HOUSE DEBATE -- July 1 -- Bruce Alger (R Texas) -- By overriding the President's veto, "we have capitulated to the political pressure of lobbyists, in this case representing the postal workers unions. We are guilty of permitting legislative dictation. If one pressure group can do it, so can others. Then, in the aggregate total our representative government will fail."

Walter Judd (R Minn.) -- "I am compelled to vote to sustain the President's veto. I do not agree with two major reasons the President gives for his veto: ...that postal salaries should be raised by only the same percentage as the general cost of living has increased since the last pay raise bill"; or that "postal employees cannot be given a suitable pay raise because the Post Office has such a big deficit. The postal workers are not responsible for that deficit; the Congress is."

Thomas P. O'Neill (D Mass.) -- "Never before in my experience has a veto message contained such intemperate and abusive language...(and) such a grotesque perversion of fact.... What does the President mean by 'intensive and unconcealed political pressure'? Postal employees have merely exercised their constitutional right of direct petition.... They have proved to us that this Administration has practiced economic discrimination against them." Political pressure is coming not from the postal employees but from "a bitter and overly aggressive Postmaster General".

SENATE

The Senate later in the day July 1 overrode the veto by a 74-24 roll-call vote. The margin of passage was eight votes greater than the two-thirds required to override. Voting to override were 55 Democrats and 19 Republicans, and voting to sustain the veto were 9 Democrats and 15 Republicans.

The Senate vote completed congressional action to override the veto and HR 9883 became Public Law 86-568.

During Senate debate on HR 9883, Styles Bridges (R N.H.) said that if the Senate sustained the President's veto he would introduce a bill authorizing an across-the-board 6 percent pay raise for federal classified and postal workers.

Sen. Frank Carlson (R Kan.) inserted in the Congressional Record a statement from the Civil Service Commission which said the Commission "greatly regretted numerous inaccurate statements" (by supporters of HR 9883) about the effect of the measure on classified employees' salaries. The Commission said the increases ranged from 5.7 percent in the highest grade to 8.3 percent in the top step of the lowest grade. The Commission said the new pay schedule "further increases the lack of consistency among the different pay systems of the Government" and gave as an example the Veterans Administration, where, under HR 9883, the top pay for a chief medical director was made higher than the statutory salary of the Administrator of Veterans Affairs.

BLS REPORT RELEASED

The Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics Dec. 4 issued its promised report, "National Survey of Professional, Administrative, Technical, and Clerical Pay, Winter 1959-60". The report covered salary averages for positions in private industry. In a release accompanying the report, the Budget Bureau compared the private industry rates with those for the equivalent Government positions.

Based on the comparison, the Budget Bureau concluded: future federal salary legislation should place less emphasis on lower-level pay and enact more competitive salaries at the higher levels, or the Government would have to rely on "mediocre management and professional talent, particularly in the scientific and engineering fields"; "reform" of the Classification Act system of position evaluation "is essential"; Congress' 1960 pay raise "accentuated inequities" and "raised substantially the cost of providing a salary structure reasonably comparable with that of private business"; the survey system should be revised to make it more technical and expanded to cover more types of employment -- "These facts point to the necessity of a Federal Pay Commission."

PAY RAISE LOBBY ACTION

"Those fellows can't elect me, but, on the other hand, they certainly can defeat me."

This comment on postal employees' unions was made a few years ago by a veteran House Member who was a committee chairman and a proven vote getter.

The postal unions all have their national headquarters in Washington. They are usually well represented at Congressional hearings by experienced and knowledgeable witnesses. Their long history of dealing with Congress has led to a rapport probably unmatched by any other pressure group. Many Members actually depend on the postal lobbyists for information they say they cannot get from the Post Office Department.

The drive for the pay raise was spearheaded by the AFL-CIO's Government Employees' Council, representing 24 federal employee unions (see box). In a Jan. 14 press release, the GEC said it would present to Congress a measure calling for a 12-percent pay increase "with fringe benefits that are similar to those recently secured by the Steelworkers (and) negotiated with considerable help" from the Vice President and the Secretary of Labor.

Throughout Senate and House federal pay raise hearings, the postal and employees organizations urged members to contact their Senators, Representatives, and Vice President Richard M. Nixon, to ask for passage of the pay raise.

During a recess in House hearings on federal pay raises, GEC sponsored in Washington April 4-6 a national "Legislative Rally and Conference", attended by about 4,000 delegates. A second meeting of postal and other federal employee union representatives was held in Washington May 31-June 3, summoned by the GEC to speed House action on HR 9883. On July 1, during House and Senate voting to override the President's veto, groups of postal workers dressed in blue working uniforms roamed the Capitol halls and watched the floor action from the House and Senate galleries.

Of the lobby's activities, the President in his veto message said that "a number of postal field service employees, particularly their leadership...exerted flagrantly...intensive and unconcealed political pressure" on Members of Congress for passage of the pay bill, and had "grossly" abused the right of federal employees to petition the Government.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Oct. 19 -- The leaders of two unions of post office clerks announced agreement to the terms of a merger which, when ratified by the two organizations, would create the Nation's largest postal employee union.

At a joint press conference, E.C. Hallbeck, president of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks (AFL-CIO), and Joseph Thomas, president of the independent United National Assn. of Post Office Craftsmen, described the agreement as "a breakthrough in efforts to achieve greater labor unity" among Government workers. The merger, which they said should be ratified by March 1, 1961, would unite the 100,000 members of the NFPOC with the 35,000 members of the UNAPOC. They said the new union would be known as the United Federation of Post Office Clerks and would be affiliated with the AFL-CIO. It was announced that Hallbeck would assume the presidency of the new union and that Thomas would take over as organization director.

Federal Employee Organizations

Below is a list of major groups that lobbied for HR 9883 and their memberships. Included are both postal unions and classified employee organizations. All have registered with Congress under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act or employ registered lobbyists.

Many of the unions belonging to the AFL-CIO's 24-member Government Employees' Council, such as the International Assn. of Machinists and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, are not listed because only a small part of their memberships are actually engaged in Government work and were not covered by HR 9883.

Government Employees' Council

National Assn. of Letter Carriers	125,000
National Federation of Post Office Clerks	94,000
National Postal Transport Assn.	65,000
American Federation of Government Employees	80,000
American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees	11,000

CQ Fact Sheet On Discharge Petitions

DISCHARGE PROCEDURE USED ON FIVE HOUSE BILLS

A little-used parliamentary technique -- the discharge "petition" -- was used five times in the 86th Congress in attempts to bring legislation to the House floor for debate. In one case, that of the pay raise for federal employees, the petition was successful and in a second instance, the civil rights bill, the pressure brought by the drive for signatures on the petition was a major factor in freeing the bill from the Rules Committee.

Under the discharge rule (H Rule 27, iv), a majority of the House (currently, 219 Members), by signing a motion (popularly called a discharge "petition") to discharge a committee from consideration of a bill, may bring to the floor after a complicated series of parliamentary steps:

(1) any public bill that has been before a standing committee of the House for 30 days; or

(2) any committee-approved bill that has been before the House Rules Committee for seven legislative days without receiving a special "rule" for debate giving it the green light for floor action.

In addition, the discharge rule permits dislodging of a special rule from the Rules Committee for debate on a bill that has been before a standing committee for 30 days -- a combination of the first two procedures.

The discharge "petition" is thus a device by which a majority of House Members can pull a bill out of a legislative committee or the Rules Committee and bring it directly to the floor. Its aim is to circumvent normal procedure.

Reasons for Petitions

Under normal procedure any bill, before it gets to the floor, must first be approved and reported by the legislative committee to which it was referred when it was introduced. Then, unless it is in a small group of "privileged" bills -- notably an appropriations bill which can be brought to the floor directly three days after being reported -- or is so non-controversial that it may be considered under "consent" or "suspension of the rules" procedure, it goes to the Rules Committee.

The Rules Committee has the right to grant any bill a "rule" (in the form of a House resolution) for floor debate, limiting the length of debate and the floor amendments that may be offered. Once the Rules Committee has reported a "rule," that rule may be called up to the floor immediately; if it is adopted, debate on the bill itself normally follows immediately, under the conditions set forth in the rule.

For this reason, legislative committees reporting bills of a controversial nature seek to bring them to the floor by obtaining a rule from the Rules Committee. If the Rules Committee, because it opposes the legislation, refuses to grant it a rule the discharge procedure is almost the only way possible of getting the bill to the floor rapidly and of limiting debate on it.

The one bill brought to the floor by this method in 1960 was HR 9883, providing a pay raise for federal employees. After a whirlwind, 2-day campaign, a petition filed by Rep. T. Ashton Thompson (D La.) to free the bill from the Rules Committee reached the necessary 219 signatures June 3. The bill subsequently was passed, vetoed and the President's veto overridden. (See p. 240)

An earlier discharge petition, filed Sept. 7, 1959 by Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), was instrumental in forcing the Rules Committee to send the Civil Rights Act (HR 8601) to the House floor. The petition came within 10 names of the required signatures Feb. 16; two days later, the Rules Committee granted a rule for debate on the bill. It was subsequently enacted. (See p. 185)

A discharge petition filed Aug. 20, 1959 by Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) to force out of the District of Columbia Committee an Administration-supported D.C. home rule bill (HR 4633) failed of success by only 15 signatures. (See p. 284)

A fourth discharge petition would have forced the Rules Committee to grant a rule for debate on HR 1253, to enact a federal fair trade law. Filed May 17, 1960 by Commerce Committee Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.), the petition fell far short of success. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.) April 6 filed, but did not push, a petition to get his bill for medical aid to the elderly (HR 4700) out of the Ways and Means Committee. A compromise was enacted. (See p. 148)

Details of Procedure

To start the discharge procedure, a Representative gives the House Clerk a motion in writing to discharge legislation (either a bill or a resolution bringing a bill to the floor) from any House committee. After receiving the motion, the House Clerk accepts signatures of Members at his desk; the motion can be signed only while the House is in session. (Signatures on the civil rights and home-rule "petitions" were obtained until Sept. 15, 1959, when Congress adjourned for the year, and the petitions again were open for signature when the second session convened Jan. 6.)

To be voted on, the discharge motion must be signed by a majority of the Representatives (219 currently). Signatures may be withdrawn by a Member, in writing. Until the motion has been signed by the required number of Members, the House Clerk does not reveal the names of those who have signed. When a majority has signed, the discharge motion is immediately entered on the Journal, printed with the signatures in the Congressional Record, and referred to the Discharge Calendar (Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees). It is then ready to be called up for consideration by the House.

However, it may be called up only on the second and fourth Mondays of each month (except during the last six days of the session) and must have been on the Discharge Calendar seven legislative days. Once these conditions are met, any Member who signed the motion and who

History of Discharge Rule

The modern discharge rule was first adopted June 17, 1910 (there was a discharge rule in the post-Revolutionary War period but it was soon discarded). Major changes as the rule evolved to its present form:

June 17, 1910 -- Under this rule, a single Member could enter a written motion to discharge a committee, regardless of how long the bill in question had been before the committee, and could call it up for House consideration any Monday following the reading of the unanimous consent calendar. Debate on the motion was limited to 20 minutes. However, so many opportunities for dilatory action through intervening motions were provided that the 1910 discharge rule proved limited in usefulness.

April 5, 1911 -- The rule was changed to require a bill to be in committee 15 days before a discharge motion could be filed.

Feb. 3, 1912 -- Additional opportunities for dilatory action were provided, making the rule almost useless.

Jan. 18, 1924 -- One hundred and fifty signatures on the discharge motion were required before it could be called up. The length of time a bill was required to be in committee before a discharge motion could be filed was extended to 30 days.

Dec. 7, 1925 -- The number of required signatures was raised to 218. Opportunities for intervening motions were reduced somewhat. Debate on the discharge motion was increased to 40 minutes.

Dec. 8, 1931 -- The number of required signatures was reduced to 145 and debate on the motion to 20 minutes. For the first time, a discharged bill became a matter of privilege after the motion to discharge was adopted; this reduced opportunities for dilatory action. In addition, the requirement was added that legislation be in the Rules Committee seven days before a motion could be offered to discharge it from that Committee.

Jan. 3, 1935 -- The present discharge rule was adopted, specifying that a majority of the House must sign the petition.

seeks recognition from the Speaker must be recognized to call up the motion; the only intervening motion permissible while the House is considering a discharge motion is one to adjourn.

When a discharge motion is called up, the bill or resolution affected is read to the House by title only, to avoid dilatory tactics. Debate on a discharge motion is limited to 10 minutes for and 10 minutes against. It is adopted by simple majority vote of Members present.

If a motion is adopted discharging the Rules Committee from a resolution governing debate (as was done with the federal-postal pay bill), the House immediately votes on that resolution. Upon its adoption, the House then considers the bill involved under the rules for debate specified in the resolution.

If a standing committee is discharged of any public bill or resolution, a signer of the discharge motion can move for consideration of the discharged legislation. This consideration motion is not debatable and is made a matter of high privilege. If agreed to, it allows the discharged bill to be considered under the general rules of the House and to remain the unfinished business until disposed of.

Once the House has acted on a discharge motion, no other discharge motion substantially the same in meaning can be entertained for the remainder of the session.

Reluctance to Use

The discharge petition is used to pry out of a committee legislation that is opposed by the majority of the committee members. Rather than report a legislative proposal adversely, a committee more usually will pigeonhole it and thus prevent floor consideration. Both the civil rights and Washington home rule petitions were attempts to by-pass Southern opposition on the Rules and District Committees, where Southern Democrats had strong representation.

Many Representatives are reluctant to use the discharge rule. Some simply oppose the legislation concerned and would be content to see it die in the Rules Committee or the legislative committee with jurisdiction over it. Others dislike the departure from normal House procedure, or fear "half-baked" legislation -- legislation enacted without the safeguards that come from committee consideration.

While, as the chart shows, 22 bills have been pried loose from committee since the 68th Congress by the discharge method, and 18 of those ultimately passed the House, only two were eventually enacted into law: the Wages and Hours Act of 1938 and the 1960 federal pay raise bill. Others were defeated in the Senate or vetoed.

Over the past 10 years there have been three successful discharge petitions. In 1954, a postal pay-raise bill (HR 9245) came to the floor when the House Aug. 9 voted 246-29 to discharge a rule for the bill from the Rules Committee. It then passed the bill, but there was no Senate action.

In 1957, another postal pay-raise bill was brought to the floor by successful use of the discharge petition but was vetoed by President Eisenhower. His veto of the 1960 pay raise bill, however, was overridden.

POSTAL RATE INCREASE REJECTED BY CONGRESS

Except for a month of hearings by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, there was no Congressional action in 1960 on President Eisenhower's request for increases in postal rates -- a request that met strong opposition from business and newspaper groups benefiting from low-rate second, third and fourth-class mail services.

An attempt by Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) to enact the postal rate increases by adding them as a floor amendment to a bill (HR 9883) raising postal workers' pay failed June 17, when the Senate rejected Dirksen's amendment by voice vote. (See story p. 240)

The President's request for rate increases was forwarded to Congress in a special message March 11 and embodied in bills (HR 11140, S 3192) to raise Post Office revenues about $550 million annually by increasing rates 1 cent for first-class mail (including surface and air letters and postal cards) and by varying amounts for second, third and fourth-class mail. (For text of message, see p. 628)

In the March 11 message, Mr. Eisenhower said rate increases were needed to reduce the $600 million annual postal deficit, a deficit totalling $6.8 billion over the past 13 years. He said Congress should implement its declared policy, established in 1958 in the law that last raised postal rates (PL 85-426), of adjusting postal rates periodically to cover the costs of all postal services except specified "public welfare" services which were to be charged to the Treasury. (1958 Almanac p. 288)

House Hearings

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee May 10-June 8 held hearings on HR 11140 and subsequently met June 17 and 21 to consider the bill but took no action. Highlights of testimony:

May 10 -- Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield, supporting HR 11140, said businesses, particularly the publishing industry and direct-mail advertisers, would pay most of the cost of the increase, because they sent out the most mail. The average family, he said, would pay an increase of one-half cent a day.

May 24 -- George J. Hecht, president of the Parents' Institute Inc., said the proposed one-half cent surcharge on second-class material would be discriminatory against smaller magazines with small advertising content.

Arthur Z. Gray, president of Street and Smith Publications Inc., representing the Magazine Publishers Assn. Inc., in opposition to new increases said magazines carrying heavy advertising content would be "more than paying their way" after the final stages of postal rate increases enacted in 1958 went into effect in January 1961.

E.F. McDermott of the Inland Daily Press Assn., opposing postal rate increases, said the Post Office Department had "greatly" overstated the amount of deficit attributable to second-class mail through failing to list properly its public service costs in accord with the Postal Policy Act of 1958. McDermott said the Citizens Advisory Council to the Senate Post Office Committee of the 85th Congress estimated Post Office public service costs at $392,400,000, whereas the Post Office calculated its costs attributable to public service at $171,259,000 in 1958, and reduced the public service cost estimates to $49 million for fiscal 1961. McDermott said the Post Office Department in its public service estimates took no account of the operation of the "star route" system and third and fourth-class post offices, although losses from such operations were designated as public service costs under the 1958 Act.

May 26 -- Bernard E. Esters of the National Editorial Assn. said the proposed rate increase would raise small town newspaper costs an average of $1,953.54 annually. He disputed what he described as an "irresponsible" statement in a postal rate study, prepared by the management consulting firm McKinsey & Company for the Post Office Department, that the newspaper publishing industry could "apparently adjust to postal rate increases with no serious difficulty".

June 1 -- Committee Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.) told representatives of various religious groups, who had come to testify, that the Post Office had withdrawn its request for raising second-class "within county" rates for newspapers, and for nonprofit organizations including religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, veterans' and fraternal groups.

June 2 -- David W. Brumbaugh of Time Inc., said the Department's contention that large magazines with high advertising content were a big cause of second-class postal deficits was false. He said heavier items were "penalized to an extreme extent". Brumbaugh said no mail user or group of users should be required to provide the revenues to subsidize other mail users.

June 7 -- Louis J. Perrottet of National Business Publications said that postal rate legislation was handled too quickly for thorough study. He said the Department should hold "pre-hearings" with those affected by rate proposals, and Congress should establish a rate board to consider mail users' views before Congressional hearings.

June 8 -- Summerfield said that magazine publishers' testimony "simply confirms my feeling that we are dealing with self-serving groups whose hunger for special privilege is insatiable".

Others testifying for or against the increases during the hearings were: FOR -- Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., National Assn. of Postmasters. AGAINST -- National Council on Business Mail, Associated Third Class Mail Users, American Library Assn., National Audio-Visual Assn., National Assn. of Direct Selling Companies, Freight Forwarders Institute (opposed to first-class and air increases), National Assn. of Advertising Publishers, Curtis Publishing Co., American Legion, Disabled American Veterans, Agricultural Publishers Assn.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- March 14 -- The National Federation of Independent Business said 72 percent of its members in a recent poll opposed increases.

May 31 -- Summerfield at a news conference criticized a full-page advertisement opposing postal rate increases which was sponsored by the Business Mail Foundation and appeared May 25. Summerfield said the implication some mail advertisers would be put out of business by postal rate increases was "bunk". He said the Department was losing about $200 million annually on third-class mail and that a group of the Business Mail Foundation's members wanted "to hang onto their hidden subsidy".

WATER POLLUTION GRANTS

HR 3610 -- Reported by House Public Works Committee (H Rept 294) April 23, 1959.

- Passed by a 255-143 roll-call vote of the House June 9. (1959 Almanac p. 364)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Public Works Committee (S Rept 835) Aug. 28.
- Passed, with amendments, by a 61-27 roll-call vote of the Senate Sept. 9. (1959 Almanac p. 444)
- Conference report (H Rept 1243) agreed to by the House Feb. 9, 1960 and the Senate Feb. 15, 1960, by voice votes.
- Vetoed Feb. 23.
- Attempt to override veto failed by a 249-157 roll-call vote of the House Feb. 25 (271 "yeas" were required to override the veto). (See p. 426)

House failure to override President Eisenhower's veto of the water pollution grants bill (HR 3610) represented a partial victory for the President in his long struggle with the Democratic Congress over the extent of federal participation in sewage treatment programs.

The conflict began in 1956, when Congress, against the President's wishes, wrote into an omnibus water-pollution control bill a provision authorizing up to $50 million a year for 10 years (fiscal 1957-66) in federal matching grants to states and localities for construction of community sewage-treatment plants.

The President signed the bill, but in his January 1958 and 1959 Budget Messages asked Congress to abolish the sewage-treatment grants program. Mr. Eisenhower said the states should assume full responsibility. Instead, Congress passed HR 3610, increasing the federal grants to $90 million a year beginning with fiscal 1961 and extending the authorization for grants through fiscal 1970. The President vetoed the bill and was sustained by the House. This left in effect through fiscal 1966 the existing $50 million authorization.

Although he succeeded in preventing an increase, the President failed to get Congress to rescind the authorization or lower appropriations made under it. The following chart shows Presidential requests and actual appropriations for the program since it started.

Fiscal year	Request	Appropriation
1957	$50,000,000	$50,000,000
1958	50,000,000	45,000,000
1959	45,000,000	45,657,000
1960	20,000,000	46,816,000
1961	20,000,000	45,000,000

In a May 18 letter to House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming said the local-to-federal dollar participation ratio for the first four years of grants was 4.8 to 1.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the President, HR 3610 amended the 1948 Water Pollution Control Act. The bill:

Authorized federal grants of $90 million a year for 10 years (fiscal 1961-70) to help communities build sewage treatment plants.

Limited the federal contribution to the cost of a plant to 30 percent or $450,000, whichever was less (replacing the existing limit of 30 percent or $250,000).

Specified that no grant of more than $250,000 could be made for a project in any state until all other applications for $250,000 or less within the state had been approved.

Authorized several communities to pool their ceiling limitations in order to build a plant jointly.

Authorized the Surgeon General to reallocate a state's unused federal money to other states if the money were not obligated 24 months after the grant was allocated.

Made projects authorized under the Act subject to the Davis-Bacon Act, which requires that the locally prevailing wage be paid to workers on the project.

Background

REFERENCES -- Water Pollution (1948 Almanac p. 152; 1956 Almanac p. 570; 1959 Almanac p. 267)

The first federal water pollution control bill was enacted in the 1890s. The Public Health Service and Oil Pollution Acts of 1912 contained provisions authorizing investigations of water pollution related to disease and controlling harmful oil discharges in coastal water. In 1948, Congress passed the first act providing a comprehensive federal-state-local approach (PL 80-845). This experimental five-year program was extended, in 1953, until 1956 (PL 82-579).

President Eisenhower in 1955 recommended permanent, comprehensive federal water pollution control legislation. In 1956, Congress revised the 1948 law and made some parts of it permanent.

The 1956 law (PL 84-660) authorized federal matching grants of $50 million a year for 10 years to help communities build sewage control plants. The federal grant for any one project was limited to $250,000 or 30 percent of the cost, whichever was smaller. The grant program replaced a loan program in the 1948 Act for which no money had ever been appropriated.

The 1956 law also authorized $3 million a year for five years, ending June 30, 1961, in matching grants to the states for administration of comprehensive pollution control programs and $100,000 for research fellowships.

Parts of the 1948 law not requiring capital grants were made permanent. These provided for federal participation in pollution control research, planning, technical assistance and public information programs; for federal encouragement of interstate compacts on pollution control; for federal enforcement of interstate anti-pollution regulations; and for the creation of a nine-member Water Pollution Control Advisory Board.

President Eisenhower signed the 1956 law but said the $50-million grants program exceeded his recommendations. In 1958 and 1959, but not in 1960, Mr. Eisenhower asked Congress to end the construction grants program.

1959 Action

In 1959, despite Mr. Eisenhower's request, both chambers voted to increase the grants program. The House bill (HR 3610), passed June 9, increased the authorization to $100 million annually for 10 years and the ceiling on grants to a single project to $500,000 or 30 percent.

The Senate version, passed Sept. 9, authorized $80 million a year for 10 years and a ceiling of $400,000 on federal grants to a single project. Neither version extended the $3 million authorization expiring June 30, 1961 for federal grants for administration. To avoid a pocket veto after Congress adjourned in 1959, Democratic leaders delayed conference action until 1960.

Conference

Meeting early in 1960, House and Senate conferees agreed on $90 million a year from fiscal 1961-70 and a $450,000 limit on each federal grant. During House debate Feb. 9, Rep. John A. Blatnik (D Minn.), author of the bill, said it was supported by the President's Water Pollution Control Advisory Board, every major conservation group and the American Municipal Assn.

The bill was cleared for the President when the House Feb. 9 and the Senate Feb. 15, by voice votes, agreed to the conference report (H Rept 1243).

Veto

President Eisenhower vetoed HR 3610 Feb. 23. His veto message said "states and local governments and industry (should) assume the major responsibility for cleaning up the Nation's rivers and streams." Mr. Eisenhower said the "promise of a large-scale program of long-term federal support" implicit in HR 3610 "would tempt municipalities to delay essential water pollution abatement efforts while they waited for federal funds."

The President said he favored the following federal anti-pollution efforts:

- A December 1960 national conference, which he was requesting HEW Secretary Flemming to arrange, to "help local taxpayers and business concerns to realize the obligation they have to help prevent pollution".
- Better enforcement of interstate anti-pollution regulations through strengthened federal powers.
- Continuation of "modest" federal assistance (the $3 million annual grants program) for administration of state and interstate pollution control programs.
- Increased federal spending on pollution research and technical assistance.

(An Administration bill (S 3574) based on the veto message was introduced May 19 by Sen. Francis Case (R S.D.) but there was no action on it in either chamber.)

Veto Sustained

The House Feb. 25, by a 249-157 roll-call vote, sustained the President's veto of HR 3610. The vote was 22 short of the two-thirds required to override a veto. (For voting, see chart p. 426)

Backers of HR 3610 had based their hope to override on the fact that the vote in favor of initial Senate passage on Sept. 9, 1959 was 61-27, better than a 2 to 1 ratio, and that the 255-143 roll call by which the House had originally passed the bill fell only 11 votes short of two-thirds.

Voting to override the veto were 234 Democrats and 15 Republicans. Upholding the President were 27 Democrats and 130 Republicans. Analysis of the two votes showed these switches in Representatives' stands:

- 20 who favored passage of the bill in 1959 voted (or were paired) in 1960 to uphold the veto: Democrats Haley (Fla.), Herlong (Fla.), Rogers (Fla.), McSween (La.), Williams (Miss.); Republicans Cahill (N.J.), Dwyer (N.J.), Frelinghuysen (N.J.), Dooley (N.Y.), Pirnie (N.Y.), Wainwright (N.Y.), Baumhart (Ohio), Corbett (Pa.), Baker (Tenn.), Broyhill (Va.), Horan (Wash.), May (Wash.), Tollefson (Wash.), Moore (W.Va.), Withrow (Wis.).
- 8 who opposed passage of the bill in 1959 voted (or were paired) in 1960 to override the veto: Democrats Marshall (Minn.), Dulski (N.Y.), Jarman (Okla.), Casey (Texas), Poage (Texas), Thornberry (Texas), Hardy (Va.); Republican Martin (Mass.).

Pollution Grant Plans Compared

The following table was inserted in the Congressional Record by Rep. John A. Blatnik (D Minn.). It shows how much money the 50 states, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia and the Virgin Islands would have been allocated in federal grants for sewage treatment plants in fiscal 1961 under three different plans.

SAN LUIS PROJECT

S 44 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 154) April 8, 1959.

● Passed by Senate, amended, by voice vote May 12, 1959. (For roll call on recommittal, see 1959 Almanac p. 410)

HR 7155 -- Reported, amended, by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 399) May 27, 1959.

S 44 -- Passed by the House, amended, by voice vote May 18, 1960. (For roll call on amendment, see p. 446)

● Senate agreed to House amendments by voice vote May 19.

PL 86-488 -- Signed by the President June 3.

Congress in 1960 authorized the Interior Department to develop the 480,000-acre San Luis unit of the federal Central Valley Reclamation Project in California by building a dam and reservoir and drainage and distribution facilities. Partnership with the state was envisioned in the law.

For a dam and reservoir with a capacity of 1 million acre-feet, expansible later to 2.1 million, Congress authorized $290,430,000 plus any additional amounts necessary if costs rose.

For drainage and distribution facilities within the 480,000-acre federal service area, Congress authorized up to $192,650,000. The Department would build these facilities only if local interests did not, and would be wholly repaid over 40 years by local users. About 76 percent of the costs of the dam and reservoir similarly would be repaid over 50 years.

Because the state of California needed water storage facilities for its own Feather River Project, the bill permitted the state to help build the San Luis dam and reservoir and, if it did, to take part of the water. In that case, the dam and reservoir would be built to an immediate capacity of 2.1 million acre-feet and would cost $500 million instead of $290,430,000. California would pay $266 million of the $500 million and could take half the water for state use outside the federal service area only. Other aspects of the San Luis project, drainage and distribution facilities, for example, would remain wholly federal.

The bill gave the Interior Department and the state until Jan. 1, 1962 to submit an agreement for joint construction to the House and Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committees. If neither Committee disapproved the agreement or insisted on changes within 90 days, work could start. If California and the Department failed to reach agreement by Jan. 1, 1962, the Department could proceed alone to build the smaller, 1 million acre-foot dam, after waiting 90 days.

Other provisions controlled the pumping of chloride water into the system and barred production of surplus price-supported crops on newly irrigated land served by the system.

160-ACRE CONTROVERSY

Debate in both chambers centered on whether, if California participated, its share of the water would be subject to federal reclamation laws -- in particular one limiting to 160 acres the land an individual could irrigate with water from a federal project.

The U.S. Supreme Court June 23, 1958 had ruled, 8-0, that the 160-acre limitation was both constitutional and binding for wholly federal projects, despite any state laws that sought to outlaw the limitation, but the legal status of joint federal-state projects had never been finally determined.

In both chambers, the Interior and Insular Affairs Committees took the position that under existing law, federal reclamation laws would not apply to California's share of the San Luis water. To avoid litigation on this issue, however, and to make the legal situation clear to potential buyers of $1,750,000,000 in bonds California was preparing to float to finance its Feather River Project, both Committees approved provisions in the San Luis bill specifically exempting California's share of the San Luis water from federal reclamation laws. (Californians Nov. 8 approved the Feather River project in a referendum.)

Many Members, however, did not agree with the Committees' interpretation of existing law. They said the courts might find that federal reclamation laws did apply, in whole or in part, to California's share of the water; and these possible federal claims should not be foreclosed in advance by a provision relinquishing them.

In both chambers, the exemption provision was deleted on the floor, leaving the jurisdictional question to the courts.

Background

In the 85th Congress, the Senate but not the House passed a San Luis authorization bill. After the 86th Congress began, the Senate May 12, 1959 again passed a San Luis bill (S 44). (1959 Almanac p. 266)

The House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee on May 27, 1959 reported its own San Luis bill (HR 7155 -- H Rept 399), including the controversial exemption provision for California's share of the water. Six Democrats opposed the exemption.

1960 Action

The House May 18, 1960 passed S 44 by voice vote after substituting for the Senate version the provisions of HR 7155 as amended on the floor. The exemption provision was deleted on a 214-179 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 446)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

May 18 -- Robert W. Hemphill (D S.C.) -- Prohibit production of surplus price-supported crops on newly irrigated lands served by the project. Voice vote.

John F. Baldwin Jr. (R Calif.) -- Control the pumping of chloride waters into the project. Voice.

Al Ullman (D Ore.) -- Delete exemption for California's share of the water from federal reclamation laws. Standing vote, 81-84; teller, 139-122; roll call, 214-179.

Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.) -- Limit federal outlays for distribution and drainage to $192,650,000. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

May 18 -- Frank T. Bow (R Ohio) -- Eliminate authority for Interior Department to spend more than $290,430,000 for construction if cost estimates rose. Voice.

The Senate May 19 agreed by voice vote to the House amendments to S 44. The President, in signing the bill June 3, said joint federal-state construction would be a "unique achievement" consistent with the Administration's "philosophy of partnership and teamwork".

LEAD-ZINC VETO

HR 8860 -- Reported by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 1597) May 10, 1960.
- Passed by the House June 27 by a 197-192 roll-call vote. (See p. 458)
- Reported by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 1813) June 30.
- Passed by the Senate Aug. 19 by a 59-28 roll-call vote. (See p. 515)
- Pocket vetoed Sept. 2.

A Presidential veto killed hopes of small domestic lead and zinc producers for federal subsidies in 1960. Controversy focused not on whether the industry was depressed -- all agreed it was -- but on the remedial measures necessary.

The bill (HR 8860) passed by Congress was designed to stabilize the market for small lead and zinc producers by authorizing federal subsidies. It would have complemented a system of import quotas on lead and zinc put into effect in 1958, and would have cost $4,840,000 a year.

Producers of the metals -- located largely in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Arizona, Tennessee, Missouri and Kentucky -- argued that the quota system had not alleviated the depressed state of the industry and therefore federal subsidies were necessary.

The Administration and other opponents of the bill contended that the quota system was working favorably for the industry and that no other relief measures should be implemented at present.

PROVISIONS -- As pocket vetoed by the President, HR 8860:

Set stabilization prices for lead at 17 cents a pound and for zinc at 14½ cents a pound.

Authorized the Secretary of Interior to pay small lead and zinc producers the difference between the market price and the stabilization price. A small producer was defined as one who did not produce more than 2,000 tons of lead or zinc a year and who had been in production during the preceding seven years.

Authorized payments of up to $4,840,000 annually.

Terminated the program June 30, 1965.

Background

From 1956, a peak year in recent history for the industry for both production and prices, through 1959, zinc production fell from 542,300 tons to 340,000 tons and lead production fell from 352,800 tons to 211,300 tons. Prices for zinc during the same period fell from 13.7 cents per pound to 11.4 cents per pound, and lead prices dropped from 16 cents per pound to 12.1 cents per pound.

In 1957 the House passed but the Senate failed to act on a bill imposing a protective tariff on imports of lead and zinc. (1957 Almanac p. 654)

In 1958 the Senate passed but the House rejected an omnibus minerals price-support bill backed by the Administration. After its defeat, President Eisenhower imposed import quotas on lead and zinc, effective Oct. 1, 1958, acting under the escape clause of the 1951 Trade Agreements Act, which permitted him to raise duties and establish import quotas if the price of metals fell below a specified level. (1951 Almanac p. 214)

Upon recommendation of the Tariff Commission, the President established a quota on lead of 33,080 and 55,600 tons quarterly for ore and metal, and on zinc of 94,960 and 35,280 tons. The quotas did not apply to certain types of semi-processed and manufactured lead and zinc. The quotas, in effect, limited lead and zinc imports to 80 percent of the yearly average for the period 1953-57.

The President also raised the lead tariff to 1½ cents to 3 cents a pound and the zinc tariff to ½ cent to 3/4 cent a pound depending upon the type of metal. (These duties did not apply to the semi-processed and manufactured imports.) (1958 Almanac p. 324)

In 1959 Congress adopted a concurrent resolution (H Con Res 177) calling on the President to review the condition of U.S. mining and propose ways to improve it. (1959 Almanac p. 175) The Senate Aug. 21, 1959 adopted a resolution (S Res 162) directing the Tariff Commission to investigate the lead-zinc industry and report to Congress on whether duties or quotas should be increased.

The Commission filed a report March 31, 1960, saying the lead-zinc industry was in a depressed condition, but the majority declined to recommend solutions to the problem, maintaining it was not the Commission's function to advise Congress. Commissioners Walter R. Schreiber and Glenn W. Sutton, however, filed a minority report recommending import duties of 3 cents a pound on lead and 2½ cents a pound on zinc and the abolition of import quotas, which they said had been "more disturbing than helpful".

House

COMMITTEE -- Interior and Insular Affairs.

ACTION -- May 10 reported HR 8860 (H Rept 1597), following hearings March 28, March 29 and April 19 by the Mines and Mining Subcommittee. The Interior Department testified against the bill.

The report said HR 8860, by stabilizing small companies' lead and zinc production, would help conserve domestic reserves and indirectly provide jobs for unemployed miners, thus aiding their families and depressed mining communities. Various witnesses who testified before the Mines and Mining Subcommittee, the report said, expressed "frustration over delays" in obtaining relief action. It said domestic lead production in 1959 reached its lowest point in 60 years and zinc production also was down. Current market prices were 13 cents per pound for lead and 12 cents for zinc, the report said.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- June 16 -- The House Rules Committee granted an open rule with two hours of debate to HR 8860, reversing a June 2 refusal, by a 6-6 vote, to grant a rule.

Floor Action

The House June 27 passed HR 8860 by a 197-192 roll-call vote. Most Democrats voted for, most Republicans against the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 458)

Debate, held June 25, focused on alternative proposals for providing relief to the industry. Virtually all Members who spoke agreed that the domestic lead and zinc industry had been in a depressed state for several years, but opponents of HR 8860 argued that U.S. tariff policies and commitments under reciprocal trade agreements had caused the decline and that remedies should be applied in those areas.

Senate

The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee June 30 reported (S Rept 1813) HR 8860 without amendments.

The Senate passed the bill Aug. 19, with no changes from the House version, by a 59-28 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 515)

Opponents argued that by authorizing lead and zinc subsidy payments, Congress would set a precedent and in the future would be "harassed" by requests for subsidy programs for other failing industries, which, they said, it was not the Government's role to subsidize.

In defense of the bill, Senators said other forms of relief -- a higher quota system or a tariff program -- would be opposed by the State Department because of the potential effects on U.S. relations with other lead-zinc producing countries, and that failures in the lead and zinc industries would impair defense.

Veto Message

President Eisenhower Sept. 2 pocket vetoed HR 8860, saying he did so because:

- Appropriations authorized by the bill were inadequate to pay for the proposed subsidies.
- The problems of the industry would be intensified because the subsidies would induce the opening of small mines that had closed, thus increasing the supply of the metals, causing the prices to drop further, and causing unemployment in large, unsubsidized mines.
- Subsidies would "complicate" and "frustrate" existing programs -- import controls -- expected to bring the production and demand of lead and zinc into balance.
- Enactment would encourage other mineral producers to demand similar subsidies, possibly creating a system of subsidies which would make a "substantial portion of domestic mining totally dependent on federal appropriations."

In a Sept. 3 comment on the President's action, Rep. Ed Edmondson (D Okla.), author of HR 8860, said Mr. Eisenhower had turned his back on "genuine distress in his own country."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Nov. 25 -- President Eisenhower concurred in a Tariff Commission finding that the lead and zinc import quotas should be retained.

OTHER MINING BILLS

HR 10455 -- The President signed this bill, amending the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920, on Sept. 2 (PL 86-705). The bill increased the length of noncompetitive mineral leases to 10 years, raised minimum rental per acre to 50 cents, removed the distinction between option and lease, brought tar and oil sands under the Act and limited leases to any one person in any one state to 7,680 acres.

HR 10548 -- The President signed this bill, establishing a long-range (25-year) helium development program, on Sept. 13 (PL 86-777).

S 1957 -- This measure, empowering the Interior Department to promote development of the domestic tin industry through a 10-year purchase program, was passed by the Senate June 10 but there was no House action.

S 1268 -- Passed by the Senate April 11, this bill required the Interior Department to notify a state of receipt of an application for a mineral lease on reserved lands in that state, then wait 30 days before deciding whether to grant the lease, to give the state a chance to present its views. There was no House action.

HR 5547 -- In reporting (S Rept 1767) a House-passed bill (HR 5547), the Senate Finance Committee June 29 attached to the measure, which dealt with taxes in the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, provisions boosting lead and zinc import duties by amounts between 1.5 cents and 3 cents a pound. There was no subsequent action.

S 1537 -- The House in 1960 took no action on a bill (S 1537) passed by the Senate in 1959 charging the Secretary of the Interior with carrying out a sound minerals policy. (1959 Almanac p. 175)

COAL RESEARCH

HR 3375 -- Reported by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 1241) Feb. 4, 1960.
- Passed by the House Feb. 15 by voice vote.
- Reported by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 1494) May 31.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate June 27 by voice vote.
- House agreed to Senate amendments June 29 by voice vote.

PL 86-599 -- Signed into law July 7.

A program of research to develop new and more effective uses for coal was inaugurated in 1960 after Congress met objections which had resulted in a Presidential veto a year earlier. The 1959 bill established an independent commission to carry out the research whereas the 1960 bill permitted it to be carried out by the Interior Department. (1959 Almanac p. 228)

The bill (HR 3375) was approved by both chambers with very little controversy. The House passed HR 3375 by voice vote Feb. 15 and the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee in reporting the measure (S Rept 1494) May 31 made only two major changes. One amendment required the Secretary of Interior to set up an Office of Coal Research within the Interior Department to conduct the research -- the House version had not required the establishment of a formal office -- and the second defined the duties and functions of the technical advisory committees which the Secretary was authorized to appoint. These amendments and several technical ones were adopted by the Senate when it passed the bill by voice vote June 27. The House agreed to the Senate amendments June 29 and President Eisenhower signed the bill into law (PL 86-599) July 7.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 3375:

Directed the Secretary of Interior, through research, to develop new and more efficient methods of mining, preparing and utilizing coal; contract for and promote research by state and local agencies and private groups; establish technical advisory committees; and help coordinate all coal research programs.

Required that all patents, information and developments resulting from the research be made available to the public, except where inconsistent with national defense.

Authorized an appropriation of $2 million for fiscal 1961 and such sums as necessary in later years.

Required an annual report to the President and Congress on the status of the program.

Established, within the Interior Department, an office of Coal Research to carry out the research program and supplement coal research work of the Bureau of Mines.

COAL MINE SAFETY

S 743 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 995) Sept. 10, 1959.
- Passed by the Senate April 27, 1960, by an 80-4 roll-call vote. (See p. 489)
- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 2186) Aug. 29.

House action on a Senate-passed bill (S 743) to extend federal coal-mine safety requirements to small mines was blocked the day before the 86th Congress adjourned when Rep. Gordon H. Scherer (R Ohio) objected to unanimous-consent passage.

The Federal Coal Mine Safety Act of 1952 authorized federal inspectors to close down mines in imminent danger of explosion or other disaster, and, under Section 209 of the 1952 Act, to shut down mines lacking certain specified safety features. Mines employing fewer than 15 persons underground, however, were exempted. S 743 would have removed the exemption.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare.

ACTION -- Sept. 10, 1959 reported S 743 (S Rept 995) with amendments. As introduced by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), S 743 would have flatly removed the inspection exemption for small mines. The Committee amended the bill to give the Director of the Bureau of Mines discretion to waive some Section 209 regulations for small mines. The Labor Subcommittee had approved S 743 Aug. 18 by a 4-3 vote, with Democrats for and Republicans against, following hearings July 21, 22 and 24, 1959. In the 85th Congress, the full Committee July 25, 1958 reported a bill (S 3290 -- S Rept 1963) almost identical to S 743 but there was no subsequent House or Senate action.

Floor Action

The Senate April 27, 1960, by an 80-4 roll-call vote, passed S 743, as reported by the Committee, with one change, made by floor amendment (see below). (For voting, see chart p. 489)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 743:

Brought all mines under the Federal Coal Mine Safety Act.

Ordered the Director of the Bureau of Mines, after holding hearings, to exempt mines employing less than 15 persons from any of the regulations in Section 209 of the Act which he found did not "substantially contribute" to the safety of miners.

Required the concurrence of a state inspector that unsafe conditions existed before a federal inspector could shut down a mine employing fewer than eight persons.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) for the four Ky. and Va. Senators -- Make it mandatory rather than permissive for the Director of Mines to exempt small mines from regulations not directly affecting safety. Voice vote.

DEBATE -- April 21 -- Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- The small mines produced only 12 percent of U.S. coal production in 1959, "yet they were involved in 31 percent of all underground coal-mine deaths in the U.S."

House

COMMITTEE -- Education and Labor.

ACTION -- Aug. 29 reported S 743 (H Rept 2186) without amendments. The Committee's Safety and Compensation Subcommittee held four days of hearings on bills similar to S 743 in August 1959, and two days on S 743 in June 1960. At the hearings, the United Mine Workers and Bureau of Mines supported the legislation and several small-mine operators opposed it.

Floor Action

S 743 was brought to the House floor Aug. 31 by Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.), who sought unanimous consent for its passage. This request was blocked by Scherer, killing the bill. Scherer said the bill's opponents "have a right to be heard...instead of having it railroaded through Congress in a few seconds."

Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (R N.J.) said the bill was considered only briefly by the House Committee, which in 1960 heard only one witness, the director of the Bureau of Mines. "No witness representing small coal mine operators was given the opportunity to discuss the bill" at the subcommittee hearings, he said.

NASA FUNDS AUTHORIZATION

HR 10809 -- Reported by House Science and Astronautics Committee (H Rept 1333) March 3, 1960.
- Passed by the House March 9 by a 399-10 roll-call vote. (See p. 428)
- Reported by Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee (S Rept 1300) April 29.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate May 3 by a 78-0 roll-call vote. (See p. 493)
- Conference report (H Rept 1629) agreed to by voice votes of the House May 23 and the Senate May 24.

PL 87-481 -- Signed into law June 1.

Congress for fiscal 1961 authorized a $970 million appropriation for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The amount actually appropriated later for NASA for fiscal 1961 was $915 million, exactly what the Administration had requested. (For appropriation, see Independent Offices story p. 400)

The House version of the authorization bill (HR 10809), passed March 9 by a 399-10 roll-call vote, provided $920 million. The Senate version, passed May 3 by a 78-0 roll-call vote, authorized $970 million. The Senate figure included an extra $50 million for research and development "to exploit technological or scientific breakthroughs". (For voting, see charts p. 428, 493)

The conference version, agreed to May 23 by the House and May 24 by the Senate by voice votes, authorized the full $970 million and retained a House provision, which the Senate had deleted, increasing the number of NASA "super-grade" positions (paying $14,000 to $21,000) from 260 to 290. The final version of HR 10809 (PL 86-481) authorized $170,760,000 for salaries and expenses, $671,453,000 for research and development and $127,787,000 for construction and equipment.

COLORADO RIVER PROJECTS

S 1892 -- Reported Sept. 2, 1959 by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 872).
- Passed Sept. 9, 1959 by voice vote of Senate.
- Reported, amended, May 24, 1960 by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 1644).
- Passed House, amended, June 1 by voice vote. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 452)
- Senate agreed to House amendments by voice vote June 2.

PL 86-529-- Signed into law June 27.

Congress in 1960 approved legislation to revise the method of computing federal interest charges on money spent for certain parts of the Colorado River Storage Project. The computation provision was attached to a measure (S 1892) authorizing the Norman, Okla., Federal Reclamation Project.

The Colorado interest-rate provision applied only to projects started after June 1, 1960. It provided that interest-rates on federal money loaned for such projects be tied to the average rate on all long-term Government bonds outstanding at the time construction began. Previous interest rates for construction units in the Colorado project varied according to the rates the Government itself had to pay to borrow money at the time it was advancing it for a Colorado project. The amendment, by pegging Colorado charges not to the money market at a given moment, but over a period of years, tended to flatten out extremes in charges on Colorado projects.

Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) said the effect of the Colorado interest-rate provision, as enacted, on projects started in the near future would be to limit the interest rate to 2.69 percent, compared with 4-1/8 percent under the old formula. The Budget Bureau and Treasury Department opposed the amendment.

PROVISIONS: As enacted into law, S 1892:

Set interest rates for any given project started in the Colorado River Storage Project after June 1, 1960 at the average interest rate on all long-term Government bonds outstanding at the time construction began.

Authorized Interior Department construction of the Norman, Okla., Federal Reclamation Project; permitted federal expenditures of $19,042,000 if the Interior Department built the whole project, or $12,920,000 if the Central Oklahoma Master Conservancy District agreed to build aqueducts in the project.

Background

The Senate passed the bill (S 1892 -- S Rept 872) Sept. 9, 1959, without debate and by voice vote, with a Colorado interest provision included.

The Colorado interest-rate amendment involved a 1956 law (PL 84-485) authorizing the Interior Department, at Treasury expense, to build various multipurpose water projects in the Upper Colorado River Basin. (1956 Almanac p. 408) These were to be managed by the Bureau of Reclamation. The costs of constructing power facilities or facilities providing water to municipal and industrial users were required to be repaid to the Treasury with interest. The money for repayment would come from the sale by the Reclamation Bureau of power and water. The cost of constructing irrigation projects had to be repaid also, but with no interest; and portions built for flood control were non-reimbursable.

The 1956 law pegged the interest rate for each project in the over-all Colorado system to the average rate of interest paid by the Government on securities of 15 years' maturity or more it was issuing at the time it advanced money for the project. On a project started at a time when the Government was paying high interest rates, the Government fixed a correspondingly high rate of interest on money it was advancing for the Colorado project, and this rate would obtain until repayment was completed.

House

COMMITTEE -- Interior and Insular Affairs.

ACTION -- May 24, 1960 reported S 1892 (H Rept 1644) with an amendment similar to one in the Senate bill on Colorado interest-rate computations. The Committee held that the prevailing interest formula would "penalize" projects not yet underway "to the extent that (their) feasibility" would become "questionable".

Floor Action

The House June 1 passed the amended bill by voice vote after first adopting the committee amendment by an 86-44 standing vote and then by a 228-124 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 452) The majority of House Democrats voted for, the majority of House Republicans against,the amendment.

There was considerable dispute on the House floor as to the immediate effect of the amendment, though all agreed that with money relatively costly in the existing market, the amendment would reduce the interest costs on any Colorado project started in the near future. Rep. Craig Hosmer (R Calif.), citing a Feb. 15, 1960 Treasury Department letter, said the amendment would reduce the average interest rate on Upper Colorado River projects from 4-1/8 percent to 2-3/4 percent, and was worded to apply to all Colorado projects, including those already started. He said the loss of interest to the Treasury could ultimately range from $200 million to $2 billion, and quoted a Budget Bureau letter calling the amendment a "serious backward step".

Supporters of the amendment, however, said its language was meant to restrict its application to projects started after June 1, 1960, which, they said, meant that the two major Upper Colorado projects, Glen Canyon Dam, Ariz., and Flaming Gorge, Utah, would not be involved, since they had already been started. The only projects affected would be Curecanti, Colo. ($75 million of the $82,450,000 construction costs would be subject to interest); Central Utah ($93 million of the $220 million construction costs subject to interest); and San Juan-Chama, N.M. ($29 million of the $86 million construction cost subject to interest).

FINAL ACTION -- The Senate June 2 agreed to the House changes in S 1892 by voice vote, without debate.

COLORADO RIVER DISPUTE

A special master appointed in 1955 by the Supreme Court May 8 made public his tentative recommendations to the Court that it rule in favor of Arizona in the state's eight-year-old lawsuit against California for clear title to Colorado River waters. The recommendations, made by former Federal Judge Simon H. Rifkind, followed a 26-month trial. Both states contended their future population and economic growth depended on the Colorado's waters. Arizona had lost three Supreme Court suits between 1930-35 in efforts to establish its claims. The current suit was filed in 1952. A large irrigation project in Central Arizona depended upon the outcome of the case.

Under the recommendations Arizona would receive 3,800,000 acre-feet of water annually. California's request for 5,362,000 acre-feet from the mainstream would be cut to 4,400,000 unless there was enough surplus for the larger amount, and then both states would get half. Nevada, which intervened in the case to ask for 500,000 acre-feet, would get 300,000.

MARGARINE FOR THE NAVY

S 2168 -- Reported Sept. 3, 1959 by Senate Armed Services Committee (S Rept 894).

- Recommitted by voice vote of the Senate May 26, 1960. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 496)

A hardy perennial, the amendment of the Navy Ration Act to permit the Navy to serve oleomargarine as a table spread, was served up to the Senate in 1960 but declared inedible. After amending the bill (S 2168) in such a way that it was nullified, the Senate May 26 by voice vote recommitted the remains, killing it for the duration of the 86th Congress.

Senate

The Navy Ration Act of 1902 specified that sailors must be served "1.6 ounces of butter" daily and made no mention of margarine. No similar restrictions remain for the Army of Air Force. Margarine interests have been trying to amend the Ration Act since 1948 but dairy interests have successfully resisted change. The last previous attempt at amendment was in 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 238)

S 2168 was reported by the Senate Armed Services Committee (S Rept 894) Sept. 3, 1959. It would have permitted the Navy to serve oleo under limited conditions: (1) when there was a surplus of soybean or cottonseed oil; (2) when surplus butter stocks were not available through the Commodity Credit Corp.; (3) in special situations where use of butter would be impractical.

Floor Action

On a 48-32 roll-call vote, the Senate May 26 agreed to an amendment by Sens. William Proxmire (D Wis.) and Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) that would have prevented the Navy from using oleo in any year in which the Government purchased milk or dairy products as part of its price-support operations. This nullified the bill's purpose, and the Senate then recommitted S 2168 by voice vote. (For voting, see chart p. 496)

DEBATE -- May 25 -- Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- The Navy should "utilize (surplus) butter which has already been bought and paid for by taxpayers".

Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) -- Congress should "place the Navy on an equal footing with the other military departments" by permitting the discretionary use of margarine.

J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), sponsor of the bill -- "It puts both butterfat and vegetable oils on the same level of treatment, insofar as those commodities may be in surplus."

Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) -- The bill would benefit "oleomargarine manufacturing companies. I doubt that even the remotest benefit from it would trickle back to the American farmer."

RELOCATION ALLOWANCES

HR 2467 -- Reported, amended, May 27 by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 1668).

- Passed House, amended, July 2 by roll-call vote of 183-167. (See p. 464)

The House July 2, by a 183-167 roll-call vote, passed and sent to the Senate a bill (HR 2467) to authorize the Federal Aviation Agency to pay a "relocation allowance" to owners or tenants of land it acquired. The allowance was to cover expenses and other losses incurred by persons who were forced to leave their property. Prior to passage, the House agreed, by a 190-164 roll-call vote, to the Committee substitute for the bill as introduced. Earlier it was rejected by a 66-81 standing vote, then agreed to by an 89-87 standing vote. (For roll-call votes, see chart p. 464) No action was taken on the bill in the Senate.

The close votes followed charges by opponents of the bill that it was special legislation meant to aid residents of Chantilly, Va., who were dislodged to make way for the Dulles International Airport, and that it discriminated against persons who had been forced to move by urban renewal and highway construction programs and got no such payments.

BACKGROUND -- The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee May 27 reported HR 2467 (H Rept 1668) with an amendment in the form of a substitute for the bill as introduced, which had authorized payments specifically for Chantilly residents. The report said the Federal Aviation Agency objected to the original bill as special legislation but favored receiving the same general authority for relocation allowances already vested in the Interior Department and Departments of the Army, Navy and Air Force. The report said the General Services Administration estimated Chantilly payments at between $200,000 and $250,000.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 2467:

Authorized the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency to reimburse owners and tenants of acquired land for expenses, losses and damages incurred as a direct result of moving them, with the total payment not to exceed 25 percent of the fair value of the land.

Provided for payments only when applications, including an itemized statement of the expenses and losses, had been submitted to the Administrator within one year after land acquisition or within one year from the date property was vacated (whichever date was later).

Made the provisions retroactive to July 1, 1958.

DEBATE -- July 2 -- Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.) -- The Government had paid an average of $560 an acre for the Chantilly land, which was an inflated value, and to vote the residents there any more was "an absolute absurdity."

Howard W. Smith (D Va.) -- When the Government took over the Chantilly property "they were in such a hurry about it they just threw those people off," and the bill was a matter of "just common, ordinary justice."

WATER PROJECTS

HR 7634 -- Reported by House Public Works Committee (H Rept 541) June 12, 1959.
- Passed by House by voice vote July 16, 1959.
- Reported by Senate Public Works Committee (S Rept 1524) June 6, 1960.
- Passed by Senate, amended, by a 70-5 roll-call vote June 17. (See p. 504)
- Conference report (H Rept 2064) agreed to by voice votes of the House and Senate July 1.

PL 86-645 -- Signed into law July 14.

President Eisenhower July 14 signed the omnibus rivers, harbors and flood control bill (HR 7634 -- PL 86-645), authorizing $1,445,694,300 for 134 navigation, flood control and river basin development projects. The bill also authorized the Corps of Engineers to conduct 19 navigational and 11 flood control surveys.

Of the 134 authorizations (actual funds are appropriated separately in public works appropriations bills), 68 were for navigation projects, nine for beach erosion control projects, 47 for flood control projects and 10 for increases in existing river basin development programs.

During Senate debate June 17, Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) hinted the bill might be vetoed.

Dirksen said the Budget Bureau strongly objected to HR 7634 in the form passed by the Senate because the bill contained 10 projects, costing $150 million, that the Bureau opposed; another 10, costing $81 million, it had not yet fully reviewed; and an additional 24, costing $186 million, did not require the kind of federal-local cost-sharing favored by the President. Dirksen said the Administration also objected to two Senate legislative provisions, one on land acquisition and the other permitting up to 10 percent of the cost of federal water projects to be allocated to recreation on a non-reimbursable basis.

In the House-Senate conference that followed, conferees deleted the recreation provision, changed the land-acquisition provision and cut $138 million in authorizations from the Senate version, and President Eisenhower signed the bill.

The omnibus bill was composed of three titles -- the Rivers and Harbors, Flood Control and Land Acquisition Policy Acts of 1960.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, Title I of HR 7634, the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1960, authorized:

Navigation Projects	$ 203,674,300
Barkley Dam, Ky., increase	146,000,000
Beach erosion projects	22,190,800
Title I, Subtotal	$ 371,865,100

Title II, the Flood Control Act of 1960, authorized:

New projects or modifications	$ 277,589,200
Increased basin authorizations	($796,240,000)
Central and Southern Fla.	23,000,000
Mississippi Channel, Miss.	50,000,000
Brazos River, Texas.	21,000,000
White River, Ark.	50,000,000
Arkansas River, Okla.	179,000,000
Missouri River (all states)
Flood Control	207,000,000
Reclamation works	60,000,000
Los Angeles, Calif., county	$ 32,000,000
Upper Mississippi Basin, Iowa	12,000,000
Sacramento River, Calif.	14,240,000
Columbia River, Ore.	148,000,000
Title II, Subtotal	$1,073,829,200
TOTAL, Titles I and II	$1,445,894,300

Title I also authorized the Corps of Engineers, from monies appropriated to it in the future, to spend up to $2 million in any fiscal year on small navigation projects (up to $200,000 each) not specifically authorized by Congress but promising "substantial benefits to navigation". (Similar authority for small flood control projects costing up to $400,000 already existed.)

Title III, the Land Acquisition Policy Act of 1960:

Declared it the policy of the U.S. to pay a "just and reasonable price" for property acquired for public works projects; authorized the Secretary of the Army, when acquiring land for public works purposes, to pay such a price; and required the Corps of Engineers to make certain information available to local residents affected by a project within six months of its authorization.

Water projects authorization bills ranging from $1.1 billion to $1.5 billion each were enacted in 1944, 1946, 1950 and 1954. In 1956 President Eisenhower vetoed a $1.6 billion authorization bill on grounds cost-sharing provisions were inadequate and there had been insufficient review of projects by the Executive. Early in 1958 the same bill, cut to $1.5 billion and otherwise revised, was again passed by Congress and again vetoed, on the same grounds. Later in 1958, Congress passed another water projects bill, authorizing $1.5 billion, which the President signed, saying the most serious defects of the earlier bills had been removed.

House

COMMITTEE -- Public Works.

ACTION -- June 12, 1959 reported HR 7634 (H Rept 541), authorizing $640,931,500 for all projects.

Floor Action

The House July 16, 1959 passed HR 7634 by voice vote, authorizing $657,310,500 for navigation, flood control and related projects. Before passage, the House accepted by voice vote 11 committee amendments adding $16,379,000 in authorizations for projects which the Committee said were too important to be held up for two years, the usual interval between omnibus flood control bills.

Rep. Clifford Davis (D Tenn.), chairman of the Public Works Flood Control Subcommittee, said all the projects had been approved by both the Corps of Engineers and the Budget Bureau.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 7634:

Authorized $232,952,800 for Title I, the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1959.

Authorized $424,357,700 for Title II, the Flood Control Act of 1959.

DEBATE -- July 16 -- William C. Cramer (R Fla.) -- Was happy the bill did not include "the same debatable and controversial aspects" that led to the 1958 Presidential veto.

Russell V. Mack (R Wash.) -- The House bill carried the smallest monetary authorization "in many years", and minority Committee members unanimously recommended passage.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Public Works.

ACTION -- June 6, 1960 reported HR 7634 (S Rept 1524), adding 83 projects and $925.4 million to the House bill, for total authorizations of $1,582,798,352. The Committee deleted from the House version two projects authorized separately after the House passed HR 7634.

Floor Action

The Senate June 17, by a 70-5 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of HR 7634 authorizing $1,583,-768,352. (For voting, see chart p. 504)

Before passage, the Senate adopted by voice vote numerous committee amendments and nine floor amendments, only two of which authorized additional appropriations.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 7634:

Authorized $486,517,100 for Title I, the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1960.

Authorized $1,097,251,252 for Title II, the Flood Control Act of 1960.

Authorized up to 10 percent of the cost of new projects to be allocated, on a non-reimbursable basis, to recreation uses.

Authorized establishment of a joint Executive Branch-Congressional commission to study problems of compensation for property acquired by the Government; and payment through June 30, 1963 of up to 20 percent, but not over $2,500, above fair market value for property acquired for Corps of Engineers projects.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 17 -- Lister Hill (D Ala.) -- Authorize $120,000 to acquire land for a wildlife refuge on the Tombigbee River Jackson project, Ala. Voice vote.

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- Authorize a survey of the feasibility of replenishing the Edwards Underground Reservoir, Texas. Voice.

Frank Carlson (R Kan.) -- Authorize payment for certain improvements rendered inoperative due to construction of Tuttle Creek Dam, Kan. Voice.

J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.) -- Authorize abandonment of a navigation project on the St. Jones River, Del. Voice.

Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) -- Authorize investigation of possible explosive anchorage sites, Hawaii. Voice.

Fong -- Authorize a flood control survey of Kahoma Stream, Maui, Hawaii.

James O. Eastland (D Miss.) -- Authorize $850,000 for the construction of a navigational channel at Pascagoula Harbor, Miss. Voice.

Hall Stoner Lusk (D Ore.) -- Change name of Detroit Dam, Ore., to Douglas McKay Dam. Voice.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Clarify a provision regarding navigation channels in harbors along the Mississippi River. Voice.

Debate -- June 17 -- Francis Case (R S.D.) -- The bill provides the means for people to enjoy a better living as well as jobs. By so doing, it "builds for today and also for the future."

Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) -- The bill is "loaded down with unsupportable projects". It is worse than the 1958 bill vetoed by the President.

Conference

Congress July 1 completed action on HR 7634 when both houses agreed by voice votes to the conference report (H Rept 2064). The compromise version authorized $1,445,694,300 for 134 projects. This was $138,074,052 less than initially voted by the Senate and $788,383,800 more than by the House.

The major deletion from the Senate version was a $114,652,000 authorization for locks on the Illinois Waterway, to which the Budget Bureau had objected. Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) said that the deletion of the Waterway authorization went a "long way toward curing" the Bureau's objections and that the new version had been "accepted in principle by representatives of the Budget Bureau."

In conference, the Senate's provision on recreation was dropped altogether and the land acquisition provision completely revised by deletion of the joint commission plan and the authority for 20 percent overpayments.

VETERANS' LIFE INSURANCE

HR 11045 -- Reported by House Veterans' Affairs Committee (H Rept 1543) April 21, 1960.

- Passed by the House by voice vote May 2.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee May 26 (S Rept 1485).
- Passed Senate, amended, by voice vote June 2. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 498)

Final action on a bill (HR 11045) to revise the terms of National Service Life Insurance (NSLI) for veterans was blocked June 29 in the House. Rep. H. Allen Smith (R Calif.) objected when unanimous consent was requested for consideration of Senate amendments to the bill.

As passed by the House, the bill permitted World War II veterans to "trade in" old NSLI policies for new ones on which they had to pay lower premiums but which granted lower benefits. The Senate added an amendment permitting veterans to renew policies that had lapsed or to take out policies even if they had not done so after separation from the services.

House Veterans' Affairs Committee Chairman Olin E. Teague (D Texas), in seeking the unanimous consent, remarked that the Committee had turned down measures similar to the Senate amendment for four consecutive years, and he himself still opposed it, but in view of a unanimous Senate roll call in favor of the amendment, he had promised Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.), its sponsor, that he would ask for House consideration.

House

COMMITTEE -- Veterans' Affairs, Insurance Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- March 16-17 on HR 11045.

ACTION -- The full Committee April 21 reported HR 11045 (H Rept 1543), to modify existing veterans' life insurance programs to establish a new NSLI plan, under which the amount of the premium would not increase each five years as under existing NSLI term contracts, but at age 65 the value of the policy would be reduced by half. Policy holders could maintain the other half of their policies after 65 by paying the premium rate for the attained age, with no medical examination required. Veterans would be urged to convert their term insurance programs to the modified permanent program, so that they would not be forced, as many World War I veterans had been, into paying very high premiums sometimes in excess of the value of their policies. The bill was approved by the Veterans Administration.

Floor Action

The House passed HR 11045 by voice vote May 2. Before passage, Rep. W.J. Bryan Dorn (D S.C.) explained that the bill was an alternate solution to proposals that the Government pay up term insurance policies of World War II veterans at age 60, at a cost of nearly $12 billion. He said the bill would prevent a "catastrophe occurring 20 to 25 years from now" when World War II veterans would find that their premium rates on term insurance plans had reached "very high levels".

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

ACTION -- May 26 reported HR 11045 with amendments (S Rept 1485). The only major Committee change was to incorporate the provisions of a bill (S 2675) providing a one-year period after July 1, 1960 in which World War II veterans could obtain NSLI policies. The provision was designed for veterans who had allowed their service policies to lapse, or who had not taken out a policy within the specified period after discharge.

The Administration and the commercial insurance industry opposed giving veterans a second chance to obtain NSLI. The VA said enactment of such a proposal would place too great an administrative burden on VA facilities. The insurance companies maintained that the low-cost GI insurance would place commercial insurers at a competitive disadvantage.

Floor Action

The Senate June 2 passed HR 11045 as amended by the Committee by voice vote. The committee amendment was agreed to on a 75-0 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 498) Russell B. Long (D La.), sponsor of the bill, said many veterans could not afford to extend their GI insurance when they were discharged. Others, he said, did not realize the value of insurance at the time, but with added maturity and responsibilities had sought to have their eligibility reinstated. Long said NSLI was available to World War I veterans for 33 years after the end of the war.

Final Action Blocked

Smith's objection to the unanimous consent request for the House to consider the Senate changes ended the bill's chances of passage in 1960. An amendment similar to the Long proposal had been approved by the Senate as part of the Veterans' Pension Act of 1959 (PL 86-211), but had been stricken in conference after the House, by voice vote Aug. 14, 1959, rejected it. (1959 Almanac p. 296)

CIVIL SERVICE ANNUITIES

S 2857 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee (S Rept 1302) May 2.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote May 5. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 494)
- Reported, amended, by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee (H Rept 1916) June 17.
- Passed by the House by voice vote June 25.
- Senate agreed to House amendments by voice vote June 30.

PL 86-622 -- Signed into law July 12.

S 2857 made various changes in rules governing retirement benefits and contributions by federal civil servants and Members of Congress. It did not, however, change the basic rate of contributions to the retirement fund (6½ percent of salary for civil servants, 7½ percent for Members of Congress) or the basic retirement benefits.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, S 2857:

Provided that Members of Congress and federal employees governed by civil service, who were eligible to retire at the maximum retirement benefit but who continued working, would be required to continue paying money into the Civil Service Retirement Fund.

Provided that any money so paid into the fund would first be earmarked to liquidate the payer's debts to the fund for non-contributory service (federal service during which the individual received annuity credit even without paying -- such as during military leave).

Provided that after debts for non-contributory service were liquidated, the employee's payments would have to continue but would be credited toward building up additional benefits (beyond the normal maximum).

Provided for retirement at age 50 with reduced pension benefits of a Member of Congress who had served in nine Congresses or who had 20 years' federal service, of which at least 10 years was in Congress.

Permitted a person who retired on a pension, then was reemployed for five years or more, to combine pension rights earned in each period of employment into one pension, to be received after the second retirement. Under existing law, a reemployed person continued to collect the pension earned in the first period of employment, but his salary was reduced by the amount of the pension and meanwhile he paid into the pension fund to build up a second annuity.

Granted survivorship rights (but only from the date the bill was enacted) to spouses of Members of Congress who died from Feb. 29, 1948-Nov. 4, 1952.

The bill enacted into law was the House bill. The Senate initially passed S 2857 by voice vote May 5, 1960 with only one provision, for a refund on retirement or death (at 3 percent interest) of any amounts paid into the pension fund by a civil servant or Congressman after he became eligible for the maximum retirement benefit.

Before passage, the Senate rejected by a 19-38 roll call an amendment by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) to freeze the retirement annuity at the maximum rate but require employees to continue paying into the fund as long as they received full salary. (For voting, see chart p. 494) The bill was amended into its final version by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

SPORTS REGULATION

S 3483 -- Reported, without recommendation, by Senate Judiciary Committee June 20, 1960 (S Rept 1620).

- Recommitted by the Senate by a 73-12 roll-call vote June 28. (See p. 509)

A bill (S 3483) to exempt all but the business activities of professional sports from antitrust laws and to regulate the drafting of professional baseball players and protect minor leagues was first sharply amended and then recommitted by the Senate June 28.

Background

REFERENCE -- Sports Antitrust Bill (1958 Almanac p. 318).

Supporters of 1960 legislative proposals to exempt baseball from antitrust laws cited the concern of major league owners that the language of two Supreme Court decisions of 1922 and 1953 (Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore v. the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs; Toolson v. New York Yankees) holding that professional baseball was outside antitrust regulations implied that this status should be changed by Congress. The development of professional sports since 1922 and holdings by the Courts in 1955 and 1957 that boxing and football could be regulated left baseball's status undecided, at least in the eyes of the league franchise holders.

The minor leagues were also anxious for Congress to act. The competition between televised major league games and regular minor league contests, the minor teams claimed, was badly cutting minor league attendance. Though figures varied, it was widely agreed that the actual number of teams and players had substantially declined in the last 25 years, and it was asserted on the Senate floor that 90 percent of all minor league teams were operating at a deficit. To remedy this situation the smaller clubs sought a law prohibiting the televising of major league games into areas where minor league teams were playing.

Congress had considered sports regulation in 1952 and 1958. No bill was reported in 1952 and in 1958 a House-passed bill (HR 10378) was killed by the Senate Judiciary Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee. The Subcommittee Sept. 3, 1959 approved a bill (S 2545) giving basketball, football and hockey immunity from antitrust laws, but in 1960 it laid S 2545 aside and began again with a new bill. (1959 Almanac p. 207)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary, Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- May 19-20 on a bill (S 3483) sponsored by Subcommittee Chairman Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) to exempt all but the business activities of professional football, basketball, or hockey from antitrust laws. (Business activities meant stadium rentals, food and drink concessions and all other similar revenue-producing activities not directly related to the sport itself.) Baseball was to enjoy the same exemption except that the bill made interference with formation of a third baseball league a violation of antitrust laws; prohibited major league baseball clubs from controlling the contracts of more than 100 players; and prohibited the televising of games of a team within 75 miles of the home of another team when the home team was playing a regularly scheduled league game in the same sport.

TESTIMONY -- May 19 -- Branch Rickey, president of the new Continental Baseball League, which was scheduled to become the third major league in 1961, said the success of the league depended largely on the enactment of the Kefauver bill.

Appearing with Rickey in support of the bill were William A. Shea, a New York attorney and one of the Continental League's founders, and Edwin C. Johnson, a former Colorado Governor (D 1933-37, 1955-57) and U.S. Senator (1937-55) and a consultant to the new league.

Ford Frick, commissioner of major league baseball, said enactment of the Kefauver bill would wreck the minor league setup and possibly enable "a group of gamblers or gangsters" to organize a so-called third major league. The current minor league systems enabled the American and National League clubs to provide financial support for clubs in smaller cities in order to maintain a training ground for young ballplayers.

May 20 -- George M. Trautman, president of the National Assn. of Professional Baseball Leagues (the minor leagues), said the Kefauver bill would be disastrous to minor league clubs. He said it would not permit major league clubs to employ enough players to staff their minor league "farm" clubs. The minor leagues were in grave financial trouble, he said, even without this provision.

ACTION -- The Subcommittee June 20 sent to the full Committee without recommendation an amended version of S 3483. The Subcommittee draft dropped the 100-player limit and lowered the number of players a team could withhold from the baseball draft to 40.

The Judiciary Committee June 20 reported S 3483 (S Rept 1620) without recommendation for passage. The Committee added to the 40 players that could be withheld from draft by other teams all players who had been in professional baseball less than four years. The Committee deleted the provision making it a federal crime to interfere with the formation of a third baseball league. Nine Committee members filed individual views.

Floor Action

Despite Kefauver's contention that baseball "materially" differed from other professional team sports because of its minor league farm system, the Senate June 28, by a 45-41 roll-call vote, agreed to an amendment by Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) to grant baseball the same broad antitrust exemptions as the bill granted football, basketball and hockey. Supporters of the original bill, saying this nullified its purpose, then moved that it be recommitted. The Senate agreed to the motion by a 73-12 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 509)

The Wiley amendment limited the legislation to a reversal of the Supreme Court decisions on antitrust regulation of professional sports by declaring that the business aspects of the sports were regulable, but that the "rules of the game" adopted within leagues and sports associations were free from governmental interference.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Aug. 2 -- The proposed third major baseball league, the Continental league, expired as members unanimously approved the plan for the two existing leagues to expand by absorbing four of the Continental league franchises.

CITY TAX WITHHOLDING

HR 3151 -- Reported Aug. 11, 1959 by the House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 872).

- Failed to pass the House Sept. 1, 1959 under suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds majority. (For voting, see 1959 Almanac p. 388)
- Passed, amended, by the House Feb. 17, 1960 by a 222-160 roll-call vote. (See p. 426)
- Added as a rider to another House bill (HR 4384) by a 50-32 roll-call vote of the Senate Sept. 1. (See p. 518) The Senate subsequently passed HR 4384 by voice vote.

The bill (HR 3151) to authorize the Federal Government to withhold city payroll taxes from the paychecks of federal employees whose jobs were located in cities levying such taxes failed to be enacted into law in 1960.

The bill was passed by the House Feb. 17 but did not reach the Senate floor until Sept. 1. Then, together with several other unrelated bills, the measure (somewhat changed from the House version) was attached as a rider to another House-passed bill (HR 4384) permitting duty-free importation of religious articles, which was then passed.

There was no further action, however, to reconcile House and Senate differences, and both HR 3151 and HR 4384 died when the 86th Congress adjourned.

Controversy centered on whether it was fair for a state or city to tax the incomes of persons who worked in the state or city but lived in another state -- common in the Northeast where, for example, New York State collected a state income tax from residents of New Jersey or Connecticut who commuted to work in New York, and Philadelphia collected a city tax from Delaware and New Jersey residents working in Philadelphia.

The legality of such taxation of non-residents had been established 40 years earlier by a Supreme Court decision in an Oklahoma income-tax case; and Congress had already legislated (see below) to permit the Federal Government to withhold state taxes from paychecks of federal employees working in states that levied such taxes, regardless of whether the employees lived in another state.

Nevertheless, opponents of the city tax withholding measure argued that it was unfair for a city or state to tax the income of non-residents, and that to permit the Federal Government to withhold such a tax and turn it over to a city or state only abetted the inequity. The House version of the bill permitted withholding of city taxes on residents of other states; the Senate version was modified so that it did not.

Background

In 1952 a law (PL 82-587) was enacted which directed the Federal Government to withhold state wage taxes from salaries paid to federal employees working and living within that state.

In 1959, Congress amended the 1952 law with a measure (S 2282 -- PL 86-371) making it clear that the Government could withhold state income taxes from the pay checks of non-residents working in the state, as well as residents.

Proposals to amend the U.S. Constitution to prohibit state taxation of income of non-residents (S J Res 29, 67) were considered in 1959 by the Senate Judiciary Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee, which held hearings on them April 15-16, but took no subsequent action. The proposals were backed by Senators from Connecticut and New Jersey. The House Judiciary Committee Aug. 25, 1959 tabled a similar proposal (H J Res 33).

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- Aug. 11, 1959 unanimously reported HR 3151 (H Rept 872). As introduced by Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) and as reported, the bill authorized the Federal Government to withhold city payroll taxes from the paycheck of any federal employee working in a city of 75,000 or more population, even if the employee lived in a state other than the one where the city he worked in was located. A committee amendment proposed after the bill was reported lowered the size of eligible cities to 50,000, thus extending application of the bill from about 15 cities to about 20 cities in five states: Alabama, Kentucky, Missouri, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Floor Action

HR 3151 first came to the House floor Sept. 1, 1959 for passage under suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds majority vote. (1959 Almanac p. 258) The motion to pass the bill, with the committee amendment included, fell five votes short on a roll-call of 251-133. (For voting, see 1959 Almanac p. 388)

Brought to the floor again under a rule requiring only a majority for passage, the bill was passed by the House Feb. 17, 1960 by a 222-160 roll-call vote, after the committee amendment was agreed to by a standing vote. (For voting, see chart p. 426)

One other amendment was agreed to. It permitted the Federal Government to withhold a city income tax from the salary of a federal employee who lived in the city but worked in a federal installation within five miles of the city.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 3151:

Authorized the Federal Government to withhold city income taxes from the paycheck of any federal employee working in a city levying such a tax and having 50,000 or more population, even if the employee lived in a state other than the one where the city he worked in was located.

Authorized the Federal Government to withhold a city income tax from the salary of a federal employee living in the city, and therefore subject to the tax, but working in a federal installation within five miles of the city.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Feb. 17 -- Paul F. Schenck (R Ohio) -- Apply the withholding to employees at federal installations within five miles of a city of 50,000. Standing vote, 45-30.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Feb. 17 -- William H. Milliken Jr. (R Pa.) -- Authorize withholding not only in cities but in any political subdivision of a state. Standing, 20-25.

Williard S. Curtin (R Pa.) -- Prohibit withholding of city taxes on non-residents. Standing, 34-50.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARING -- June 17, 1960.

TESTIMONY -- Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) testified in favor of the bill; Sen. Clifford P. Case (R N.J.) opposed it. The Treasury Department opposed extension of the bill's coverage to cities of less than 75,000 and to federal installations located within five miles of cities affected. The Committee took no action on HR 3151 or an identical bill (S 2551).

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 1 passed by voice vote a bill (HR 4384) permitting the duty-free importation of articles for religious purposes, after adding by a roll-call vote of 50-32 a rider to authorize federal withholding of city taxes from federal employees paychecks if the employees worked in cities of more than 75,000 and lived in the same state as the city imposing the tax. (For voting, see chart p. 518) HR 4384 had been passed by the House Aug. 18, 1959 and reported (S Rept 1911) by the Senate Finance Committee Aug. 25, 1960.

Clark, who sponsored the rider, accepted a modification limiting its application to federal employees living in the same state as the city in which they worked; the rider initially applied also to employees living in other states. The modification was suggested by J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.).

Clark's amendment, before its modification, was opposed chiefly by the New Jersey and Delaware delegations whose constituents worked in Philadelphia.

An amendment offered by Norris Cotton (R N.H.) as added language to Clark's amendment was turned down on a procedural move that required two roll-call votes. The Cotton amendment would have prohibited the Federal Government from collecting state taxes from federal employees living outside the taxing state. In effect, it would have repealed the sections of the 1959 law (see above) permitting the Federal Government to withhold state taxes from paychecks of federal employees not living in the state imposing the tax.

Following was the sequence of roll-call votes on the Clark rider and the bill (for voting, see chart p. 518):

By a roll call of 33-47, the Senate rejected a motion by Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) to table both the Clark amendment and the Cotton amendment. Next, by a 48-33 roll call, the Senate agreed to a motion of Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) to table the Cotton amendment alone. The Senate then agreed to the Clark amendment, 50-32.

The Senate's last roll call on the bill was also its last of the 86th Congress. It came at the insistence of Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) on a procedural motion to resume consideration of the bill after debate had been interrupted for discussion of a sugar quotas bill. The motion was agreed to, 78-1, with Lausche the only dissenter.

In addition to Clark's amendment, three other riders were also attached to HR 4384 by the Senate (see below). Final Senate action on the bill did not come until 4 a.m. the morning of Sept. 1, the last day of the 86th Congress. The bill was then sent to the House with a request for concurrence in the Senate amendments, but in the House, it died at the Speaker's desk.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Sept. 1 -- Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Authorize the Federal Government to withhold city taxes from the paychecks of federal employees working in cities that impose such taxes and that have 75,000 or more population, provided the employees live in the state in which the city is located. Roll-call vote, 50-32.

Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) -- Retroactive to Sept. 1, 1954, establish the status of Plumbers Union Local 12 Pension Fund as a tax-exempt trust fund. Voice vote.

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Limit imports of duty-free Philippine tobacco to those licensed by the Philippine government for charge against the duty-free quota (identical to HR 3392, passed by the House Aug. 24, 1960). Voice.

John Marshall Butler (R Md.) -- Amend tax laws for survivors of two-man partnerships, in effect, to give tax relief to Howard F. Knipp. Voice. (A private bill, HR 2068, to provide relief for Knipp was vetoed in 1959. See 1959 Almanac p. 662)

CONGRESSIONAL RETIREMENT

HR 8241 -- Reported by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee Aug. 11, 1959 (H Rept 832).

- Passed by the House by voice vote Aug. 17, 1959.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee April 25, 1960 (S Rept 1289).
- Passed, amended, May 5 by the Senate by a 5-3 standing vote.
- House agreed to Senate amendments by voice vote June 22.

PL 86-604 -- Signed into law July 7.

HR 8241 liberalized the Civil Service retirement system for Members of Congress and their employees. The Senate May 5, by a 5-3 standing vote, approved the bill as amended by the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and the House June 22 agreed to the Senate changes. The House had originally passed the bill by voice vote Aug. 17, 1959.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), floor manager of HR 8241, said it affected from six to 12 former Members of Congress.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 8241:

Provided that a Member's eligibility for Civil Service retirement annuity credits would be based on any combination of five years of service as a Member or as an employee covered by the Civil Service Retirement Act.

Allowed a former Member to count his Congressional tenure toward Civil Service retirement credit when re-employed by the Federal Government in a position subject to the Act.

Allowed a former Member to receive an annuity while performing full-time service in an appointive federal position without pay, or part-time service, provided his annuity is reduced by the days for which he received pay.

Raised the formula for retirement pay of Congressional employees with more than 15 years of service.

Existing law prevented Members from combining civilian and legislative Civil Service retirement credits to attain the five years necessary for coverage under the Retirement Act. This penalized federal employees who were elected to Congress for less than five years and former Members who served in the Executive Branch for less than five years, the Senate Post Office and Civil Service report said (S Rept 1289).

FIRST-CLASS MAIL AIRLIFT

HR 12595-- Reported, amended, by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee (H Rept 1929) June 21, 1960.

● Passed by the House by voice vote July 2.

The House July 2 passed by voice vote and sent to the Senate a bill (HR 12595) to prohibit the Postmaster General from arranging for the airlifting of first-class, 4-cent letter mail. The bill was aimed at halting an experiment into the possible economies of expanding existing airmail service which began in 1953. Backers of the bill said the experiment was "a master plan designed to completely replace conventional rail transportation of letters"; that it was unauthorized and had been expanded despite Congressional recommendations to the contrary. Warnings against extending the program were carried in Committee reports accompanying the fiscal 1961 appropriation bill for the Treasury and Post Office Departments (HR 10569).

A motion to recommit the bill to Committee, offered by Rep. Robert R. Barry (R N.Y.), was rejected by voice vote.

The Senate took no action on the bill.

BACKGROUND -- HR 12595 was reported June 21 by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee (H Rept 1929), and supplemental views, giving added background on the experiment, were filed June 23 as Part 2 of the report by Mrs. Kathryn E. Granahan (D Pa.), chairman of the Postal Operations Subcommittee. The report said the experiment was begun after the Comptroller General in August 1953 advised the Postmaster General that the General Accounting Office would not object to the use of funds for air transportation of first-class mail when the Postmaster General felt it would contribute to more efficient or economical service, and so long as it did not impair the basic distinction between airmail and regular mail service by surface means. The Committee said testimony at hearings June 6, 9 and 10 showed "large volumes" of 4-cent mail were being airlifted and therefore the "basic distinction" between the two mail classes "has been impaired".

Officials of railroads and the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks (AFL-CIO) supported the legislation; airline representatives and the Post Office Department opposed it.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 12595:

Prohibited the Postmaster General from arranging for transportation of first-class, 4-cent mail by air, effective Jan. 1, 1961.

Excluded from the prohibition: first-class mail between the 48 contiguous states and Alaska, Hawaii, the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico or any protectorate; mail between the non-mainland areas; military mail sent from embarkation ports.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

July 2 -- H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Permit continued airlift of first-class mail between points where it was being carried as of June 1, 1960. Voice vote.

DEBATE -- July 2 -- Morgan M. Moulder (D Mo.) -- The airlift cost the railroads $11.5 million annually in revenue because of the withdrawal of postal service in long-haul railroad operations, and the Post Office Department was rapidly expanding the airlift to 18 routes "in direct disregard of the Congress".

Robert R. Barry (R N.Y.) -- Only about 1 percent of the $325 million annually paid the railroads to carry mail was being airlifted and there were times when the railroads "cannot be relied on to transport mail between two given points" without circuitous routes.

John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) -- The House was acting on the bill "because of pique and irritation at the Postmaster General".

SUPREME COURT NOMINEES

S Res 334 -- Reported, amended, by the Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 1893) Aug. 22, 1960.

● Adopted by the Senate Aug. 29 by a 48-37 roll-call vote. (See p. 517)

S Res 334 expressed the sense of the Senate that the President should not make recess appointments to the Supreme Court, except to prevent or end a breakdown in the administration of the Court's business; and that a recess appointee should not take his seat on the Court until the Senate had "advised and consented" to the nomination.

The prologue of the resolution, stating its purpose, said: (1) Senate consideration of Supreme Court nominations should be done "in an atmosphere free from pressures inimical" to unbiased judgment; (2) Court nominations "should be considered only in the light of the qualifications the person brings to the threshold of the office;" (3) Court recess appointments "inevitably" caused "public speculation on the independence" of the nominee before his confirmation by the Senate; and (4) some Court appointments were "taken in good faith", but without a full appreciation of the "difficulties" they caused the Senate.

A motion by Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) to recommit the resolution to the Senate Judiciary Committee was rejected by a 33-52 roll-call vote. Both roll-call votes split generally along party lines. (For voting, see chart p. 517)

During debate, Sen. Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) and other proponents of the resolution said that investigation of the nominations of Supreme Court recess appointees was made difficult by the oath preventing all Court Justices from talking about matters pending before the Court. Hart said that the Senate was "dreadfully handicapped" in considering nominations that have been, in effect, partially confirmed by the serving of the recess appointment, and said that "indelicacy" was involved when "the Legislative Branch does business" with a Court Justice. They said the Supreme Court should be composed only of Justices confirmed by the Senate.

Keating and other opponents said the resolution was an attempt to restrict the President's Constitutional recess appointment powers, and that a full Court was necessary to handle the large case load. They said the Court could not afford to wait for Congress to confirm nominees. They said the resolution not only went beyond the "advise and consent" powers of Congress, but that it was a reflection against the President, as well as Chief Justice Earl Warren, and Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Potter Stewart, who were recess appointees during the Eisenhower Administration.

Unexpressed reasons for the resolutions, some observers said, were Democratic hopes of victory in the Presidential election, and fear that a vacancy might occur on the Court before January, enabling President Eisenhower to give a recess appointment to a Republican. Justice Felix Frankfurter was 77, Justice Hugo Lafayette Black was 74, and Chief Justice Warren was 69 at the time the resolution was adopted.

BACKGROUND -- The Senate Judiciary Committee Aug. 22 reported S Res 334 (S Rept 1893, Part I) with amendments, and Aug. 24 filed minority views (S Rept 1893, Part II). The Committee amended the resolution by specifying that Court appointments be made only to prevent or end "a demonstrable breakdown in the administration of the Court's business", and in several minor ways.

The report said that Chief Justice Warren was the first recess appointee in 100 years to take his seat on the Bench before confirmation.

A controversy occurred in 1959 over the confirmation of recess appointee Justice Stewart; part of the controversy was over whether making recess appointments to important offices lessened the Senate's power to "advise and consent." (1959 Almanac p. 664)

Minority views, signed by Republican Sens. Alexander Wiley (Wis.), Roman Hruska (Neb.), and Keating, said "the great volume, complexity, and importance of the work of the Supreme Court makes it imperative that there be a full complement of Justices at all times."

SELF-EMPLOYED RETIREMENT

HR 10 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee Feb. 24, 1959 (H Rept 64).

- Passed by the House by voice vote March 16, 1959.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee June 17, 1960 (S Rept 1615).

The Senate in 1960 again failed to pass a House-passed measure (HR 10) to permit self-employed persons to defer payment of income taxes on portions of their income put into retirement funds. In the 85th Congress, an identical bill passed by the House was rejected by the Senate. (1958 Almanac p. 159)

Background

HR 10 was passed by the House March 16, 1969 (1959 Almanac p. 199), with the following provisions:

Provided that a self-employed individual could deposit 10 percent of his income, or $2,500, whichever was less, into a retirement fund and deduct this amount from his taxable income.

Deferred payment of income tax on income put into a retirement fund until retirement.

Limited to $50,000 the total amount deductible for retirement purposes.

Provided that the individual must retire no earlier than age 65 and no later than age 70, thus permitting no deduction after age 70.

Required that payments (with certain exceptions) received from a retirement fund be included in the recipient's gross income for the taxable year in which it was received.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARINGS -- On HR 10 June 17, 18, July 15 and Aug. 11, 1959; and May 11 and 12, 1960 on an alternative to HR 10, submitted April 1 by Under Secretary of the Treasury Fred C. Scribner Jr. in a letter to the Committee. Testifying in 1960 were Sen. Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.), Treasury Department General Counsel David A. Lindsay and representatives of the American Retail Federation, the Council of Profit-Sharing Industries, and of life insurance and pension associations.

In his April 1 letter, Scribner repeated past Treasury objections to the measure: that it would cost $365 million a year in lost revenue and that the loss could reach $3 billion if other classes of persons were given similar deductions.

Without specifically recommending the Treasury's alternative plan, Scribner said it was "more sound and equitable" than the House bill. The plan was to permit a self-employed person to defer tax payment on sums channeled into his own retirement fund only if he also contributed to funds for his employees. Scribner said the revenue loss under the Treasury plan would be only $150 million to $250 million a year, as less were expected to take advantage of HR 10 with the added requirement. (Tax losses would be caused both by the income tax deferment and the fact that the taxes paid after retirement would be based on the reduced income.)

ACTION -- The Committee June 9 approved an amended version of HR 10, which incorporated the Treasury's proposal to require self-employed persons who set up a tax-deductible retirement plan to set up similar plans for their employees. The Committee also changed the base on which the 10 percent deduction could be computed to "earned income" rather than "self-employment income". This meant taxes could not be deferred on that portion of a self-employed person's income derived from return on capital investment, but only on the portion which he paid himself as salary. The bill was approved by a 12-5 vote.

The June 17 Committee report (S Rept 1615) said the bill would make self employment "somewhat more attractive than at present compared to employment with a corporation, and will thus help to keep small business strong and independent professional practice thriving."

Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.), Russell B. Long (D La.) and Albert Gore (D Tenn.) filed a minority dissent which warned that the bill would cost $3 billion a year if its "benefits...were extended to all citizens, as will inevitably be demanded with justice." They said most salaried beneficiaries of pension plans paid taxes on money set aside for retirement.

Floor Action

Floor consideration of HR 10 began June 29, but no votes were taken on amendments or on the bill before Congress recessed for the conventions July 3. No action was taken on HR 10 during the August session.

One amendment, proposed by Long, would have required that the self-employed pay taxes on half of what they put aside annually, a procedure similar to that followed under Government pension plans.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION

HR 10777 -- Reported by House Armed Services Committee (H Rept 1307) March 2, 1960.
- Passed by the House, on a 407-4 roll-call vote, March 9. (See p. 428)
- Reported, amended, by the Senate Armed Services Committee (S Rept 1338) May 11.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate, by voice vote May 13.
- Conference report (H Rept 1673) agreed to by the House and Senate on voice votes June 1.

PL 86-500 -- Signed into law June 8.

Congress authorized appropriations of $1,185,320,000 in fiscal 1961 for construction at military installations in the United States and abroad. The total was $34,235,000 less than the Administration's revised request, which the Defense Department submitted to the Senate after the House had passed the construction bill. The revised budget, designed to carry out a new air defense plan, deleted $57 million in construction of facilities for Bomarc ground-to-air missiles, the Sage radar warning system and for other facilities, but added $130,300,000 for construction of facilities for Minuteman and Titan missile squadrons and various other facilities. A $4 million increase in the deficiency authorization brought the revised budget to $1,219,555,000.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 10777 authorized:

Army	$ 143,561,000
Navy	127,566,000
Air Force	727,305,000
Defense Department	20,000,000
Deficiencies	109,983,000
Reserve components	56,122,000
Reserve deficiencies	783,000
TOTAL	$1,185,320,000

The bill also authorized 9,941 family housing units, of which 8,943 were Capehart units.

House

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services.

ACTION -- March 2 reported HR 10777 (H Rept 1307), authorizing $1,103,823,000. The Defense Department Feb. 4 had asked Congress to authorize $1,142,-122,000, which included new authorizations of $992,-053,000.

The Committee noted that most of the new authorizations were needed "to support new weapons developments and essential modernization of our bases." The report warned Congressmen that the transition to greater missile power would cause "reorientation and closing of some bases."

Over $651 million, or about 59 percent of the total authorization, was for direct support of the ballistic missile programs of the three armed services. The Army was authorized $14.3 million for development and testing of its Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile system and the Air Force was authorized $318 million for testing and training facilities for these weapon systems: Atlas, Titan and Minuteman ICBMs; Bomarc defense missiles; and Samos and Midas satellites.

Although the total request was cut by approximately $38 million, the Committee increased the Army National Guard authorization by $505,000 over the budget request, for a total of $12,673,000. This plus a carryover of $11 million previously authorized would provide the Guard with $20 million in fiscal 1961 for its spending program, which included the building of 74 new armories, the Committee report said.

Total deficiency authorizations rose from $4,329,000 in the fiscal 1960 bill to $107,961,000; the largest deficiency was $50 million to enable the Air Force to increase its Atlas missile sites from nine to 13.

Floor Action

The House March 9 passed HR 10777, by a 407-4 roll-call vote, in the form reported by the Armed Services Committee. An open rule for debate on the bill was adopted March 7 by a 313-1 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 428)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services.

ACTION -- May 11 reported an amended version of HR 10777 (S Rept 1338), authorizing $1,184,865,000. The Defense Department April 25 had asked the Committee, in a memorandum compiling revised requests, to authorize $1,219,555,000. That included an increased deficiency authorization of $110,766,000.

A revision of the air defense program shifted a net $73,293,000 to Titan and Minuteman ICMB squadrons and other facilities and cut out a proposed $30 million for construction of the super Sage radar warning system and $26 million for Bomarc defense missile facilities, cutting by 50 percent the number of Bomarc sites.

HR 10777 authorized almost $409 million for operational testing and training facilities for the Minuteman, Titan and Atlas missile squadrons and for facilities for the Samos and Midas satellites.

Displeased with the Air Force's revised air defense program, the Committee recommended that it be resubmitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Secretary of Defense for further review. The Committee said it was unable to "reconcile the cancellation of...long-range, ground-to-air (Bomarc) defense missile sites, located on the perimeter of our country, while continuing those of shorter range primarily designed for last-minute protection of our cities and military installations" (the Nike-Hercules system). The Committee said the cost of completing several of the Bomarc sites on the Pacific Coast would be "nominal in comparison to the money already spent in developing these sites, and to be spent in settlement charges resulting from the cancellation of contracts."

The Committee raised the Army National Guard authorization by $5,420,000 over the House figure, for a total of $18,093,000 and added 25 more Guard armories for a total of 99 compared to the request for 65.

The Committee cut 245 family housing units from the House authorization.

Floor Action

The Senate May 13 amended and passed HR 10777 by voice vote, authorizing $1,185,665,000.

A provision in the bill requiring that family housing proposed for construction under Section 810 of the National Housing Act be specifically authorized in a military construction law led to a series of amendments by Senators who wished such housing in their home states. Section 810, enacted in the Housing Act of 1959 (PL 86-372), authorized FHA mortgage insurance on up to 5,000 housing units if they were certified by the Secretary of Defense as needed for military and essential civilian personnel. No authorization for such units was contained in the bill as passed by the House.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

May 13 -- Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) -- Restrict use of air transportation for moving household effects of the armed forces if the cost exceeds that of other means of transportation. Voice vote.

Byrd -- Provide that additional fees for reimbursement paid by the armed services to contractors under cost-plus-fee contracts would not exceed the interest the Treasury would pay on the money for the same period. Voice.

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- Authorize, under Section 810 of the National Housing Act, construction of 300 family housing units at Patrick Air Force Base, Cocoa, Fla., and 150 units at Clinton-Sherman Air Force Base, Clinton, Okla. Voice.

Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) -- Authorize under Sec. 810 construction of 150 family housing units at the Army Electronics Proving Grounds, Fort Huachuca, Ariz. Voice.

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) -- Authorize under Sec. 810 construction of 250 family housing units at White Sands Proving Grounds, White Sands, N.M. Voice.

Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) -- Authorize under Sec. 810 construction of 100 family housing units at the Glasgow Air Force Base, Mont. Voice.

John Stennis (D Miss.) -- Authorize $800,000 for Air National Guard operational facilities at the McGee-Tyson Airport, Knoxville, Tenn. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

May 13 -- Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- Delete the authorization to transfer the Food and Container Institute from Chicago, Ill. to Natick, Mass. Standing vote.

DEBATE -- May 13 -- Stennis, floor manager of the bill -- The Air Force revisions in the defense missile programs showed a lack of "logic" and "consistency" in planning but the new emphasis on offensive weapons is a "timely...and sound move".

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- The incident of the American U-2 plane shot down in Russia has made the military construction program abroad "to some extent out of date". "If the Committee today were asked to revise the bill to meet the changing picture, we would not have the information to do it."

Conference

REPORT -- A Senate-House conference committee June 1 reported (H Rept 1673) a compromise version of HR 10777, authorizing $1,185,320,000 and accepting the revised air defense plan considered by the Senate.

The conferees removed from the bill the 3,105 units of Section 810 housing authorized by the Senate.

The conferees also deleted Sen. Byrd's two amendments, contending they concerned problems which should be handled in separate legislation. Senate increases for National Guard armories were accepted.

ACTION -- The House and Senate June 1 adopted the conference report by voice votes.

DEBATE -- June 1 -- Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), Armed Services Committee Chairman -- "I personally hope it is the last we hear of...these (Section) 810 houses."

Sen. Stennis -- "There was considerable doubt on the part of the conferees as to the feasibility of this (Sec. 810) program," which was first authorized in the 1959 Housing Act and "had never been tried out".

The fiscal 1961 military construction appropriation bill (HR 12231 -- PL 86-630), enacted July 12, provided $994,855,000 -- a cut of $193 million from the President's appropriation request.

CULTURAL MATERIAL IMPORTS

Exec I -- Reported by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee (Exec Rept 1) Feb. 8, 1960.

- Approved by a 76-14 roll-call vote of the Senate Feb. 23. (See p. 477)

The Senate Feb. 23, by a roll-call vote of 76-14, ratified U.S. participation in the "Agreement on Importation of Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Materials" (Executive I, 86th Congress, 1st session). (For voting see chart p. 477)

Following ratification of the treaty, which permitted the free import of various cultural materials, the President postponed deposit of the instrument of ratification -- the final step in making the treaty binding on the United States -- in order to give Congress time to pass necessary implementing legislation adding articles covered by the treaty to the duty-free list under U.S. tariff laws.

Such legislation (HR 13224) was introduced two days before Congressional adjournment by House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), but there was no action in either chamber. The State Department Oct. 7 said the President did not plan to put the treaty into effect in the absence of the implementing legislation. This left final disposition of the treaty up to the 87th Congress and Mr. Eisenhower's successor as President in 1961.

Senate debate centered on the possibility that Communist nations subsequently becoming signatories to the agreement might export unlimited amounts of propaganda to the United States, but Sen. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) assured the Senate that ratification did not give the Executive Branch a "blank check" to permit the importation of Communist propaganda.

PROVISIONS -- The agreement bound the signatory nations to remove duties on the following items for use by individuals, schools and other organizations: books, publications, documents, works of art and collectors' items, audio and visual materials, scientific instruments, articles for the blind and certain public exhibition materials. A special protocol adopted when the U.S. signed the agreement permitted the U.S. and any of the 30 other signatory nations reciprocally to suspend the agreement's obligations if imports threatened "serious injury" to domestic producers.

BACKGROUND -- The original agreement was drawn up at the 1950 General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Florence, Italy, but the United States did not sign until June 24, 1959. The President Aug. 25, 1959 sent the treaty to the Senate for ratification.

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDIES

HR 10644 -- Reported by House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee (H Rept 1715) June 1, 1960.

● Passed by the House by voice vote June 6.

S 2584 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 1415) May 24.

HR 10644 -- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 60-26 roll-call vote June 7. (See p. 499)

● Conference report (H Rept 1953) agreed to by voice votes of the Senate June 23 and the House June 24.

PL 86-607 -- Signed into law July 7.

HR 10644 authorized, for two years, an increase from 50 to 55 percent in the ceiling on Government subsidies for domestic merchant marine shipbuilding and also prohibited shipping companies from giving free or reduced-rate transportation to any Government official or employee or any member of their family. The "anti-junket" provision was proposed by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) and its adoption marked a victory in a campaign Williams had waged for such legislation since 1954.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 10644:

Authorized the Federal Maritime Board to pay a maximum 55 percent cost-differential subsidy for merchant marine ship construction under contracts signed within two years after enactment of the bill or on ships with keels laid after June 30, 1959.

Stipulated that no common carrier could directly or indirectly issue any ticket or pass for free or reduced-rate transportation to any Government employee or his family for passage on any ship sailing under the American flag, under penalty of fines of from $500 to $10,000 for each violation; excepted from the ban military or civilian personnel or their dependents when passage was paid for by the Government, and persons injured or rescued at sea and physicians and persons attending them.

Background

The Merchant Marine Act of 1936 limited federal ship subsidies to 50 percent of construction cost. The subsidy represented the difference between ship construction costs in the United States and abroad, estimated at between 48-52 percent in 1960. The Commerce Department opposed increasing the subsidy in 1960 on grounds the cost differential was not sufficiently in excess of the ceiling to warrant an increase.

The anti-junketing proposal first was introduced in January 1954 by Williams, who said its need became apparent when a shipping industry representative offered free passage on any ocean liner anywhere in the world to each member of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee at the time the Committee was considering legislation to liberalize subsidies. No action was taken on his proposal then, however, or in 1955, 1956, or 1957 when he introduced similar legislation. In 1958, the Senate agreed to the ban as a rider to a superliner construction bill, but the House rejected it in conference and similar action met his proposal in 1959 when it was added to a bill involving Great Lakes passenger vessels. In May 1960, Williams by amendment added the anti-junket ban to a Commerce Department appropriations bill (HR 10234), but it was dropped in conference.

In June, however, a series of magazine articles on Congressional junketing by Walter Pincus and Don Oberdorfer of Knight newspapers gave considerable public impetus to Williams' campaign. The Delaware Senator succeeded in getting his steamship anti-junket provision permanently attached to the steamship subsidy bill and other anti-junket measures attached to other legislation. (See "Travel Regulations, Legislative Funds," p. 408)

House

COMMITTEE -- Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

HEARINGS -- March 2-3.

ACTION -- June 1 reported HR 10644 (H Rept 1715) with amendments which set both the 55 percent subsidy ceiling and the two-year time limit, whereas the original bill merely removed the 50 percent ceiling. The report noted Commerce Department opposition but said the existing ceiling violated the parity principle and vessel replacement program underlying the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

Floor Action

The House June 6 passed HR 10644, with Committee amendments, by voice vote.

DEBATE -- June 6 -- Herbert C. Bonner (D N.C.) -- Unless legislation was passed, merchant marine replacement "will come to a standstill".

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HEARINGS -- Dec. 3, 1959, and Feb. 15-16, 1960.

ACTION -- May 24 reported S 2584 (S Rept 1415), a companion bill to HR 10644. Committee member Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio), in individual opposing views, said the federal subsidy program was inflationary.

Floor Action

The Senate June 7, by a 60-26 roll-call vote, passed HR 10644, amended, after first substituting for its text that of S 2584, amended. The Senate adopted, by an 88-0 roll-call vote, an amendment by Williams to ban free or reduced-rate transportation by Government officials or their families on U.S. ships. The Senate rejected, by a 24-62 roll-call vote, an amendment by Lausche providing that when the cost differential exceeded 50 percent the Government would pay only one-half of each additional percent up to the 55 percent ceiling. (For voting see charts p. 498, 499)

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

June 7 -- Williams -- Prohibit free or reduced-rate transportation of U.S. Government employees on merchant marine ships. Roll-call vote, 88-0.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

June 7 -- Lausche -- Limit differential payments over 50 percent to one-half of each additional percent up to the 55 percent ceiling. Roll call, 24-62.

DEBATE -- June 6 -- John Marshall Butler (R Md.) -- As of 1960 only 14 ships were being built under the subsidy program and the Commerce Department "frankly admits that this is insufficient to sustain the skills and ship-building capacity...necessary to national defense."

June 7 -- Lausche -- If the difference in costs kept increasing eventually the Government would "practically have to pay the full cost of building the ships".

Conference

Senate-House conferees, in their June 22 report (H Rept 1953) agreed to accept the Senate version of HR 10644. The Senate June 23 and the House June 24 by voice votes approved the conference report on HR 10644. Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D N.C.), chief House conferee, told the House the Williams amendment had been agreed to reluctantly "to protect passage" of the rest of the bill.

OTHER SHIPPING BILLS

Congress in 1960 also completed action on the following bills affecting shipping:

• HR 10646 (PL 86-518) -- Permitted merchant marine ship operators to spread depreciation and amortization mortgage charges over 25 years instead of 20 years on postwar built ships.

• S 2618 (PL 86-575) -- Permitted unsubsidized operators of war-built vessels (1939-45), except tankers, to trade them in for more modern war-built vessels in the Government reserve fleet during a five-year period following enactment (July 5).

• S 3189 (PL 86-583) -- Prohibited the operation in coastwise trade of any rebuilt vessel unless the entire rebuilding was done in the United States.

• HR 5421 (PL 86-516) -- Authorized a three-year, $7.5 million program of subsidies for construction of fishing vessels, aimed at providing relief for any segments of the domestic fishing industry threatened by imports. (See adjoining column)

Another shipping bill, which received no floor action, was HR 8093 -- a proposal to eliminate the 6 percent differential given Pacific Coast commercial shipbuilders. Under existing law, when a federal construction-differential subsidy is applied for by a Pacific Coast shipowner to aid in the construction or reconditioning of a vessel to be operated in foreign trade from Pacific Coast ports, the lowest responsible bid by a Pacific Coast shipbuilder must be approved by the Government if the bid is not more than 6 percent higher than the lowest responsible bid of an Atlantic Coast shipbuilder.

HR 8093 was reported July 2 by the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee (H Rept 2089), along with minority views by the Committee's four West Coast Representatives, George P. Miller (D Calif.), Thor C. Tollefson (R Wash.), William S. Mailliard (R Calif.) and Thomas M. Pelly (R Wash.). They protested the "high-handed manner" in which the Committee rejected the Merchant Marine Subcommittee's report and charged "utter disregard" of the Subcommittee, which had voted to get an opinion from the General Accounting Office on relative shipbuilding costs throughout the United States. The Committee report held that the bill would end the "discriminatory advantage" given West Coast shipyards through the differential, which was authorized in 1936 to place Western yards in a competitive position with the East. The Commerce Department opposed the repeal of the differential.

AMORPHOUS GRAPHITE

HR 1217 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 1143) Sept. 3, 1959.
- Passed by House under suspension of rules (two-thirds vote required) by a 278-116 roll-call vote Feb. 2, 1960. (See p. 424)
- Reported by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 1332) May 3.
- Passed by Senate by voice vote May 5.

PL 86-453 -- Signed into law May 13.

The 86th Congress passed and the President signed a bill (HR 1217) amending the Tariff Act of 1930 to permit free importation for two years -- beginning May 14, 1960 -- of amorphous graphite valued at $50 per ton or less. Amorphous graphite is a fine, granular form of graphite used for foundry facings, manufacture of carbon brushes, dry-cell batteries, pencils, paints, lubricants and brush stock for electric motors, some of which are used in defense production.

The bill, as reported by the Ways and Means Committee, was passed by the House Feb. 2 under suspension of the rules by a 278-116 roll call. The Senate passed HR 1217 May 5 without amendments or debate.

House discussion centered on the damage to the Alabama flake-graphite industry that might result from removal even for two years of the existing 5 percent ad valorem duty on amorphous graphite imports. Proponents of the bill said amorphous graphite was a valuable defense commodity, and that, as only 1 percent of the material used in the United States was produced domestically, removal of duties would not seriously harm the economy.

FISHING VESSEL SUBSIDIES

HR 5421 -- Reported, amended, by House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee (H Rept 770) Aug. 5, 1959.
- Passed by the House by a 272-108 roll-call vote Aug. 26, 1959. (1959 Almanac p. 386)

S 2578 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 803) Aug. 24.

HR 5421 -- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 55-30 roll-call vote Sept. 11. (1959 Almanac p. 445)
- Conference report (H Rept 1589) agreed to by voice vote of the Senate May 3, 1960. After reconsideration, Senate June 7 agreed to the report by a 59-26 roll-call vote. (See p. 499) House agreed to report by voice vote June 8.

PL 86-516 -- Signed into law June 12.

HR 5421 authorized a three-year, $7.5 million program of subsidies for construction of fishing vessels, providing relief for any segments of the domestic fishing industry threatened by imports -- notably, New England fisheries and the tuna and shrimp industries. The Second Supplemental appropriation bill for fiscal 1961 (HR 13161), on which Congress completed action Aug. 31, provided $750,000 to initiate the program.

The subsidies were considered necessary because American fishermen by law must use vessels built in U.S. shipyards only. These are more expensive than vessels built abroad and used by foreign competitors, giving the latter a cost advantage enabling them to sell fish more cheaply.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 5421:

Authorized for three years a $2.5 million annual appropriation for fishing vessel construction subsidies, with payments limited to the difference between domestic and foreign construction costs and with the Government limited to paying no more than one-third of the lowest domestic bid; excluded from payments the cost of any defense features, with such costs to be paid by the Defense Department.

Authorized any U.S. citizen to apply for a subsidy and the Secretary of the Interior to grant it when he found that: relief under the escape clause of the 1951 Trade Agreements Act was recommended by the Tariff Commission but denied by the President; there was injury or threatened injury through imports of a fish or shellfish product either not subject to a trade agreement tariff concession or on the Free List of the 1930 Tariff Act, whether or not subject to a trade agreement tariff concession.

Stipulated that applications would be approved only for vessels that would: be suitable for use in a fishery and for defense purposes; aid in development of U.S. fisheries; deliver their full catch only in the U.S.; employ only U.S. residents; be documented under U.S. laws, and be operated by applicants possessing the experience, and resources to maintain them.

Authorized the Maritime Administrator to supervise construction and to submit plans to the Secretary of Defense for suggestions on changes needed to make the vessels suitable as emergency auxiliaries.

Stipulated that construction must be in U.S. shipyards, following competitive bidding.

Directed repayment of subsidies on vessels used in fisheries for which they were not designed.

Stipulated that in the event the U.S. requisitioned or purchased any subsidized vessel, the owner should be paid its current value.

Background

Different versions of HR 5421 were passed by the House and Senate in 1959. The House version authorized a three-year, $3 million program, limited, in effect, to New England fisheries for which relief had been recommended under the escape clause of the Trade Agreements Act but denied by the President. The Senate's amended version authorized a three-year, $15 million program open to all fishermen and provided for emergency use of the vessels for defense. The House failed to act on the Senate version before adjournment. (1959 Almanac p. 309)

The measure was opposed by Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) prior to Senate passage on grounds it constituted one more threat to economical government.

Conference

REPORT -- House-Senate conferees, in their report filed May 4 (H Rept 1589), agreed to a compromise version authorizing a three-year, $7.5 million program, incorporating defense features and open to any segments of the industry threatened by increased imports.

ACTION -- The Senate May 3 agreed by voice vote to the conference report, but on May 5 it agreed to a motion by Lausche that it reconsider its action. Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, who was floor manager of the bill, May 5 told the Senate he had forgotten to notify Lausche when the report was called up for a vote May 3, as he had promised earlier. The Senate June 7 agreed to the report by a 59-26 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 499) The House agreed to the report by voice vote June 8.

SENATE DEBATE -- June 7 -- Lausche -- The bill was "a manifestation of how the plague of subsidies spreads."

Gordon Allott (R Colo.) -- Supported the bill because national policies on tariffs and foreign ships placed "special burdens" on the industry.

HOUSE DEBATE -- June 8 -- Torbett H. Macdonald (D Mass.) -- The domestic fishing industry "has lost economic stature" and some segments faced ruin.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

S 1283 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee March 10, 1960 (S Rept 1158).

- Passed by the Senate by voice vote March 28.
- Reported, amended, by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee June 14 (H Rept 1861).
- Passed by the House, amended, by voice vote June 24.
- Senate agreed to House amendments by voice vote June 28.

PL 86-613 -- Signed into law July 12.

S 1283 required precautionary labeling of hazardous substances found in general household use and was aimed at updating the Federal Caustic Poison Act of 1927, which listed only 12 chemical substances requiring labeling. Newspaper reports of deaths that occurred from eating or drinking unlabeled poisonous household products gave impetus to enactment of the bill.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 1283, the Federal Hazardous Substances Labeling Act:

Required that the label of any hazardous substance suitable for household use carry: the name and address of the manufacturer, packer or seller; name of the hazardous ingredient; a signal word, "Danger", "Warning" or "Caution"; a statement of the hazard; precautionary measures and first-aid treatment if necessary; the word "poison" on any highly toxic substance; handling or storage instructions; and the statement "Keep out of the reach of children," or its practical equivalent.

Defined hazardous substances to include those which, under specified conditions, were toxic, highly toxic, corrosive, irritants, strong sensitizers, flammable or generating pressure through decomposition or heat; authorized inspection of any such substance.

Authorized the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to enforce the Act, effective upon enactment, and provided penalties, with six-months leeway before imposing them.

Repealed the Federal Caustic Poison Act, effective six months after enactment, with regard to substances covered by S 1283, but provided that it remain in full force for other dangerous substances subject to the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmestic Act.

STOP-GAP HOUSING MEASURES ENACTED

HR 10213 -- "Emergency" housing bill reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 1394) March 15, 1960.

- Passed by a 214-163 roll-call vote of the House April 28. (See p. 436)

S 3670 -- Omnibus housing bill reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 1575) June 14.

- Passed by a 64-16 roll-call vote of the Senate June 16. (See p. 502)

HR 12603 -- Housing Act reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 1924) June 20.

H J Res 784 -- Passed by voice vote of the House Aug. 22.

- Passed, with housing amendments added, by a voice vote of the Senate Aug. 31.
- House agreed to Senate amendments Aug. 31, by voice vote.

PL 86-788-- Signed into law Sept. 14.

After watching an emergency housing bill and then omnibus housing legislation fall by the wayside, Congress in 1960, on the eve of adjournment, passed a three-point "stop-gap" housing measure (H J Res 784 -- PL 86-788) extending the Federal Housing Administration's home-improvement loan program for one year -- through Oct. 1, 1961 -- and authorizing an additional $500 million for the college housing program and $50 million for the public facility loan program of the Community Facilities Administration.

Failure to enact the broader measures amounted to a victory for President Eisenhower, who for several years had urged Congress to reduce the scope of the federal housing program.

The stop-gap bill (H J Res 784) partially fulfilled two of the President's requests -- extension of the FHA home-improvement loan program and additional funds for the public facility loan program -- but went contrary to his requests on the third item -- extension of the college housing program -- which he had asked Congress to terminate.

The three-point program was passed when it appeared that action on omnibus housing legislation (S 3670, HR 12603) could not be completed before Congress adjourned. Final action came Aug. 31 when the Senate, by voice vote, added the housing provisions as amendments to a House-passed joint resolution (H J Res 784) extending the time within which the U.S. Constitution Anniversary Commission was required to report to Congress. The House agreed to the Senate amendments by voice vote and the President signed them into law (PL 86-788) Sept. 14.

Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Housing Subcommittee, in offering the three-point program, said abandonment of general housing legislation was the "lesser of two evils", the other being the expiration of housing programs "essential to the national welfare".

PROVISIONS -- The housing provisions of H J Res 784:

Extended the FHA home-improvement loan program through Oct. 1, 1961, retaining the $1,750,000,000 ceiling on loans that could be insured.

Authorized an additional $500 million in loans for college housing, raising the revolving fund to $1,675,000,000.

Authorized an additional $50 million in loans for construction of public facilities in small communities, raising the revolving fund to $150 million.

Background

REFERENCES -- Housing (1959 Almanac p. 245; 1958 Almanac p. 225, 229; 1957 Almanac p. 594; 1956 Almanac p. 511); Veterans Home Loans (this volume, p. 278).

President Eisenhower Jan. 18 in his fiscal 1961 Budget Message recommended against omnibus housing legislation because authority provided in 1959 for urban renewal, public housing and FHA mortgage insurance was sufficient to last through 1960. He recommended dropping the veterans' and the college housing direct-loan programs and asked for continuation of FHA's authority to insure home-improvement loans, scheduled to expire Oct. 1, and for another $150 million for the special assistance program of the Federal National Mortgage Assn.

Democratic leaders began 1960 with plans for an ambitious housing program which would have gone far beyond the President's requests; however, the omnibus program they drew up was pigeonholed finally by a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats in the House Rules Committee.

The first program to materialize was the "Emergency Home Ownership" bill (HR 10213) which would have increased by $1 billion the authority of the Federal National Mortgage Assn. to buy federally insured home mortgages under its special assistance program. This bill, similar to one enacted in 1958, was passed by the House April 28 with the specific intent of halting the apparent decline in housing construction. The Senate Banking and Currency Housing Subcommittee decided to shelve the bill and go ahead with an omnibus measure (S 3670) when it became apparent that President Eisenhower would veto HR 10213.

The Senate omnibus housing bill providing $1.2 billion in loans and grants for various federal programs appeared headed for the White House until the Senate added a floor amendment providing an additional 25,000 public housing units. This move was in direct opposition to the President's program, which opposed authorization of additional public housing until all previously authorized units had been assigned for construction. The provision also angered key Democrats on the House Rules Committee who traditionally have opposed the federal public housing program. Proponents of the provision, however, argued that the nation's critical housing needs could be relieved only through the expansion of the public housing program.

The public housing program was inaugurated in the Housing Act of 1937. It works on the basis of federal cash loans and grants. The Public Housing Administration is authorized to lend local governments, or boards authorized by those governments, the money to plan and construct low-cost housing projects for persons of low income. Once the construction is completed, the local authority sells Government-backed bonds to private investors. The proceeds from the bonds are given to the PHA as repayment on the construction loans. As the bonds mature, the local authority pays them off with the money it receives from rent, the PHA absorbing the loss (the apartments are rented at below-cost rentals). The only ultimate expenditure is this loss, which the PHA assumes. For fiscal 1959 it amounted to $115,366,644; for fiscal 1960, it was estimated at $132,400,000. Congress controls the program primarily, not by controlling its financial authority, but by regulating the number of housing units which the PHA can contract to have built.

DEMOCRATIC TACTICS

In general, Congressional Democrats have advocated more federal money not only for public housing but also for urban renewal, slum clearance, aid to the elderly and college housing programs. As a bargaining point they have declined, although the President has so requested, to put other non-controversial programs like FHA mortgage insurance on a permanent basis. Their theory was that they could pressure the President into accepting some of the programs he did not like in return for extension of unanimously approved programs.

Congressional leaders followed this tactic when they decided, late in 1960, on enactment of a stop-gap housing bill. The widely popular home-improvement loan program was due to expire Oct. 1 and the revolving fund for public facility loans needed replenishment to continue operating. To these two "must" programs Democrats added the Eisenhower-opposed loan program for college housing, whose revolving fund also needed additional funds to continue operating. The President signed the bill into law without comment.

The FHA home-improvement loan program insures banks against losses on loans to individuals who wish to make improvements -- rehabilitation or additions -- on their homes. Congress has controlled the program by keeping it on a year-to-year basis, although President Eisenhower asked that it be made permanent. In 1959 Congress extended the home-improvement loan program through Oct. 1, 1960.

The college housing program is administered by the Community Facilities Administration. Under this program the Federal Government makes low-interest loans to colleges for the construction of dormitories. In 1959 Congress authorized an additional $250 million for the program, raising its revolving fund to $1,175,000,000, most of which was obligated or expended by December 1959. The Eisenhower Administration had asked Congress to terminate the program, primarily because of the low interest rate set by statute for the loans.

In lieu of the loan program, President Eisenhower in his fiscal 1961 Budget Message asked Congress to authorize federal payment of one-fourth of the principal on bonds floated by colleges and full guarantees on $1 billion worth of such bonds.

The public facilities loan program also is administered by the Community Facilities Administration. In 1955 amendments to the National Housing Act Congress authorized a $100 million revolving fund for 40-year loans to small communities for the construction of water, gas and sewage systems. (1958 Almanac p. 151) The President in 1960 asked Congress to authorize appropriations for this program rather than extend its authority to borrow from the Treasury and to provide $20 million for fiscal 1961.

EMERGENCY HOUSING BILL

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Housing Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 25-29 on HR 9371, an "Emergency Home Ownership" bill to halt the decline in housing construction and provide more Government aid for low- and middle-income home buyers. It would have increased by $1 billion the Federal National Mortgage Association's authority, under its special assistance program, to buy federally insured home mortgages. In theory, the result would be to permit holders of those mortgages to reinvest the money received from FNMA in new mortgages.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 25 -- Norman P. Mason, Housing and Home Finance Agency administrator, said HR 9371 would necessitate additional Government borrowing and lead to more "housing cost increases". Mason said that after similar legislation was enacted in 1958, construction costs, and thus the cost of the house to the home buyer, rose sharply. (1958 Almanac p. 229)

Jan. 26 -- Martin L. Bartling Jr., president, said the National Assn. of Home Builders supported those provisions in HR 9371 which were designed to help FNMA stabilize the mortgage market.

Jan. 27 -- Leon H. Keyserling of the National Housing Conference called the bill a "move in the right direction".

Boris Shishkin, AFL-CIO, supported HR 9371 because it would help "prevent a housing downturn which could precipitate a general economic recession."

Jan. 28 -- Robert E. Scott, National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, opposed HR 9371 as a "soothing balm" which did not get to the "root of the problem." He said any houses built as a result of enactment of the bill would be built anyway, without "federal subsidy".

Jan. 29 -- Wallace J. Campbell, Cooperative League of the U.S.A., said HR 9371 was not an inflationary measure and would make adequate housing financing available at reasonable costs and stimulate badly needed housing construction without cost to the Government.

Cowles Andrus, American Bankers Assn., said enactment of HR 9371 would have "undesirable effects on the housing industry and the economy in general," primarily because in the opinion of the ABA "no emergency exists at present."

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Subcommittee Feb. 4 approved HR 10213, a clean bill replacing HR 9371. The vote was 7-3, with Democrats for, Republicans against.

The full Committee March 15 reported HR 10213 with amendments (H Rept 1394) after an 18-7 vote which divided, with one exception, along party lines. Rep. Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.) voted with the Democrats. The only major amendment prohibited FNMA from selling a mortgage, within a year after the purchase, for less than it paid for it.

The report said the Committee was convinced the decline in new home construction, in spite of increased demand, was the "direct result of the restrictive monetary policies pursued by" the Administration and that these policies had had a "severe impact on residential construction."

All Committee Republicans except Reps. Fino and Seymour Halpern (N.Y.) signed a minority report opposing

HR 10213 on the grounds that there was no housing emergency and that the bill was only an "irresponsible spending proposal". They said the 10 percent to 12 percent decline in housing starts forecast for 1960 was not alarming considering the "exceptionally good housing year enjoyed in 1959".

The minority held that the "fantastic claims of benefits under the 1958" emergency housing bill, after which HR 10213 was patterned, did not "hold up in the light of the record" and that they were "poor recommendations for this new spending proposal."

The chief drafter of the bill, Housing Subcommittee Chairman Albert Rains (D Ala.), called the opposition of Republican Committee members and the Administration a "gamble with the health of the homebuilding industry... (and) over-all economy" of the nation.

Floor Action

The House April 28 passed HR 10213 by a 214-163 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 436)

Before passage, the House defeated, on a 139-235 roll call, a motion to recommit the bill to the Banking and Currency Committee with instructions to report it with an amendment prohibiting the Federal National Mortgage Assn. from purchasing mortgages covering houses where discrimination in the sale, rental or occupancy was practiced.

The motion, offered by Rep. Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.), was the final move by Republicans to tie a civil rights amendment to the housing bill in an attempt to defeat the measure. The discrimination proposal had been defeated earlier by an 83-126 teller vote when offered as a floor amendment by Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.). It was similar to an attempt in 1959 to defeat the first housing bill (S 57). (1959 Almanac p. 235)

President Eisenhower had said, in a Feb. 4, 1959 news conference, when asked for his views on withholding funds from housing projects that practiced discrimination: "I personally believe these problems should not be put together."

Debate on HR 10213 began April 27 when the House adopted an open rule (H Res 498) by a 214-158 roll call. Debate focused on whether or not the additional $1 billion purchasing power which HR 10213 gave FNMA was an example of "irresponsible spending" or a needed economic measure. Republicans maintained there was no crisis in the housing industry and said the measure would create an excessive drain on the Treasury and help only the lender, not the home buyer. Democrats replied that money freed by the additional FNMA purchases would enable more persons to buy their own homes, would increase construction by 70,000 houses, thus reversing the downward trend in home construction, and that Fanny Mae was an operation which made a profit for the Government.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 10213:

Restated Federal Housing Administration authority to insure mortgages made by individuals as well as commercial lenders. Under current practice, although not specifically prohibited, the FHA has limited its mortgage-insurance program to commercial loans.

Permitted the FHA to reduce from one-half to one-quarter of 1 percent its fee for insuring home loans.

Required that for a one-year period following enactment of the bill: FNMA must purchase within its financial authority any mortgage offered, regardless of the type of housing covered, provided the property met all other specifications; required FNMA to sell mortgages, except those sold to FHA, only for cash and at a price at least equal to the acquisition price, thus prohibiting swaps for other Government bonds; reduced the amount of FNMA stock a person selling a mortgage to FNMA must buy to 1 percent of the principal amount of the mortgage.

Provided an additional $1 billion for FNMA special assistance program to buy federally insured home mortgages on new construction where the original principal amount was $13,500 or less. Stipulated that FNMA could raise the ceiling by $1,000 in high cost areas.

Effective for one year, under the special assistance program, prohibited FNMA from paying less than par price for mortgages and reduced from 1½ percent to 1 percent of the unpaid principal the maximum fee FNMA may charge for a commitment to purchase.

Restated FNMA authority to purchase, under its special assistance program, FHA-insured mortages on cooperative housing.

Created a $50 million fund for the purchase by FNMA at face value of federally insured mortgages of $8,000 or less covering new construction, provided that no additional service charge had been added by the lender.

Created a $25 million special assistance fund for the purchase by FNMA of mortgages on defense housing in impacted areas.

Required that the FHA and Veterans Administration be informed of the discounts or fees which money lenders charge on Government-insured mortgages.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

April 28 -- Albert Rains (D Ala.) -- Strike from the bill a requirement that the Secretary of Defense purchase so-called Wherry housing located at or near permanent military installations or where Capehart housing was under construction. Voice vote.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

April 28 -- Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.) -- Prohibit the FNMA from purchasing mortgages covering houses where discrimination in the sale, rental or occupancy was practiced. Teller vote, 83-126.

DEBATE -- April 27 -- Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) -- HR 10213 and other housing proposals under consideration by Congress would create a $325 billion deficit if projected over a five-year period. "Once these extravagant schemes start, they never stop."

Rains -- The decline in housing construction "has already meant the loss of 300,000 to 400,000 jobs" in the housing industry.

Edward J. Derwinski (R Ill.) -- Sufficient mortgage money is available "to continue the boom in homebuilding" and enable the public to get loans.

April 28 -- Rains -- If the Bentley amendment concerning discrimination is adopted it will "kill the bill".

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Housing Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- May 9-25 on HR 10213 and other housing proposals.

With regard to the Emergency Home Ownership bill, Administration officials and representatives of lending institutions again lined up in opposition to it while representatives of labor and housing associations supported the measure.

Although the House had received indirect word that a veto awaited HR 10213, the Senate received much stronger warning. HHFA Administrator Mason told the Subcommittee May 9 that he had been "authorized to advise that enactment of (HR 10213) would not be in accord with the program of the President."

The Subcommittee June 8 in executive session, while considering a number of housing proposals, voted to postpone HR 10213 indefinitely. The omnibus housing bill (S 3670) reported by the Subcommittee contained only one provision of HR 10213 -- an authorization for FHA to reduce from one-half to one-quarter of 1 percent its fee for insuring home loans.

OMNIBUS BILLS

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Housing Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- May 9-25 on various proposals to make permanent or increase the scope of existing housing programs.

The Administration supported proposals to: give the Federal Housing Administration unlimited monetary authority to insure home mortgages and permanent authority to make property improvement loans; provide the Federal National Mortgage Assn. with an additional $150 million with which to buy mortgages under its special assistance program; and increase the public facility loan fund.

Democrats aimed, as in previous years, for a broad housing bill, expanding as well as extending existing programs, particularly urban renewal and slum clearance.

TESTIMONY -- May 9 -- Representatives of the Urban Renewal Administration, FNMA, Community Facilities Administration and FHA supported Administration proposals.

May 11 -- Nathaniel S. Keith of the National Housing Conference urged legislation to establish a Cabinet office on housing and urban development. During the 1960s, Keith said, the increase in population would require an additional 2 million housing units a year but existing programs could not meet that need.

May 12 -- Representatives of the AFL-CIO, Cooperative League of the U.S.A. and the National Assn. of Housing and Redevelopment Officials (NAHRO) testified for Democratic proposals to broaden existing housing legislation.

May 16 -- Robert E. Scott of the National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, supported Administration proposals on FHA's mortgage and home-improvement authority.

P.N. Brownstein of the Veterans Administration said the GI home-loan program for World War II and Korean War veterans should not be extended beyond the scheduled July 25, 1960 expiration date.

May 17 -- Henry Du Laurence of the National Apartment Owners Assn. Inc. said the Association "unalterably opposed" additional public housing units.

Philadelphia Mayor Richardson Dilworth (D), president of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said continuity in the federal urban-renewal program was necessary if there was to be substantial improvement in redevelopment of urban slum areas. He said the Conference of Mayors supported a 10-year, $600 million-a-year federal urban-renewal program.

May 18 -- Representatives of several colleges and universities in New York state urged that an additional $250 million be spent on the college-housing program.

Martin L. Bartling Jr. said the National Assn. of Home Builders recommended establishment of a better central mortgage reserve facility which could handle conventional as well as federally insured home loans.

May 19 -- Tom L. Popejoy of the American Council on Education said it would be necessary eventually to spend $4.5 billion on college dormitories for the 6 million college students expected by 1970.

May 20 -- Cowles Andrus of the American Bankers Assn. opposed an Administration-backed bill which would make permanent the FHA home-improvement program.

J. Clarence Davies Jr. of the Housing and Redevelopment Board of New York City supported proposals to create a Cabinet office for housing and urban affairs and more liberal relocation allowances for individuals and businesses displaced by urban renewal programs.

May 27 -- HHFA Administrator Mason said the following proposals were opposed by the Administration: increased federal loans for housing for the elderly; authorization of additional public housing units; a $600 million annual authorization for 10 years for the urban renewal program; and establishment of a federal limited-profit mortgage corporation to make loans to middle-income families.

BILL APPROVED

ACTION -- The Subcommittee June 8 approved a draft omnibus housing bill which provided a $4 billion FHA mortgage-insurance authority increase; extension of the home-improvement loan program for one year; $500 million for college housing; $350 million for urban renewal; $25 million for the revolving fund for nonprofit housing for the elderly; and $150 million for new FNMA special assistance funds. It also extended the veterans' direct-loan housing program; authorized $100 million additional for the Community Facilities Administration for loans and for local public facilities; and extended the farm-housing loan program.

The Subcommittee rejected proposals for a $100 million middle-income housing program and for 100,000 additional public housing units.

The full Committee June 14 reported the omnibus bill (S 3670 -- S Rept 1575).

Floor Action

The Senate June 16 passed S 3670, by a 64-16 roll-call vote, authorizing $1,247,500,000 in loans and grants for federal housing programs. (For voting, see chart p. 502)

Before passage the Senate adopted, by voice votes, amendments cutting $134 million from the bill in an attempt to avert a veto and struck out, by a 44-37 roll call, a provision to which the Administration had objected, requiring the President to issue an annual estimate of housing needs and recommend to Congress legislation to help meet those needs.

The largest of the authorization cuts -- $74 million -- was made in the farm housing program, but the Committee's recommendation for an additional public facility loan authorization was cut in half to $50 million and the additional authorization for the purchase by FNMA of consumer-type cooperative housing mortgages was cut from $25 million to $15 million. There was no opposition to these cuts as the bill's floor manager, Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), said the sums would not be needed in fiscal 1961.

The Senate, however, also adopted two amendments opposed by the Administration. The first, extending until Feb. 1, 1965 the Veterans Administration's home loan guarantee program, was adopted without objection by voice vote. Then, after rejecting, by a 38-42 roll call, an amendment to authorize construction of an additional 37,000 public housing units, the Senate adopted a second public housing amendment offered by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.). By a 42-39 roll-call vote it approved the construction of an additional 25,000 public housing units.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 3670:

Authorized research under the direction of the Housing and Home Finance Agency on ways to improve residential construction and permitted the Federal Housing Administration to insure $300,000-worth of mortgages per year on homes testing advanced technology in housing design, materials or construction.

Extended for one year, until Oct. 1, 1961, the FHA's home improvement loan program and removed the ceiling on the aggregate insurance authorized under the program.

Authorized a $4 billion increase in the authority of the FHA to insure home mortgages.

Permitted reduction of FHA's minimum premium on mortgage insurance from one-half of 1 percent to one quarter of 1 percent.

Created the position of Assistant Commissioner for Cooperative Housing.

Permitted the cost of improvements to land about a building to be included in cooperative housing loans.

Permitted the FHA to insure mortgages on individually owned units in multi-family houses (condominium housing).

Authorized an additional $25 million appropriation for direct loans for housing for the elderly.

Required the construction of such health, social and recreation facilities in elderly housing projects as are determined to be necessary by the FHA.

URBAN RENEWAL PROGRAM

Increased by $350 million the capital grant authorization for the urban renewal program and permitted the ceiling on relocation payments to families and businesses to be exceeded, on a 2 to 1 federal-local payment basis.

Increased the capital grant reserve fund, from which state allotments may be increased, from $100 million to $150 million.

Permitted application of the FHA urban renewal housing program outside of urban renewal areas where an approved code-enforcement program for housing rehabilitation was being carried out.

Permitted the use of urban renewal loan and grant funds for certain pilot rehabilitation projects within renewal areas.

Extended urban renewal benefits relating to colleges and universities to any state-licensed hospital.

OTHER PROGRAMS

Permitted loans purchased by the Federal National Mortgage Assn. to exceed existing limits on multifamily units where the excess cost of the project was not attributable to the dwelling use and removed the per-unit limitation on certain FHA loans purchased by FNMA where the unit was part of an urban renewal project.

Authorized an additional $150 million for the President's discretionary fund under the FNMA special assistance program.

Increased by $15 million the FNMA authorization for the purchase of consumer-type cooperative houses.

Authorized construction of an additional 25,000 public housing units.

Permitted payments of up to $120 annually for each elderly family living in a public housing project, provided the payment was necessary to prevent a deficit in the project's operations.

Permitted over-income tenants, provided they paid an unsubsidized rent, to remain in public housing units when it was impossible for them to obtain decent housing elsewhere.

Increased by $500 million the authorization for the college housing program and increased from 10 percent to 12½ percent the college housing loan limit in any one state.

Authorized an additional $50 million for the Community Facilities Administration's public facility loan program.

Extended the Veterans Administration's direct home-loan program, for World War II and Korean War veterans through July 25, 1961, and continued the annual additional $150 million authorization.

Extended for two years, until June 30, 1963, the farm housing loan program.

Extended to June 30, 1962 the federal loan program for hospital construction in defense areas and authorized an additional appropriation of $7.5 million.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 16 -- Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) -- Eliminate a $50 million authorization for direct loans for farm housing. Voice vote.

Capehart -- Eliminate a $4 million authorization for the reduction of loans on farm housing. Voice.

Carpehart -- Eliminate a $20 million authorization for loans for the improvement and repair of farm homes. Voice.

Capehart -- Reduce from $100 million to $50 million the additional public facility loan authorization. Voice.

Capehart -- Reduce from $25 million to $15 million the additional authorization for FNMA purchase of consumer-type cooperative houses. Voice.

Jennings Randolph (D W.Va.) -- Extend until Feb. 1, 1965 the home, farm and business loan guarantee for World War II veterans. Voice.

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Authorize construction of an additional 25,000 public housing units. Roll call, 42-39.

Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) -- Eliminate a provision requiring an annual estimate by the President of the Nation's housing needs and recommendations for legislation to meet those needs. Roll call, 44-37.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 16 -- Capehart -- Reduce by $50 million -- to $300 million -- the additional capital grant authorization for the urban renewal program. Voice.

Clark -- Authorize construction of an additional 37,000 public housing units. Roll call, 38-42.

DEBATE -- June 16 -- John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) -- The bill provides for the continuation of several housing programs which would otherwise expire and additional authorization for programs for which funds are exhausted. The public housing provision should not be added because, in view of strong opposition in the House to the program, it might jeopardize enactment of the bill.

Clark -- Additional public housing units are needed to prevent the program from coming to a halt soon after Congress adjourns and remaining "inactive for perhaps a year".

Capehart -- Enough public housing units have been authorized to provide for as many as can be constructed during the next 12 months.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- The Capehart amendment to reduce the capital grant authorization for the urban renewal program would "stifle clearing of the slums".

Capehart -- The amendment would not have much effect on the urban renewal program because it is expected that only $20 million of the authorization will be spent in the next four years.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- The housing goal provision should be retained because it is necessary to plan such programs. "The Republican party and the Administration do not plan (and) that is why the fiscal condition of the country is in such a mess."

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Congress, by telling the President to include in the State of the Union message a prediction on the Nation's housing needs, would invite a veto of the bill.

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Housing Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- May 16-27 on various housing proposals, including measures to ease FHA mortgage-insurance requirements, establish a Cabinet office for housing and urban affairs and authorize long-term loans for the construction of rental units for persons displaced by urban-renewal projects.

TESTIMONY -- May 16 -- HHFA Administrator Norman P. Mason opposed expanding relocation assistance and establishment of an Urban Affairs Department, but said "the time is near" when such a department should be established.

FHA Commissioner Julian H. Zimmerman opposed Democratic proposals to reduce FHA mortgage-insurance premiums and said the FHA could not reduce its income and "at the same time increase its liabilities without impairing the soundness of its operations".

Urban Renewal Commissioner David M. Walker said the URA had sufficient authority, with the $300 million which was due to become available July 1, to "sustain a program geared to the maximum level of actual accomplishment through the coming fiscal year."

May 17 -- Philadelphia Mayor Richardson Dilworth (D), president of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, recommended a $4 million increase in the authority of the FHA mortgage-insurance program, continuation of the FHA home-improvement loan program, $150 million authority to provide housing for the elderly and the establishment of a Department of Housing and Metropolitan Affairs.

May 19 -- Martin L. Bartling Jr., president of the National Assn. of Home Builders, recommended additional financial facilities for the Federal National Mortgage Assn., either extension or permanent authority for the FHA home mortgage and improvement programs and establishment of a secondary market within the Federal Home Loan Bank system for conventional mortgages.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Nathaniel S. Keith, president of the National Housing Conference, recommended a $1 billion authorization to construct 80,000 low-rent housing units for persons displaced by urban-renewal programs, an authorization of 100,000 additional public housing units, authorizations of $600 million a year for 10 years for urban renewal and an additional $4 billion for the FHA mortgage-insurance program.

May 23 -- Charles Abrams of Americans for Democratic Action recommended new housing programs for low-income groups, to be financed by direct federal loans or through state and local agencies.

May 24 -- Robert M. Morgan of the National Assn. of Mutual Savings Banks said the "great bulk" of housing should be privately financed and that Government aid was warranted only when housing needs could not be met through private financing.

May 25 -- Henry A. Bubb of the U.S. Savings and Loan League said proposals to create a Home Mortgage Corp. to buy and sell conventional loans from members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System would provide an orderly market for the conventional loan, a better geographic distribution of mortgage money and bring into the housing field funds otherwise not available.

Rep. Seymour Halpern (R N.Y.) supported proposals which would maintain the monthly carrying costs of owners of cooperative housing at a level commensurate with their middle-income status.

May 27 -- Philip McCallum, Administrator of the Small Business Administration, opposed a proposal to extend the SBA's disaster loan program to small concerns displaced by urban renewal projects because it would "provide financial assistance solely as a matter of economic relief without any reasonable standard as to the amount or purpose of the loan."

ACTION -- The Subcommittee June 9 wrote and ordered introduced a clean omnibus housing bill.

The full Committee June 20 reported the $1.4 billion omnibus housing bill (HR 12603 -- H Rept 1924).

The report said action must be taken "promptly" to revitalize housing production, which had dropped sharply over the past year. The result, it said, had been "growing distress" in the home-building industry and such related industries as lumber and appliance manufacturing. In order to help boost housing production, the bill provided for "vitally needed liberalization" of the Federal Housing Administration's home mortgage credit terms and increased the authorization for a number of other programs, the report said.

The report said Administration "high-interest-rate, tight-money" policies had caused a 22 percent "slash" in housing starts and should be reversed.

A minority report, signed by all but three Republicans -- Reps. Paul A. Fino (N.Y.), Florence P. Dwyer (N.J.) and Seymour Halpern (N.Y.) -- Said the "bad" outweighed the "good" and the bill required "numerous and extensive amendments". The minority said the bill weakened "existing sound programs", needlessly imposing administrative rigidity, increased authorizations not requested by the Administration and inaugurated new programs without adequate consideration. It cited as examples of undesirable provisions those which permitted the purchase of a $13,500 house under an FHA mortage-insurance contract with no down payment, increases in the urban renewal grant authority and increases in the revolving fund for loans for housing for the elderly.

BILL REPORTED

PROVISIONS -- As reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, HR 12603:

Raised the face value of mortgages the Federal Housing Administration could insure $4 billion, to $41.8 billion.

Extended the federal home-improvement loan guarantee program for two years -- to Oct. 1, 1962 -- and raised the value of loans it could insure from $1,750,000,000 to $2,250,000,000.

Extended the maximum maturity period of FHA-guaranteed mortgages from 30 years to 35 years and removed the required down payment on the first $13,500.

Permitted the FHA to guarantee mortgages on condominium housing (individually owned units in multi-family houses), on small rental housing projects and on land purchased for development.

Permitted the FHA to insure mortgages on one-family houses selling for up to $25,000 (a raise from the previous $22,500 sale-price maximum).

Required a 10 percent down payment for an FHA mortgage-insured house having an appraised value between $13,500 and $20,000, and a 25 percent down payment over that.

Permitted reduction of the FHA mortgage insurance premium from one-half to one-quarter of 1 percent.

Authorized FHA mortgage-insurance on property in older neighborhoods under less stringent risk standards and created the Older Neighborhoods Residential Housing Fund to carry out the program.

Authorized an additional $500 million for college housing loans, raising the loan fund to $1,675,000,000.

Authorized an additional $450 million in urban renewal capital grants.

Increased the $50 million revolving fund set up in 1959 for loans for nonprofit housing for the elderly to $100 million (no money had been appropriated under the existing authorization).

Created a new $25 million revolving fund in the Small Business Administration for 15-year, 4-percent loans for relocation of small businesses displaced by urban renewal.

Authorized an additional $100 million for public facility loans by the Community Facilities Administration.

Raised the 4½ percent interest rate on FHA-insured Capehart military housing to 5½ percent.

NEW FNMA PROGRAMS

Created a new Federal National Mortgage Assn. (FNMA) special assistance fund of $15 million for FNMA purchase of FHA-insured mortgages on nursing homes.

Authorized FNMA to purchase $25 million of FHA-insured mortgages on housing in older neighborhoods; $10 million additional in consumer cooperative mortgages; and $100 million of FHA-insured mortgages on relocation housing.

Increased FNMA special assistance funds by $75 million, to $1,025,000,000, and required FNMA to buy mortgages at par under this program.

Made FNMA a central mortgage bank by various technical changes and by permitting it to make one-year loans in its regular secondary-market operation.

Created the Home Mortgage Corp. with an initial capital stock of $100 million to buy and sell first-mortgage residential loans made by members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

Established a one-year land-development insurance program which would cover mortgages on installations and improvements made by private developers to convert raw land into housing sites.

Extended the hospital construction program authorized under the Defense Housing and Community Facilities and Services Act of 1951 through June 30, 1962 for those who had applied for assistance before June 30, 1953 and were turned down solely because of a lack of funds; authorized a $15 million appropriation.

Rules Committee Roadblock

The omnibus housing bill for 1960 was shelved when the Rules Committee June 28, by a 6-6 vote, refused to grant a rule for House debate on HR 12603. Voting for the rule were six Democrats: Ray J. Madden (Ind.), James J. Delaney (N.Y.), James W. Trimble (Ark.), Homer Thornberry (Texas), Richard Bolling (Mo.) and Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. (Mass.). Against it were Democrats Howard W. Smith (Va.), chairman, and William M. Colmer (Miss.) and Republicans Leo E. Allen (Ill.), Clarence J. Brown (Ohio), B. Carroll Reece (Tenn.) and Hamer H. Budge (Idaho).

The impossibility of overcoming Rules Committee objections stemmed not from the House bill's provisions but from the 25,000 public housing units authorized in the Senate bill. Colmer, traditional foe of the public housing program, reportedly was unwilling to permit the House bill to go to the floor even under a rule prohibiting a public housing amendment; he feared the Senate would insist on its provision in a subsequent conference with the House.

In the post-conventions session which convened Aug. 8 Senate and House leaders were unable to break the stalemate and settled Aug. 31 on the "stop gap" measure (H J Res 784). The next day, the 86th Congress adjourned.

Other Housing Bills

In addition to the omnibus bill, the following housing measures were considered by the Senate in 1960:

- S 1342 -- Provide $100 million for the operation of a Federal Limited-Profit Mortgage Corporation to make loans on housing for middle-income families. Senate Banking and Currency Committee reported (S Rept 1614) June 17.
- S 3278 -- Authorize $100 million in public facility loans to local agencies for the development of commuter services and mass transportation systems, plus the use of federal urban planning grants. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee reported it (S Rept 1591) June 15 and the Senate passed it June 27.
- S 3292 -- Establish a Cabinet-level Department of Housing and Urban Affairs. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee reported it (S Rept 1607) June 16.

The only other housing bill enacted, however, was that which extended the guaranteed and direct loan programs of the Veterans Administration (HR 7903 -- PL 86-665) -- see story p. 278.

VETERANS' HOUSING LOANS

HR 7903 -- Reported by House Veterans' Affairs Committee (H Rept 726) July 28, 1959.
S 3275 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 1646) June 22, 1960.
HR 7903 -- Passed by the House June 29 by a 397-1 roll-call vote. (See p. 460)
● Passed by the Senate June 30 by a voice vote.
PL 86-665 -- Signed into law July 14.

Despite Administration opposition, Congress in 1960 passed and the President signed a bill (HR 7903 -- PL 86-665) to extend for two years both the Veterans Administration's home, farm and business loan guarantee program for World War II veterans (GI loans), and the direct home loan program for both World War II and Korean veterans. The programs were scheduled to expire July 25, 1960 unless extended.

Extension of the two programs was lumped into a single bill when it became clear that omnibus housing measures (S 3670, HR 12603) under consideration by Congress were unlikely to be enacted before the July 25 deadline. (For omnibus housing bills, see p. 271)

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, PL 86-665:

Extended the Veterans Administration's home, farm and business loan-guarantee program for World War II veterans for two years, until July 25, 1962.

Extended for two years, until July 25, 1962, the VA's direct home loan program to World War II and Korean veterans living in rural areas and small cities where private mortgage money was scarce.

Authorized an additional $300-million loan by the Treasury to the direct loan program's revolving fund.

Established a revolving fund for the guaranteed loan program.

Background

REFERENCES -- Veterans' Housing (1957 Almanac p. 600; 1958 Almanac p. 229; 1959 Almanac p. 257).

VA-guaranteed home mortgages (GI loans) were first authorized in the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 (the GI Bill of Rights). The law set up the loan guarantee program which insured loans made to a veteran by a private lender at an interest rate of 4 percent.

The direct home loan program was first authorized by the Housing Act of 1950, a one-year program which authorized direct Government loans to veterans living in rural areas and small cities and towns not near large metropolitan areas where other types of financing were not available. A revolving fund for the program was set up in 1951 and it was subsequently extended for one- or two-year periods.

In 1952 Congress passed a law (PL 82-550) extending to Korean war veterans the same housing benefits already granted to World War II veterans. President Eisenhower Jan. 1, 1955 by Executive Order ended benefits for Korean veterans as of Jan. 31, but the 1950 Housing Act had provided that the guaranteed loan program for Korean veterans would run for 10 years after the termination of the other benefits. The 1955 Executive Order, therefore, automatically set Jan. 31, 1965 as the termination date for the guaranteed loan program for Korean veterans.

President Eisenhower in 1957 pocket vetoed a bill (HR 4602) extending and raising funds for both the guaranteed loan and the direct loan program for World War II veterans, but the 1958 Emergency Housing Act (PL 85-364) extended the programs through July 25, 1960.

In 1959 Congress passed a bill (HR 2256 -- PL 86-73) authorizing additional funds for the direct loan program and raising the interest rates on both direct and guaranteed loans. The President in his Jan. 18, 1960 Budget Message opposed extension of both programs.

House

COMMITTEE -- Veterans' Affairs.

ACTION -- July 28, 1959 reported HR 7903 (H Rept 726) extending both the guaranteed and direct loan programs through July 25, 1962 and authorizing additional funds for the direct loan program. The report said only 35 percent of the World War II veterans, or 4,955,300, had used their benefits for guaranteed loans for homes, business and farms. It said that there was a waiting list of over 50,000 veterans for direct loans for the purchase of homes in rural areas.

Floor Action

The House June 29 passed HR 7903 without amendments by a 397-1 roll-call vote. Rep. Stuyvesant Wainwright (R N.Y.) was the lone dissenter. (For voting, see chart p. 460)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare, Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- April 20 on S 3275, to extend the loan guarantee program for World War II veterans until Feb. 1, 1965.

ACTION -- The full Committee June 22 reported S 3275 (S Rept 1646). The report said that extending the loan guarantee program for World War II veterans until Feb. 1, 1965 would make it coterminus with the one for Korean veterans, and that the program was valuable to veterans and to the building industry as well.

Minority views, signed by Sens. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.), Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and C. Norman Brunsdale (R N.D.), opposed S 3275 because there no longer was "sufficient justification" to continue it.

The Senate June 16 had passed the omnibus housing bill (S 3670) which, although it did not extend the loan guarantee program for World War II veterans, did extend the direct loan program for World War II and Korean veterans for one year, through July 25, 1961.

As reported, S 3275 differed from HR 7903 by: extending the loan guarantee program for World War II veterans through Feb. 1, 1965 rather than July 25, 1962. S 3275 did not extend the direct loan program; HR 7903 extended it for both Korean and World War II veterans through July 25, 1962.

Floor Action

The Senate June 30 passed HR 7903 without amendment by voice vote, and indefinitely postponed its consideration of S 3275.

The only opposition to the bill was voiced by Goldwater, who recommended that veterans instead utilize the Federal Housing Administration's home mortgage insurance program.

RETIRED OFFICERS' JOBS

HR 10959 -- Reported March 21, 1960 by House Armed Services Committee (H Rept 1408).
- Passed, amended, by the House by voice vote April 7.

The House April 7 passed and sent to the Senate a bill (HR 10959) to curb influence practices in the employment of retired officers by defense contractors. In its original version (HR 9682), drafted by Rep. F. Edward Hebert (D La.), chairman of the Armed Services Special Investigations Subcommittee, the bill would have provided criminal penalties for violation of its requirements. A committee amendment adopted on the House floor provided for court-martial proceedings against any retired commissioned officer who negotiated defense contracts for private industry within two years after his release from military service. The Senate Armed Services Committee held a hearing on the bill June 2, but it received no further Senate action.

Background

REFERENCE -- Munitions Lobby (1959 Almanac p. 727).

The spark for 1960 legislation was ignited in three months of intermittent hearings held by Rep. Hebert's Subcommittee from July 7 through Sept. 10, 1959. A parade of witnesses before the group gave conflicting estimates of the extent of the use by defense contractors of retired officers for lobbying purposes in the Pentagon. The Subcommittee's own investigations showed that 72 top defense contractors (rated by dollar volume of contracts) employed 1,426 retired officers, of whom 251 were retired flag or general officers.

Suggestions for remedial legislation included the proposal of Rep. Alfred E. Santangelo (D N.Y.) that any firm be made ineligible for defense contracts if it hired retired military or naval officers above the rank of colonel within five years of their release from active duty. Santangelo's measure was defeated in the House by a 125-147 teller vote June 3, 1959 when he moved to make it a rider to the defense appropriation bill. Less stringent remedies were supported by Adm. Arthur W. Radford and General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, both former chairmen of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. They endorsed a "cooling-off period" of two to three years before retired officers could engage in contract negotiations with the Pentagon.

Subcommittee Report

Summarizing its findings in a report adopted Dec. 9, 1959, the Hebert Subcommittee declared that it was "satisfied that legislation is needed" and that such legislation "should be uniform between the services."

Simultaneously with the release of the report Jan. 18, Hebert introduced HR 9682, which would have provided a two-year "cooling-off period" during which all personnel -- civilian or military -- leaving the Defense Department would be subject to a $10,000 fine and two years imprisonment if they accepted compensation for helping a private company secure a Government defense contract. The bill also denied retirement pay to military officers for any part of the two-year period during which they engaged in selling to the Government, and required Pentagon registration and publication of all officers employed by military contractors.

The bill also provided criminal penalties for Government employees who aided anyone before a department, agency or tribunal in any contract, claim or other matter in which the Government was a party.

Another provision changed existing "dual compensation" laws to give the Secretary of Defense more opportunity to hire qualified retired officers at competitive salaries.

The Subcommittee called on the services themselves to set up a "code of ethical conduct" for retired officers.

Hebert said the purpose of HR 9682 was to "outlaw the 'salesman' for two years" and to "bar selling information acquired while in federal commissioned service or otherwise, for a period of two years." However, the bill would not prevent retired officers and civilians from serving as employees, officers or corporate directors of defense contract firms during the "cooling-off period".

The Subcommittee approved a definition of "selling" to be used, had the legislation been adopted, as "an expression of Congressional intent, whenever and wherever the words 'selling' or 'sale' are used in the law": "Selling to the Government includes all activities which bring a contractor and his representatives into contact with officials of the Department of Defense for the purpose of obtaining contracts from that Department for the procurement of tangibles or intangibles in existence at the time or to be produced in the future; and the participants in such transactions are a part of that process."

The report stressed that an eventual sale had to be preceded by "proposal, development and production". Each of these, as an integral part of a sale, would come under the Subcommittee's definition of selling in the law and would be subject to the law's requirements and penalties.

NEED FOR LEGISLATION

In asserting the need for legislation and for uniformity of regulations over the employment of retired officers, the Subcommittee noted: "Not all influence can be reached by the laws, nor is influence all bad. But influence is prejudicial to the free and unfettered decisions of the Government when it is personal, and when it subordinates merits to the person of the proponent. Where founded on fear of reprisal, it can be ruinous.

"Moreover, the three services have interpreted existing laws differently; and these statutes (governing the matter) differ in application between services."

Reporting that testimony on the extent of influence exercised by retired officers on contract decisions contained "several obvious inconsistencies", the Subcommittee noted that "influence is a very subtle thing." "The 'coincidence' of contracts and personal contacts with firms represented by retired officers and retired civilian officials sometimes raise serious doubts as to the complete objectivity of some of these decisions."

House

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services.

ACTION -- March 7 tentatively approved amendments to Hebert's original draft, HR 9682. Proposed by Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.), the amendments deleted provisions making Defense Department personnel liable to a $10,000 fine and two years imprisonment if they accepted compensation for helping a private company secure a Government defense contract during the two years after they left active service. Although Hebert said Vinson's changes would "gut" the bill, he later agreed to introduce the revised measure and said he believed it still had enough "teeth" in it to be effective.

As approved by the Committee March 16 and reported March 21 (HR 10959 -- H Rept 1408), the revised bill provided that if a commissioned officer, within two years after his retirement, engaged in any sales transaction with the Defense Department or one of the armed services, he would forfeit his retirement pay for the time so engaged during the two-year period. The provision did not apply to officers who had been on active duty less than eight years and had never, during those years, done procurement, maintenance or supply work.

COURT-MARTIAL PENALTY

The bill was approved March 16 by a 34-1 vote, Rep. Charles S. Gubser (R Calif.) voting against, after the Committee again rejected Hebert's provision of criminal penalties -- this time, applied only to officers -- by a 4-28 vote. But on April 5 the Committee strengthened the bill by adopting an amendment sponsored by Rep. Paul J. Kilday (D Texas) which provided courts-martial for violators of the bill's requirements. The new penalty, approved by a 25-8 vote, was attached to the bill only after Hebert indicated he might lead a fight on the House floor to strengthen the bill.

The Committee report adopted the Subcommittee's recommended definition of "selling."

Floor Action

The House passed HR 10959 by voice vote April 7, after accepting by voice vote the Kilday amendment and rejecting a motion to recommit the bill to the Armed Services Committee, made by Rep. Katharine St. George (R N.Y.).

On a 70-101 standing vote the House defeated an amendment to the Kilday committee amendment, proposed by Alfred E. Santangelo (D N.Y.). It would have subjected to court-martial any retired flag or general officer, or any officer whose primary duties involved procurement, who accepted any employment with a defense contractor within two years after leaving the service.

House debate April 6 and 7 focused on an amendment by Hebert providing for criminal prosecution both of retired commissioned officers who, within the two-year period, negotiated defense contracts for private industry, and of contractors who employed the officers.

Hebert made three separate attempts to offer the amendment and each time was ruled out of order. On his first two tries the presiding officer ruled that the proposed criminal penalties came within the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee, which had not yet considered the bill. In his third attempt Hebert deleted the criminal penalties and added a provision which prohibited the contractor violating the two-year provision from obtaining defense contracts within the next two years and deprived the officer who violated the provision of his retired pay for the next two years. The amendment was ruled non-germane because it placed a penalty on the contractor as well as on the commissioned officer. Following the third ruling, Hebert introduced a bill (HR 11657) containing his criminal penalty proposals which was referred to the House Judiciary Committee.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 10959:

Provided that any commissioned officer of the armed services who, within two years after his release from active duty, sold or in any way participated in the sale of anything to the Defense Department or armed forces, either for his own benefit or for a third party, would lose his retirement pay for two years.

Exempted from this provision any officer who served on active duty for less than eight years and whose primary duties had not included procurement or supply.

Required any retired commissioned officer who intended to negotiate sales contracts with the Defense Department, either for himself or for a third party from whom he had agreed to accept compensation, to file a statement of his intentions with the Department.

Required the Defense Department to establish offices of enrollment and appoint a director of enrollment to administer the program and make the records available to the public.

Required that information forms be sent to all retired commissioned officers.

Required every defense contractor to inform the Defense Department of all retired military officers in its employ or in a subcontractor's employ.

Provided that any officer or contractor who failed to supply the required information be denied retirement pay or contract payments until the information was supplied.

Permitted officers of the rank of five-star general or admiral (who technically remain on active duty even though retired) to be employed by defense contractors.

Directed that court-martial proceedings be brought against officers who violated any provision of the act.

DEBATE -- April 7 -- Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.) -- Since the exact nature of the problem is not known, it is unwise "to add a new provision to the Criminal Code to single out retired officers". The substitute bill offered by Kilday "makes a truly sound approach to this whole matter".

Kilday -- Even if a firm hired retired officers for the influence they have, it would not hire one whom the law prohibited it from hiring.

Santangelo -- The provisions of the Kilday bill "are milquetoast and a powder puff approach to this serious problem. We have to have effective sanctions and effective penalties."

Hebert -- The Committee, by recommending court-martial proceedings, "did confess to the general public that it was in error (and put) some teeth into the new version. Of course, they are only baby teeth...."

Arthur Winstead (D Miss.) -- "I hope the Judiciary Committee will take action on the Hebert bill (HR 11657) introduced today. I definitely feel that contractors should be held just as responsible (for influence peddling) as retired military personnel."

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Referral of Hebert's bill (HR 11657) containing a criminal penalties to the House Judiciary Committee resulted only in the further airing of the arguments between Hebert and Vinson, who testified during Judiciary Antitrust Subcommittee hearings May 25 and June 1. The Subcommittee took no other action on the bill.

Reports submitted to the Subcommittee by the Departments of Defense and Justice requested that the definition of "selling" be limited to transactions involving or resulting in "direct sales". Though the Defense Department reported that it "would not object" to the imposition of criminal penalties on retired Reserve officers (who are not subject to court-martial) and on defense contractors, it did not urge such a step.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services.
HEARING -- June 2 on HR 10959.

Reps. Hebert and Vinson carried their disagreements to the Senate Committee hearing June 2. Vinson suggested making Reserve officers, as well as retired Regular officers, subject to court-martial proceedings, asserting that such a change would remove inequities in the House-passed bill. Hebert, however, denied that courts-martial were a sufficient punishment; he said only one general officer had ever been tried in such a manner. He also sought criminal penalties for the contractor who violated the bill's requirements, stating "I think the court-martial is a very ineffective method of approach.... It stigmatizes the officer and lets the contractor who holds the bait of the dollar go scot free."

In other testimony, Assistant Secretary of Defense Charles C. Finucane asked for the removal of a provision requiring contractors to report all retired officers on their payrolls each time a defense contract was negotiated. Finucane argued that the provision was burdensome to the contractor and, because of its penalties, might work an unnecessary hardship on competent, skilled and young retiring officers whom contractors would not risk hiring.

All three witnesses agreed that the coverage of the bill was too wide and could well be reduced to include only officers of the field grade of colonel and above. Junior officers, it was pointed out, had very little influence to "peddle". The three also concurred with members of the Senate Committee in asking clearer legislative language for parts of the bill. But as Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) pointed out, the problem of loophole-proof language was a difficult one "because the problem is essentially ethical."

INDUSTRIAL SECURITY ORDER

HR 8121 -- Reported by House Un-American Activities Committee Sept. 2, 1959 (H Rept 1122).
● Passed by voice vote of the House Feb. 2, 1960.

A 1959 Supreme Court ruling invalidating the government's industrial security program for defense industries resulted in both an Executive Order revising the program to accord with the Court's views and a House-passed bill reasserting the validity of the old procedures. The key point of the Court ruling voided the original Defense Department program, which kept informants' names secret in security clearance cases, because it had not been authorized by either the President or the Congress.

HR 8121, sponsored by Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, was reported Sept. 2, 1959 (H Rept 1122) by the Committee "specifically to overcome" the June 29, 1959 ruling in the case of engineer William L. Greene, who had resigned his defense job after the Navy, in 1953, refused to give him industrial security clearance. (1959 Almanac p. 206) Greene's successful appeal of the use of secret informants under the Navy program also spurred hearings on revision of government security procedures in the Senate Judiciary Constitutional Rights Subcommittee in July, 1959.

Contrasting with Rep. Walter's bill was Executive Order No. 10865, issued by President Eisenhower Feb. 20, 1960. Rather than giving Executive approval to the unrestricted use of confidential informants, the Order provided that informants' names could be kept secret only for certain specific reasons. It also granted additional rights for persons accused as security risks to confront and cross-examine their accusers.

House

Passage of HR 8121 Feb. 2 on the Consent Calendar, without dissent, came as a surprise to opponents of the measure who had favored legislation in which an accused security risk could confront and cross-examine his accusers. Some House Members later told newsmen that they inadvertently let the bill slip through because they had not noticed it on the Consent Calendar, which is normally reserved for non-controversial legislation. Walter had said Sept. 11, 1959, when the bill was first scheduled for House consideration, that he would not call it up for passage, as the White House preferred to handle the matter by Executive Order.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 8121 made the following amendments to the 1950 Subversive Activities Control Act:

Authorized the Secretary of Defense to prescribe uniform criteria to determine eligibility for access to classified defense information by defense contractors and their employees.

Authorized the Secretary to prescribe procedures for disposition of security risk cases.

Stipulated that such procedures be designed to prevent disclosure of information affecting national security, safety or public interest or tending to compromise investigative sources or methods.

Neither HR 8121 nor three Senate bills (S 2314, 2392, 2416) on the same subject received any action in the Senate.

Executive Order

The President's order carried these provisions:

Authorized the Secretaries of State and Defense, the Atomic Energy Commissioners and Administrators of the the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and Federal Aviation Agency to prescribe "restrictions and other safeguards" to protect classified information in defense industries.

Stipulated that access to classified information could not be finally denied or revoked unless the applicant had been given: a written statement of the reasons for the denial which was "as comprehensive and detailed as the national security permits"; a reasonable opportunity to reply in writing; an opportunity to appear personally before the department head concerned to support his written statement; a reasonable time to prepare for that appearance; an opportunity to be represented by counsel; an opportunity to cross-examine persons either orally or through written interrogatories on the charges; a written notice of the final decision in the case, and if an adverse finding, a statement of whether the head of the department found for or against him on each allegation.

Ruled out confrontation and cross-examination when the department head supplying the statement of charges found either that the informer was a "confidential informant...engaged in obtaining intelligence information for the Government" and disclosure of his identity would be harmful to the national interest; or that the statement was reliable and the national security would be harmed by giving security clearance even though the accuser could not testify because of death, severe illness or "some other cause" determined to be "good and sufficient."

Directed that if these exceptions were invoked: the accused must be given a summary of the information; consideration must be given to lack of cross-examination; and a final adverse decision made only after the department head personally reviewed the case.

Provided for consideration of other records subject to rebuttal without authenticating witnesses or inspection by the applicant if classified only when a department head had determined the records to be material to national security.

Provided that, since only the AEC has statutory power to subpena witnesses, the other agencies could invite witnesses to testify.

Stated that determinations were only in terms of national interest and "in no sense" a determination on an applicant's loyalty.

BROADCASTING TREATIES

Execs A, G -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (Exec Rept 2) Feb. 11, 1960.
- Approved by the Senate, by a 76-8 roll-call vote, Feb. 23. (See p. 477)
- Ratifications signed by the President March 9 for Exec A and March 10 for Exec G.

The Senate in February, by a 76-8 roll-call vote, ratified two agreements to harmonize radio broadcasting practices in the North American area by assigning AM radio frequency priorities. (For voting, see chart p. 477)

The treaties were the North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement (NARBA -- Executive A, 82nd Congress, 1st session) negotiated by the United States, Canada, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica and the Bahamas; and an Agreement between the United States and Mexico (Executive G, 85th Congress, 1st session).

PROVISIONS -- Exec A provided a basic pattern for use of AM radio frequencies by prescribing engineering standards, procedures, classes of stations and frequency priorities. It also provided for a plenipotentiary conference four years after the agreement entered into force.

Exec G provided similarly for the use of AM radio frequencies between the United States and Mexico, and for consultations between the two countries over any matter in dispute.

Both treaties would remain in force for five years after ratification. The NARBA would remain in force after that until renegotiated. The Mexican treaty could be terminated prior to five years by either party.

BACKGROUND -- Exec A (NARBA) was submitted to the Senate by President Harry S. Truman in 1951. A similar earlier treaty and interim agreement were in effect from 1941-49. The Mexican agreement was submitted by President Eisenhower in 1957. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee Feb. 11 recommended their ratification (Exec Rept 2). The Committee said action on the NARBA had been delayed because of opposition, first, by several large farm organizations and the Clear Channel Broadcasting Service, and later by the Daytime Broadcasters Assn. (DBA). Opposition by farm groups and clear channel stations was based mainly on Mexico not being a party to the NARBA agreement, and the argument that farm broadcasts would be impaired through lack of ample channel protection.

This opposition, except for that of DBA, was withdrawn following the signing of the Mexican treaty. The DBA twice unsuccessfully petitioned the Federal Communications Commission for extension of its daytime hours, and said if extension were not granted, daytime stations operating on channels assigned to Mexico would be precluded by the treaty from broadcasting for longer hours.

The Committee said it believed "the national interest will be injured by any further delay," and that without ratification there would be increasing interference by foreign broadcasts in night broadcasts by U.S. stations. The treaties were supported by the State Department, FCC and major broadcasting networks.

DEBATE -- Feb. 23 -- Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- The FCC had given "convincing testimony that engineering studies show" that daytime stations' broadcasting hours should not be extended.

Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) -- Opposed the treaties because he was sure that "engineeringwise, this problem can be whipped within five years."

COMMUNITY TV, BOOSTERS

S 1886 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 908) Sept. 4, 1959.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote Sept. 9.
- Reported, amended, by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 1888) June 16, 1960.
- Passed by the House by voice vote June 24.
- Senate, by voice vote, agreed to House amendment June 28.

PL 86-609 -- Signed into law July 7.

S 2653 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 923) Sept. 8, 1959.
- Recommitted by a 39-38 roll-call vote of the Senate May 18, 1960. (See p. 495)

Congress in 1960 considered two proposals to improve television service for smaller communities. It completed action on one of them, a measure (S 1886) to legalize television booster stations, of which there are an estimated 1,000, which had been operating for some years without authorization by the Federal Communications Commission.

The other proposal (S 2653), recommitted by the Senate, would have provided for licensing and regulation of the controversial community antenna TV systems (CATV), which have some 760 members serving an estimated 500,000 TV sets in 44 states. Recommittal of

S 2653 left community television stations unregulated, since the FCC claimed it had no jurisdiction over them under existing law.

BOOSTER STATIONS

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 1886 amended the Communications Act of 1934 to give the FCC discretion to let existing TV booster stations operate even though they had been built without FCC construction permits (ordinarily a requirement for permission to operate). Booster stations built in the future would have to obtain FCC construction permits before construction in order to be eligible to broadcast legally.

S 1886 also permitted the FCC to let booster stations -- both those existing and those built in the future -- broadcast even if not manned by licensed operators.

Background

Proposals for providing better television service for remote, rural communities had been under consideration both by Congress and the Federal Communications Commission for some years.

Booster stations extend TV service to remote areas by picking up weak, distant signals through a strategically located antenna and rebroadcasting them locally on the same channel at low power. They are cooperatively financed in most cases, with contributions solicited throughout communities or through memberships in TV clubs to cover maintenance and operation.

The FCC had refused to authorize construction of booster stations on grounds they might cause interference with airplane communications, and in December 1958 had ordered the stations shut down. In January 1959, however, the FCC ordered a reevaluation of the situation and then recommended they be legalized because of the large number of people dependent upon them.

House

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ACTION -- June 16 reported S 1886 (H Rept 1888) and said booster stations were "technically the simplest and apparently the least expensive means" of extending TV service to remote communities. During a June 6 hearing on the bill FCC Chairman Frederick W. Ford supported it as a means of helping the FCC deal with "a problem that calls for the earliest possible solution".

Floor Action

The House June 24 passed S 1886 by voice vote, with a technical Committee amendment.

DEBATE -- June 24 -- Keith Thomson (R Wyo.) -- About 60 percent of Wyoming TV viewers depended on booster systems and at least one-fourth of the people there could not expect to receive a suitable TV signal by any other means.

Oren Harris (D Ark.) -- The Committee approved the bill after receiving assurance from the FCC that "appropriate regulations can and will be drawn to keep interference from such operations at a minimum".

Senate

The Senate, which had passed S 1886 Sept. 9, 1959, June 28 agreed by voice vote to the House amendment, sending the bill to the White House.

COMMUNITY TV ANTENNAS

CATV systems are mainly privately owned, require connections with individual homes and are financed through individual subscription fees and monthly payments. They provide TV programs from distant cities by retransmission from antennas at high, local points, where signals are converted to other channels, and then distributed to homes of subscribers by cables.

Licensing of CATV had been urged by those who held that, without regulation, community antennas eventually might drive local TV stations out of business. Opponents of licensing said regulation would reduce sharply the best, if not the only, means many rural areas had to obtain any TV at all.

Senate

The Senate May 18 recommitted, by a 39-38 roll-call vote, the bill (S 2653) to require licensing and regulation of community antenna television systems (CATV) by the Federal Communications Commission. The action, in effect, killed the bill on which the Senate spent two days in heated debate, punctuated by criticisms of lobbying tactics against the bill. The motion recommitting the bill to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee was offered by Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) one of the bill's chief opponents. The Senate also tabled, by a 38-36 roll-call vote, a motion to reconsider its recommittal vote. (For voting, see chart p. 495)

Proponents of the bill charged that CATV spokesmen, including the National Community Television Assn., at first agreed to support the measure if amended but then decided to oppose it. Amendments worked out in earlier negotiations with CATV spokesmen were adopted on the floor but failed to save the measure. Sen. John O. Pastore (D R.I.), floor manager of the bill, May 17 said the FCC at first had been "rather lukewarm" on the proposal, but he read a May 16 message from the agency which said CATV's ability to intercept first-run programs and redistribute them in advance of local broadcasts "gives rise to an inequitable competitive disadvantage...."

Sen. Gordon Allott (R Colo.) May 18 said the bill "is not going to hurt anyone except those who compete unfairly with other people". He introduced an amendment to require CATV systems to get permission from originating broadcasters before retransmitting (an issue already before the courts) but withdrew it at Pastore's urging.

Sen. Norris Cotton (R N.H.) May 18 said "some of us who oppose the bill do not oppose it, as has been intimated, because we are carrying the flag for CATV." He said he was "interested in protecting the means by which we who live in mountainous areas can get good TV service".

BACKGROUND -- The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Sept. 8, 1959 reported S 2653 (S Rept 923). The report said that unrestrained CATV operations might result eventually in large regions or entire states being deprived of all local TV service. Hearings were held in 1958-59.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ON D.C. SUFFRAGE

S J Res 39 -- Reported July 22, 1959 by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 561).
- Passed Senate, amended, by a 70-18 roll-call vote Feb. 2, 1960. (See p. 473)
- Reported, amended, by House Judiciary Committee May 31 (H Rept 1698).

H J Res 757 -- Reported by House Judiciary Committee June 9, 1960 (H Rept 1770).

S J Res 39 -- Passed by the House, amended, by voice vote June 14.
- Senate agreed to House amendments June 16, by voice vote.
- Submitted to the states for ratification June 21, 1960.

By deleting two controversial Constitutional amendments proposed by the Senate in S J Res 39, the House Judiciary Committee assured Congressional approval of a third amendment that would permit citizens of the District of Columbia to vote in Presidential elections. The amendment, as it completed its course of Congressional consideration June 16, 1960, required ratification by 38 states within seven years in order to take effect. It would then become the 23rd Amendment to the Constitution -- unless some later proposal were ratified more quickly.

Originally, S J Res 39, the vehicle for the District suffrage amendment, consisted only of a proposal to permit state governors to make temporary appointments to the House of Representatives under emergency conditions. As amended by roll-call votes of the Senate Feb. 2, 1960, the bill also called for a Constitutional amendment prohibiting the imposition of a poll tax or any other tax or property qualification as a condition for voting in federal elections (adopted by a roll-call vote of 72-16) and the D.C. suffrage amendment (adopted by a roll-call vote of 63-25).

The bill was approved by voice vote of the House June 14 after the emergency appointments and poll tax amendments had been deleted by the House Judiciary Committee.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the states for ratification, the Constitutional amendment proposed in S J Res 39 would:

Permit the District of Columbia to appoint, as Congress may direct, a number of electors for President and Vice President equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which the District would be entitled if it were a state, but not more than the number to which the least populous state is entitled (in effect, three electors).

Authorize Congress to prescribe the qualifications of the District's electors and voters and to provide for the conduct, manner, time and place of elections.

Provide for expiration of the amendment if not ratified by the necessary three-quarters of the states within seven years (June 1967).

22nd Amendment

The 22nd Amendment to the Constitution, which took effect in February 1951 when ratified by the necessary number of states, prohibits a President from being elected more than twice and from serving more than 10 years if he succeeded to the Presidency. It was passed by the House 285-121 (D 47-120; R 238-0; Ind. 0-1) Feb. 6, 1947 and by the Senate, 59-23 (D 13-23; R 46-0), March 12, 1947. (1947 Almanac p. 69) Mr. Eisenhower was the first President to be affected by the Amendment.

Background

REFERENCES -- House Appointments (1955 Almanac p. 380); Poll Tax (1959 Almanac p. 84); Filibusters (1957 Almanac p. 570); D.C. Home Rule (1959 Almanac p. 313).

Two of the three proposed Constitutional amendments had reached the Senate floor in previous Congresses, but only the amendment on filling House vacancies had been approved. The anti-poll tax amendment had never before come to a Senate vote. A summary of past actions on each of the three amendments follows.

House appointments - Introduced by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) in 1959, S J Res 39 would have supplemented Article I, Section 2, Clause 4 of the Constitution, which empowers state governors to call special elections for vacant House seats, and the 17th Amendment, which permits state governors to fill vacant Senate, but not House, seats after being given the power to do so by their state legislatures. S J Res 39 would have given the governors the right to appoint replacements for vacant House seats "on any date that the total number of vacancies in the House of Representatives exceeds half of the authorized membership thereof".

Similar amendments had passed the Senate by a 70-1 vote, June 4, 1954, and again by a 76-3 vote, May 19, 1955. (1955 Almanac p. 380). In neither case did the House act on the proposal.

S J Res 39 was reported July 22, 1959 (S Rept 561) by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which noted the slowness of the existing constitutional system for replacing Members of the House and warned that such a "constitutional gap" was the "height of folly" in the light "of the tremendous destructive power of thermonuclear weapons."

Poll Tax -- Support for a Constitutional amendment to repeal the poll tax was led by Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), who had introduced such measures in every Congress since 1949. His proposal, embodied in S J Res 126 which he introduced Aug. 6, 1959 with 66 co-sponsors, would have abolished the poll tax and other property qualifications for voting in federal elections.

The Holland amendment was the subject of hearings in the Senate Judiciary Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee, Aug. 16 and 17, 1959. As ordered reported to the full Judiciary Committee Sept. 2, 1959, it would have mainly affected the five states still retaining the poll tax as a prerequisite for voters: Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Virginia and Texas. It was considered a more moderate approach than earlier efforts approved by the House, which sought to ban the poll tax by statute rather than by Constitutional amendment.

The argument over poll-tax elimination revolved on both the substance and the method of the proposals involved. Language in Article I, Section 2 and in the 17th Amendment to the Constitution set the "qualifications" for voters in federal elections as those "requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature." The issue thus was whether or not the poll tax was a "qualification" that states could properly set. Both the advocates of a Constitutional amendment and those who favored direct statutory action also feared that a victory for the opposing method might set a precedent which would be followed in other quasi-constitutional questions.

Holland, in 1957, warned that "the passage of a statute which we believe to be hopelessly unconstitutional...would...invite a general assault upon the plenary control by the states of their own election machinery." Testifying against S J Res 126, Aug. 17, 1959, Clarence Mitchell, Washington representative of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, an organization seeking the elimination of the poll tax, said: "To accept the amendment method of elimination would appear to be conceding that a law passed by Congress would be unconstitutional. This would be a bad precedent, inasmuch as the constitutional issue is raised whenever a piece of civil rights legislation is considered."

Support for Holland's approach to the problem had grown since 1949, when his amendment had 10 Southern Senators as co-sponsors, to the point where both Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) and Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) were among the 66 co-sponsors in 1959. His proposal had never been reported to the Senate from committee. The statutory approach, as supported by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and 23 others in a floor amendment to the Holland proposal, had been approved five times between 1942 and 1949 by the House but had died each time in the Senate. Filibusters in 1942, 1944 and 1946 prevented Senate consideration of House-passed anti-poll tax legislation.

S J Res 126, like its predecessors, would have affected only federal, not state, elections and would not have removed restrictions against paupers and other persons supported at public expense or by charitable institutions. Although approved Sept. 2, 1959 by the Senate Judiciary Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee, its chances of early approval by the full Judiciary Committee, chaired by Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.), appeared slight.

D.C. Suffrage - Citizens of the District of Columbia have not had a vote in the election of the President and the Vice President since 1800 when the capital city was established. Their right to choose their local government (home rule) ended in 1876 when Congress withdrew the charter it had previously granted. A Constitutional amendment clearly was necessary in order to provide electoral votes to D.C. residents, but it was widely agreed that a non-voting Delegate in the House and election of local officials could be authorized by statute.

A hearing on a proposed Constitutional amendment for D.C. suffrage (S J Res 138) was held Sept. 9, 1959 by the Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee, which reported the bill Sept. 11 by a 5-1 vote to its parent Judiciary Committee, whose chairman, Sen. Eastland, had cast the only vote against Subcommittee approval. In opening the Sept. 9 hearing, Subcommittee Chairman Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) declared that the proposed amendment, giving the District electoral votes in national elections and non-voting Delegates to the House, the number of both to be determined by the decennial census, had "nothing to do with home rule". Supporting the movements for both home rule and national suffrage, he said that the proposed amendment was "not an either-or proposition".

Another view of the relationship between national suffrage and home rule came in a statement to the House District Committee by Benjamin M. McKelway, editor of the Washington Star. Opposing the Administration-supported territorial home rule bill, McKelway said (in a statement reprinted in the Kefauver Subcommittee hearings): "The antidote for this poison (denial of the right to vote) is to forget the unhappy attempts to resurrect home rule.... The antidote is to give the people of Washington voting rights in Congress, in the choice of President and Vice President...."

An attempt to substitute the Constitutional amendment granting national suffrage for S 1681, a bill to give the District home rule, was defeated by a 15-80 roll-call vote of the Senate July 15, 1959. (1959 Almanac p. 426) The substitute had been proposed by Sen. Francis Case (R S.D.), who later co-sponsored S J Res 138, introduced by Sens. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) and J. Glenn Beall (R Md.).

Senate

The Senate began consideration of S J Res 39, the one proposed Constitutional amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee, Jan. 26, 1960 and voted Feb. 2 to send a three-amendment package to the House. Voting first on whether to incorporate the language of Holland's anti-poll tax measure into S J Res 39, the Senate approved the amendment Feb. 2 by a roll-call vote of 72-16. It further amended the emergency appointments resolution by adding Sen. Keating's proposed D.C. suffrage amendment (S J Res 126) by a roll-call vote of 63-25, Feb. 2. The vote on passage of the three-part joint resolution Feb. 2 was 70-18, 11 more than the required two-thirds majority. (For voting, see chart p. 473)

Before approving Sen. Holland's Constitutional amendment approach toward elimination of the poll tax, the Senate rejected the alternate, statutory approach sponsored in a floor amendment by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.). The proposed substitute, which would have eliminated the poll tax by direct statute, was tabled by a roll-call vote of 50-37, Feb. 2.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the House, S J Res 39:

Proposed three amendments to the Constitution and specified that any one of them would become effective on ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states within seven years of the date of submission to the states by Congress.

The first amendment would empower the Governors to fill vacancies in the House of Representatives "on any date that the total number of vacancies... exceeds half of the authorized membership" (219, currently). The special appointive power would be limited to 60 days, and a person thus appointed would sit until a successor was chosen in a special election.

The second amendment would prohibit the use of the poll tax or any property qualification as a prerequisite to voting in federal elections (with the exception of restrictions against paupers and other persons supported at public expense or by charitable institutions).

The third amendment would provide for the election by the residents of the District of Columbia of the number of Delegates to the House of Representatives to which they would be entitled if the District were a state, with the Congress determining whether these Delegates would have voting privileges; and would authorize District residents to participate in Presidential elections by electing as many members of the electoral college as the District would be entitled to if it were a state. (With its population as of 1960 the District thus would be entitled to two Delegates in the House and four votes in the electoral college.)

DEBATE ON HOUSE VACANCIES

DEBATE -- Jan. 27 -- Kefauver -- Supported his constitutional amendment to allow Governors to fill vacancies in the House in the event of national disaster. "Under the Constitution as it now stands, only the House of Representatives could not be reconstituted after a devastating attack.... The amendment would plug a loophole in the Constitution...which could not have been foreseen by the Founding Fathers."

Feb. 1 -- John Stennis (D Miss.) -- Opposed the Kefauver amendment, calling it "unwise, unsound and unnecessary." "Such a measure only disturbs our people, is an affront to the Members of the House of Representatives, and is an encouragement to those in the Kremlin to make plans in regard to an attack upon us."

POLL TAX DEBATE

Jan. 28 -- Holland -- "Banning of the poll-tax requirement is not a panacea or an immediate cure-all, but it does operate as a permissive opening of the door for the registration and participation of larger numbers of our citizens, both white and colored."

Javits -- "The path of constitutional amendments is thorny and time-consuming." Also, it would be a mistake to establish the precedent that voting rights should be ensured by constitutional amendment rather than through legislation.

Holland -- "The carefully documented argument I have made down through the years as to the absolute necessity for a constitutional amendment to accomplish the result is unanswerable."

Feb. 2 -- Javits -- Statutory ban of the poll tax would be constitutional because the tax is a burden upon the right to vote for federal officials.

Jan. 28 -- Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- Constitutional amendment is the proper way to eliminate the poll tax. Attempts to ban the poll tax by statute have been made in Congress for many years by "those who prefer an issue to results."

Jan. 29 -- James O. Eastland (D Miss.) -- "I believe in the poll tax.... A person who does not care enough for the franchise to desire to pay a poll tax as a qualification should not be permitted to vote, because I do not believe he cares enough about his citizenship."

Feb. 1 -- Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) -- The Javits amendment would be "a rape of the Constitution.... I realize that it means a great deal to some persons to hasten the process so that they may attempt to show their constituents that they will get at the throats of the Southerners faster."

Feb. 2 -- Stennis -- "Voting is a privilege; it is not a right."

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- "The privilege of voting is derived from the state and not from the national Government."

DISTRICT SUFFRAGE DEBATE

Feb. 2 -- Keating -- If his amendment were approved, "our action would have international impact. We would be demonstrating to the whole world that American democracy begins at home -- that we practice what we preach.... The population of the District of Columbia exceeds the population of 12 states which have full representation rights in both the House and Senate. Residents of the District of Columbia pay well over $350 million annually in federal taxes.... Taxation without representation is still the lot of our local citizens."

J. Glenn Beall (R Md.) -- The amendment would "give some 800,000 disenfranchised people the right to be first-class citizens."

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

HEARINGS -- April 6 and 7, 1960, on S J Res 39.

ACTION -- Reported the joint resolution, amended (H Rept 1698), May 31 and an identical resolution (H J Res 757) June 9 (H Rept 1770).

Faced with the apparent impossibility of gaining Committee approval for the three-part resolution passed by the Senate, Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) proposed, and the Committee agreed, to strike out the anti-poll tax and emergency appointments amendments and water down the provision for D.C. suffrage. No non-voting House Delegates were to be permitted and the District's total electoral vote would be limited to that of the least populous state, rather than being made dependent on the Census. The Committee version of S J Res 39 was reported May 31 (H Rept 1698).

Celler defended his Committee's actions by arguing that any stronger bill would have failed to get past the House Rules Committee and muster a two-thirds vote of the full House. He promised to support an independent attempt to get the poll-tax ban through the next Congress.

To get a closed rule for floor consideration of the revised D.C. suffrage amendment, Celler June 8 agreed to a Rules Committee recommendation that his Committee report the bill with a House number (H J Res 757).

Floor Action

The House passed H J Res 757 by voice vote June 14 and then gave unanimous consent to the reinstatement of the original Senate bill number -- a maneuver which precluded the possibility that the amended measure would be referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee after House passage.

DEBATE -- June 14 -- Celler said Sen. Holland had promised not to insist on attaching the poll tax amendment to the D.C. suffrage resolution. In return, Celler said he would join Holland in the fight to repeal the poll tax by Constitutional amendment in 1961.

William M. McCulloch (R Ohio) -- "Amending the Constitution to grant the right of franchise in Presidential elections will in no way diminish the legislative power of Congress over the District."

Basil L. Whitener (D N.C.) -- "This resolution should not be confused with the home rule agitation which has been so prevalent...in recent days."

FINAL ACTION

The Senate June 16 agreed to the House changes in S J Res 39 by voice vote and sent the proposed amendment to the General Services Administration, through which it was submitted to the states June 21.

Hawaii and Massachusetts were the first two states to ratify, Hawaii by unanimous vote of both its House (June 22) and its Senate (June 23).

D.C. HOME RULE

The 86th Congress, although approving a constitutional amendment granting the citizens of the District national suffrage, again refused them local self-government. For the fifth time in 10 years, the House District Committee proved the insurmountable obstacle in the path of home rule legislation approved by the Senate. Supporters of home rule in the House gained 204 of the necessary 219 names on a petition to discharge the Committee from further consideration of pending home rule legislation, but failed to bring the bill to the floor. (See Fact Sheet on Discharge Petitions, p. 247)

The Senate on July 15, 1959, passed by a voice vote S 1681, a bill reported by the Senate District Committee July 7 (S Rept 477). The bill would have given the District an elected mayor, a nine-member city council and a non-voting Delegate in the House. (1959 Almanac p. 426.)

In the House District Committee S 1681 was considered along with HR 4630, an Administration-supported measure giving the District territorial status with a Governor appointed by the President, an elected 15-member legislative assembly and a non-voting Delegate in the House. For the first time in 10 years, the House District Committee held hearings on the home rule proposals.

The discharge petition, filed Aug. 20, 1959 by Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.), would have had the effect of by-passing both the House Rules and House District Committees in an effort to get floor consideration of HR 4630. By July 3, when Congress recessed for the national political conventions, the drive for signatures on the discharge petition had acquired the following supporters (D 150; R 54 -- signers were Democrats unless otherwise noted);

Alaska -- Rivers. Ariz. -- Udall. Calif. -- Baldwin (R), Cohelan, Gubser (R), Hagen, Johnson, McFall, C.W. Miller, G.P. Miller, Moss, Shelley, Sheppard, Teague (R), Doyle, Holifield, Kasem, King, Roosevelt, Holt (R), Hosmer (R), McDonough (R). Colo. -- Johnson, Rogers. Conn. -- Bowles, Daddario, Giaimo, Irwin, Kowalski, Monagan. Del. -- McDowell. Fla. -- Fascell. Hawaii -- Inouye. Idaho -- Pfost. Ill. -- Gray, Mack, Price, Shipley, Chiperfield (R), Springer (R), Dawson, Kluczynski, Libonati, Murphy, O'Brien, O'Hara, Pucinski, Rostenkowski, Yates, Church (R), Collier (R). Ind. -- Barr, Brademas, Denton, Hogan, Madden, Roush, Wampler. Iowa -- Coad, Smith, Wolf, Schwengel (R). Kansas -- Hargis. Ky. -- Perkins.

Maine -- Coffin. Md. -- Fallon, Foley, Friedel, Garmatz, Johnson, Lankford. Mass. -- Boland, Burke, Donohue, Lane, Macdonald, O'Neill, Philbin, Conte (R), Curtis (R). Mich. -- O'Hara, Broomfield (R), Cederberg (R), Ford (R), Diggs, Dingell, Griffiths, Lesinski, Machrowicz, Rabaut. Minn. -- Blatnik, Karth, Wier, Quie (R), Judd (R), Nelsen (R). Mo. -- Bolling, Brown, Carnahan, Randall, Karsten, Moulder, Sullivan, Curtis (R). Mont. -- Anderson, Metcalf. Neb. -- McGinley, Cunningham (R), Weaver (R). Nev. -- Baring. N.H. -- Bass (R), Merrow (R). N.J. -- Addonizio, Daniels, Gallagher, Rodino, Thompson, Cahill (R), Canfield (R), Dwyer (R), Frelinghuysen (R), Osmers (R), Wallhauser (R), Widnall (R). N.M. -- Montoya.

Although three-quarters of those who signed the petition were Democrats, the drive had bipartisan support. President Eisenhower wrote Rep. William B. Widnall (R N.J.), in a letter released May 23, 1960, that he hoped the territorial government bill would be enacted, though the President said that "it would be inappropriate for me to urge any particular procedure" (the discharge petition) in connection with the bill. Vice President Nixon, who had signed a similar petition in 1950, was reported by the Washington Post to have given informal urging to several Republican Representatives to sign the discharge move. His support had been asked May 9, 1960 by Rep. Stewart L. Udall (D Ariz.), a House home-rule leader.

Arguments in favor of home rule have changed little over the years. The Washington Home Rule Committee Inc. in 1960 listed four main reasons for returning local government to the citizens of Washington: 1. The drafters of the Constitution intended the Capital to have home rule and Washington enjoyed this right for almost 100 years until suspended in 1876; 2. Congress should not have to concern itself with the local housekeeping problems of Washington; 3. local problems are best served by the local citizenry who have an active interest in the city in which they live; 4. the Nation's Capital should be a showcase for democracy for the U.S. and for the rest of the world.

Opponents of home rule cited four major arguments: 1. The Constitution does not sanction self-government in the District; 2. Home rule could conflict with the concept of a federal city; 3. It would impair fiscal relationships between the District and the Federal Government; 4. The District enjoys exceptionally clean government as compared with most other large cities.

The most common explanation given for the Southern-dominated House District Committee's hostility toward home rule bills is its fear that Washington would eventually be controlled by the city's large Negro population. The District's population is about 53 percent colored.

FEDERAL ELECTIONS

S 2436 -- Reported by Senate Rules and Administration Committee (S Rept 573) July 23, 1959.
- Passed, amended, by a 59-22 roll-call vote of the Senate Jan. 25, 1960. (See p. 472)

The third "clean elections" bill to be reported to the Senate in recent years, S 2436 was approved by a 59-22 roll-call vote Jan. 25, 1960, but received no action in the House. Rep. Omar Burleson (D Texas), chairman of the House Administration Committee to which the Senate bill was referred, called several of its features "invasions of states' rights".

As approved after eight days of Senate debate that began Jan. 13, the substantially amended bill would have required far greater disclosure of campaign finances than either the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, which it would have replaced, or the bill as reported by the Senate Rules and Administration Committee. Floor amendments added provisions for reporting of contributions and expenditures in primary elections and for disclosure of the activities of intrastate political committees -- those operating entirely within a single state. An amendment to restrict the political activities of labor unions was defeated.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the House, S 2436, the Federal Elections Act of 1960, would have:

Raised the spending limit for candidates for Senator and Representative-at-Large from a flat $25,000 to $50,000 or an amount equal to 20 cents a vote for all votes cast for the office in the preceding election, plus 10 cents a vote for all such votes in excess of one million (or a similar sum derived from the total number of persons registered to vote). Such a formula would raise the limit in New York state above $600,000.

Raised the spending limit of candidates for Representative from a flat $5,000 to $12,500 or an amount calculated as above.

Set the spending limit for the nominees of any political party for President and Vice President at an amount equal to 20 cents a vote for the highest number of votes cast for President in any one of the three preceding elections, and at 50 percent of this amount for candidates for nomination for President or Vice President. The annual ceiling would thus be set at above $12 million for a nominated Presidential ticket, and above $6 million for candidates for nomination.

Raised the spending limit for political committees operating in two or more states from a flat $3 million per year to an amount equal to 20 cents per vote calculated in the same manner as for a nominated Presidential ticket (above $12 million).

Reduced the number of financial reports required of committees from four to two in non-election years, and for election years deleted one of the two reports required to be filed immediately prior to elections and instead required filing of a report no later than 30 days following elections.

Required financial reports not only of national and other interstate political committees, and of candidates for federal office in general elections, but also of candidates for nomination to federal office in primary elections and political committees operating entirely within one state if they spend over $2,500 in connection with federal elections in any year.

Required persons who spend $100 or more in any year to influence the election of Congressional candidates in two or more states to report their expenditures.

Placed an over-all limitation of $10,000 on the amount of political contributions by any individual in any year and repealed the ban on single contributions of over $5,000.

Provided that all spending reports be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, with the Secretary of the Senate (except for House elections), and with the clerk of the U.S. District Court or responsible state officials in the district or state of the committee or candidate. Reports would be available for public inspection within 24 hours of their receipt by these officials, must be retained for six years, and any citizen would be allowed to photograph or otherwise copy them.

Set the effective date of the Act as Jan. 1, 1961.

Pressure for "clean elections" legislation was intensified by the 1956 disclosure of Sen. Francis Case (R S.D.) that oil interests had attempted to donate $2,500 in cash to Case's reelection campaign in what a Senate Select Committee later concluded was an attempt "to influence by political contribution the vote (on natural gas legislation) of a Member of the United States Senate." The Committee also recommended revision of the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946, and other related lws.

Spurred by these recommendations, the Senate Rules and Administration Committee reported a "clean elections" bill in 1957. S 2150, reported by a 7-2 vote Aug. 2, 1957 (S Rept 792), was never acted on by the Senate. It contained by and large the same provisions as the 1960 bill that was passed. It included the extension of reporting and disclosure provisions to primary elections and the higher limits on spending for party nominees for the Presidency, Vice Presidency, Senate and House, but excluded the $10,000 limit on total contributions from one individual.

S 2436, in the version reported by a unanimous vote of the Senate Rules and Administration Committee July 23, 1959 (S Rept 573), was considerably weaker than its 1957 predecessor. Four of the Committee's nine members, Chairman Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.), Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.), Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) and Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.), deplored in individual statements the bill's failure to require financial reports on primary elections. Hennings and Green also called for provisions limiting an individual's total contributions in any calendar year to $10,000, and requiring that intrastate as well as interstate committees be required to report on contributions and expenditures.

After S 2436 was strengthened by the adoption of those amendments on the Senate floor, the bill was considered by one of its supporters, Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), "a measurable contribution toward banishing the evil of big money in federal elections."

Floor Action

The effort to strengthen the bill through floor amendments was led by Sens. Hennings and Keating, who co-sponsored a key amendment incorporating coverage of expenditures and contributions in primary elections into the bill. In debate Jan. 13 Keating said, "It is a well-known fact that in roughly one-third of our states today success in a primary is tantamount to election." The amendment was agreed to on a 50-39 roll-call vote Jan. 19. (For voting, see chart p. 472)

This feature of the measure, which led to its burial in the House Administration Committee, provoked a counter-attack by Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.), who proposed that all states be required to hold primaries for federal elections. In turn, Keating offered an amendment to Long's proposal which would have invalidated the nomination of any candidate who won a primary in which persons were denied the right to vote because of race or color. Both the Long and Keating amendments were defeated.

Another successful Hennings amendment that brought on counter-attacks limited total individual political contributions to $10,000 annually. Under existing law an individual may make any number of donations of no more than $5,000 each. Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) sponsored a motion to remove the Hennings limitation, requiring only that single contributions be limited to $10,000 at a time. Both this amendment and a proposal by Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.), extending the $10,000 limit to organizations, particularly labor unions, were rejected.

On Jan. 20 the Senate agreed, by a 53-37 roll-call vote, to a Hennings amendment that required intrastate as well as interstate committees to report on campaign expenditures and contributions. In all, eight amendments to the bill were adopted before the Senate Jan. 25 passed the bill on a 59-22 roll call.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Jan. 19 -- Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.) and Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- Include primary election, convention and caucus expenses (in connection with federal elections) in the reporting provisions of the bill. Roll call, 50-39.

Jan. 20 -- Hennings -- Require political committees operating within a single state, as well as those operating in two or more states, to report on campaign expenditures and contributions. Roll call, 53-37.

Hennings -- Require persons who spend $100 or more in any year to influence the election of Congressional candidates in two or more states to report their expenditures. Voice vote.

Jan. 21 -- Hennings -- Limit any individual's total annual political contributions to $10,000 and repeal the ban on single contributions of more than $5,000. Voice.

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Eliminate requirement in the bill that House and Senate candidates list all committees working in their behalf. Voice.

Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- Set the spending limit for nominees of any political party for President and Vice President at an amount equal to 20 cents a vote for the highest number of votes cast for President in any one of the three preceding elections, and at 50 percent of this amount for candidates for nomination for President and Vice President. Voice.

Jan. 22 -- Dirksen -- Change the effective date of the act from January 1, 1960 to January 1, 1961, and make it inapplicable to contributions and expenditures made prior to that date. Voice.

Jan. 25 -- Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas) -- Relieve candidates in run-off primaries from filing a final report on their expenditures in the first primary if the report covering the second primary includes all expenses in the first primary. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Jan. 21 -- Dirksen -- Modify the effect of the Hennings amendment limiting any individual's total annual contributions to $10,000 by permitting any number of contributions of up to $10,000 each, and completely removing the limitation when the gift is made to a political committee. Standing vote.

Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) -- Amend the Hennings amendment limiting an individual's total political contributions to $10,000 annually by likewise prohibiting total contributions of more than $10,000 by any committee except a duly organized local, state or national committee of a national political party or committees of a state political party. Voice.

Jan. 25 -- Keating -- Amend the Long amendment (below) so as to invalidate the nomination of any candidate in a primary election when a federal court determines that in that primary election persons have been systematically denied the right to vote because of race or color. Standing.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Prohibit any person from running in the general election as a candidate for Congress unless he has been duly nominated in a primary election, excepting special elections and minor party candidates (whose party received less than 10 percent of the vote in the previous election). Voice.

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) -- Authorize individuals to take an income tax deduction of up to $100 annually for gifts to political candidates or committees, or a tax credit of up to $10 on one-half of a person's political contributions in any year. Standing.

OVERHAUL URGED

DEBATE -- Jan. 13 -- Hennings -- The campaign expense limitations of the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 are "hopelessly out of step with the rise in prices and cost of services", especially in view of the use of radio and television. "We know that, by and large, the 1925 provisions in practice are not observed in spirit, even if they are in letter."

Jan. 14 -- Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) -- Congress should not try to regulate matters relating to primary elections but should leave the field to state legislatures.

Jan. 18 -- Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Because of the election pattern in the South, "it would be a mockery" for Congress "to pass a clean election bill without including the primaries".

Jan. 21 -- Curtis -- In support of his amendment to the Hennings amendment: "Let us be fair about this. If we are going to have a $10,000 limitation on the total amount that a donor can give, let us treat everyone alike. Let us treat the chamber of commerce and COPE (the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education) alike."

Jan. 25 -- Kefauver -- Advocated adoption of his amendment to authorize income tax credits or deductions for political contributions: "The basic purpose...is to encourage small contributions to political campaigns and to discourage reliance upon large contributions."

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) -- The Senate should not consider the Kefauver amendment, because "the Constitution gives the House the exclusive right to originate tax legislation."

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Supported the Kefauver amendment because it "would be an inducement for little money to come in and take the place of big money."

Dirksen -- If the bill becomes law, "every candidate ought to be a bookkeeper, a detective, an accountant with a CPA degree, and a flair for politics, all rolled into one" because of the number of reports required under the act.

Hennings -- "It is my conviction that one of the reasons why only 60 percent of the American people entitled to vote in the country do vote is that they feel that politics is a dirty business, and that the big boys in the backroom handle the money bags and control the nominations, and, indeed, the elections." Enactment of the bill would improve that situation.

House Bills

Two versions of the Senate bill were introduced in the House on Jan. 26 and sent to the House Administration Committee, where, like similar election reform legislation, they died. Rep. Edith Green (D Ore.) sponsored HR 9924, containing all the amendments passed by the Senate, and Rep. Stewart L. Udall (D Ariz.) introduced HR 9938, deleting the coverage of primary election expenses from the bill. Noting the "strong opposition in this body to such controls", Udall said he had removed "this controversial section in order to facilitate favorable action on this measure". House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) had previously declared, "I don't think the Federal Government ought to get into the regulations of primaries."

Administration Committee Chairman Burleson agreed with Rayburn and also objected to the Senate bill's requirement that intrastate committees report on their receipts and expenditures.

POLITICAL DEBATES ON TV

S J Res 207 -- Reported June 8, 1960 by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 1539).

- Passed Senate June 27 by voice vote.
- Passed House Aug. 22 by voice vote.

PL 86-677 -- Signed into law Aug. 24.

A little more than a year after amending the "equal time" provision (Section 315) of the Federal Communications Act of 1934 to permit adequate news coverage of political campaigns, Congress in 1960 amended the provision to allow broadcasters to carry the debates between Presidential candidates John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon. In approving S J Res 207 legislators also made it possible for the radio and television networks to give free time to the Democratic and Republican Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates in the 1960 campaign, without being compelled to give similar treatment to candidates of all minor or splinter parties.

Beginning as S 3171, a bill introduced by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), chairman of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the legislation ended as a restricted suspension, termed an experiment by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.). Magnuson's proposal would have required networks to give free television time to the Presidential candidates of the major parties for eight weeks, beginning Sept. 1 of each Presidential election year. Each network would have to donate an hour a week to each candidate of a party receiving 4 percent of the vote in the last election.

Broadcasters opposed S 3171 as compulsory legislation and asked, instead, that Congress relieve them of the requirement to give equal time to minor-party candidates. S J Res 207 was worked out as a compromise meeting the broadcasters' objective on a one-year, trial basis. Specifically, though not in so many words, it enabled the networks to broadcast debates between Kennedy and Nixon.

PROVISIONS -- As it became law, S J Res 207:

Suspended for the 1960 campaign Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act, requiring that broadcasting stations give equal time to all Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates.

Required the Federal Communications Commission to file a report by March 1, 1961 on the effects of the suspension and to make recommendations on possible further legislation.

Background

REFERENCE -- Political Broadcasts (1959 Almanac p. 302)

Action in 1959 on the equal time provision of the Communications Act followed a Feb. 19 ruling of the Federal Communications Commission which held that equal time on regular news broadcasts must be given to political candidates of all major and minor parties. The amendment (PL 86-274) exempted from the equal time requirement appearances by legally qualified candidates for any public office on bona-fide newscasts, interviews, documentaries or on-the-spot coverage of news events. A qualification to the law required that the candidate's appearance be incidental to the subject matter of the documentaries, but no clear ruling on the status of panel shows was included in the Act.

1960 legislation dealt exclusively with equal time for Presidential candidates and ended by suspending the equal time rule only for the duration of the 1960 campaign.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Communications Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- May 16-19 on S 3171, to require networks to give free time to major Presidential candidates during each election year.

TESTIMONY -- May 16 -- Adlai E. Stevenson supported the bill and said it represented "a guarantee of free speech". He said the provision of free time would insure that all candidates reached a maximum of voters with the issues they believed to be important, without the limitations of the high cost of television time.

Party Chairman Paul M. Butler (D), in a statement submitted to the Subcommittee, and Thruston B. Morton (R), in a personal appearance, said the networks should be given the opportunity to make free time available for the 1960 campaign before compulsory legislation was passed.

May 17 -- Frank Stanton, Columbia Broadcasting System, and David Adams, National Broadcasting Co., opposed the bill. Adams said it would "appropriate the property of the broadcasters without compensation". Stanton said no legislation was required to compel broadcasters to grant free time if Congress would amend

Section 315 so that equal time would not have to be given to minor candidates.

Vice President Nixon, former President Herbert Hoover and two-time Republican Presidential nominee Thomas E. Dewey filed statements opposing the bill. Nixon opposed taking network time without paying for it.

May 19 -- Whitney N. Seymour, special counsel for the National Assn. of Broadcasters, said he doubted the constitutionality of the bill.

Eric Hass, Socialist Labor party, said the bill would discriminate against minority parties and was a "mockery of democracy".

Oliver Treyz, president of the American Broadcasting Co., opposed S 3171 and said his network would make free air time available to candidates if Congress would waive the equal time section.

ACTION -- The Subcommittee May 31 approved S J Res 207 as a substitute for S 3171. The full committee reported the joint resolution June 8 (S Rept 1539). In separate views Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas) said the resolution did not insure fair and equal broadcasting coverage of the candidates.

Floor Action

The Senate passed S J Res 207 by voice vote June 27. Sen. John O. Pastore (D R.I.), floor manager for the bill, said the networks were bound by a "moral understanding" to give equal coverage to the major party candidates. Though broadcasters would not be legally responsible for equal coverage, Pastore warned that "if they dare trespass on equity, we (Congress) will close the door so quickly, next January, that it will be no laughing matter."

House

Without referring the bill to committee the House passed S J Res 207 Aug. 22 on a voice vote after suspending the rules. Rep. Harris, declaring that Section 315 had restricted coverage of the 1960 campaign, said the new law would be an experiment, inspired by the belief that more information about the candidates should be available to the voting public. Denying that Congress was giving the broadcasting industry a "carte blanche", he argued that, under the continuing requirement that stations serve the public interest, they would have to provide time "on a fair and equitable basis to all substantially newsworthy candidates for President and Vice President".

Rep. William L. Springer (R Ill.), pointing out that the broadcasters had not wanted rules imposed on them, said he believed the industry "would do a good job" because it was given the authority and responsibility for presenting the major candidates fairly.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- The Senate June 14 adopted by voice vote an amended resolution (S Res 305) authorizing the Commerce Committee to spend $35,000 to study the broadcasting of political opinions, news, and advertising, and the presentation of political candidates by broadcasters. The Committee would report to Congress by Jan. 31, 1961; the Committee's Freedom of Communications Subcommittee, headed by Sen. Yarborough, was to conduct the study.

Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) June 14 opposed the resolution, saying it had "a very definite political purpose" and would exercise an influence on coverage of the 1960 campaign.

CHARGES AGAINST POWELL

S Res 285 -- Referred by Senate roll-call vote of 56-16, May 4, 1960, to the Committee on Rules and Administration. (See p. 493)

A move to investigate charges made by syndicated columnist Drew Pearson against Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D N.Y.) was effectively killed by the Senate in 1960. On a roll-call vote of 56-16 May 4, the Senate referred S Res 285, which would have authorized an investigation, to the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. No further action was taken on the resolution. It had been introduced March 8 by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.), who said that the charges made by Pearson against the Harlem Representative "are such that we as Members of Congress cannot sit back without either confirming or repudiating them".

According to Pearson's columns printed in the Washington Post March 4, 5 and 7, Republican and Democratic party leaders in New York offered Powell money for his support for state tickets in the 1958 campaigns. The columns said Republicans offered Powell $50,000 to support Nelson A. Rockefeller for Governor and Democrats offered him $100,000 to support Averell Harriman; that Powell endorsed Harriman and was receiving payments totalling $100,000 over 10 years from Manhattan County Democratic Leader Carmine G. DeSapio. The columns did not specify whether the alleged payments were campaign contributions, or what they constituted legally.

Pearson also charged in his columns that the Justice Department in early 1957 had dropped a grand jury investigation of Powell's income tax returns because Powell had endorsed Mr. Eisenhower in the 1956 Presidential campaign.

Although Sen. Williams had wanted an immediate Senate vote on S Res 285, which would authorize the Rules and Administration Committee to investigate Pearson's allegations, there was no action until May 4. Then, instead of adopting the resolution, as Williams proposed, the Senate referred it to the same Committee, which made no recommendations on it. Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), who made the referral motion, said he could "see no reason why the Senate should be snooping around trying to judge the qualifications of Members of the House."

POWELL TRIAL

On March 8, 1960 a long-postponed income tax evasion trial of Rep. Powell began in New York. Powell had been indicted on three counts May 8, 1958, but his trial had been repeatedly postponed because of illness.

When the trial ended in a hung jury April 22, only one count of the original indictment remained. Federal Judge Frederick van Pelt Bryan had dismissed two counts charging Powell with attempting to evade payment of $1,399.69 in taxes owed by his wife, pianist Hazel Scott, for 1951 and with preparing a fraudulent joint return for 1952. The remaining count, charging that Powell had aided his wife in preparing a false 1951 return, caused a deadlock in the jury, which deliberated 24 hours before reporting back to Judge Bryan.

On May 23 Judge Bryan rejected a motion to dismiss the third count, making it possible for the Government to seek a new trial on the remaining charge.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT BILL VETO SUSTAINED

S 722 --Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 110) March 18, 1959.

- Passed by the Senate by a 49-46 roll-call vote March 23, 1959. (1959 Almanac p. 403)
- Reported, amended, by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 360) May 14, 1959.
- Passed by the House under Calendar Wednesday procedure by a 202-184 roll-call vote May 4, 1960. (See p. 438-42)
- Senate agreed to House amendments by a 45-32 roll-call vote May 6. (See p. 494)
- Vetoed May 13.
- Attempt to override veto failed in the Senate by a 45-39 roll-call vote May 24 (56 "yeas" were needed to override). (See p. 496)

In 1960, as in 1958, President Eisenhower vetoed Democratic-sponsored legislation to provide federal aid to stimulate business in economically depressed areas -- areas with chronic unemployment. A Senate attempt to override the veto of the 1960 bill fell 11 votes short of the required two-thirds majority.

The measure (S 722) sent to the President by Congress in 1960 would have authorized a $251-million package of federal loans and grants to centers of long-term high unemployment. The bill, passed by the Senate in 1959, was refused a rule for floor action in the House, and was finally brought to the floor under unusual Calendar Wednesday procedures and passed only after nearly a dozen procedural roll-call votes.

Shortly before Mr. Eisenhower's veto was sustained, Administration supporters introduced a compromise measure (S 3569, HR 12286) calling for $180 million in federal aid and otherwise revising the vetoed bill to conform with Presidential objections. The new bill represented a change on the part of the Administration from its earlier position; President Eisenhower each year since 1956 had asked for more limited area redevelopment legislation authorizing $50 million for plant loans in industrial areas and $3 million for technical assistance grants. However, there was no action on the new Administration proposal after Senate failure to override the veto of S 722. Responsibility for defeat of area redevelopment became an issue during the 1960 Presidential and Congressional campaign, with Democrats and Republicans each blaming the other for intransigence on the issue.

Among President Eisenhower's objections to S 722 were the amount of money in the bill, the fact that it set up a new federal agency to handle the proposed program, instead of leaving administration to the Commerce Department, and the criteria for aid included in the measure.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the President and vetoed, S 722:

Established within the Executive Branch an Area Redevelopment Administration to be assisted by a Cabinet-level Area Redevelopment Advisory Board and a citizens' National Public Advisory Committee.

Directed the Area Redevelopment Administrator to designate as industrial redevelopment areas those areas in which unemployment was 6 percent or more at the time application was made for assistance and in which joblessness had idled at least 12 percent of the labor force during the preceding 12 months, 9 percent during 15 of the preceding 18 months or 6 percent of the labor force during 18 of the preceding 24 months.

Directed the Administrator to designate as rural development areas those rural areas in which resided the highest numbers and percentages of low-income farm families and in which there was substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment; included would be any county which was among the 500 counties ranked lowest in level of living of farm families or as having the highest percentage of commercial farms producing less than $2,500 worth of products annually.

Authorized the Administrator to borrow $150 million from the Treasury to set up two revolving loan funds of $75 million each, one for industrial redevelopment and the other for rural redevelopment; loans were to be made to governmental or private applicants for purchase or development of land, machinery and equipment for industrial use, for construction of new factory buildings and for improvement of existing industrial facilities but not for working capital and not for relocation of industry that might increase unemployment in the area of original location.

Specified that federal participation in a project must not exceed 65 percent of its cost; that to be eligible for a federal loan, a project had to provide more than temporary relief from unemployment or underemployment; and that the loans had to be repaid within 30 years and had to bear an interest rate one-half of 1 percent above the average interest rate being paid by the Treasury on all long-term loans outstanding at the time the redevelopment loan was made.

Authorized the Administrator to borrow from the Treasury an additional $50 million from which 40-year loans would be made for the construction and improvement of public facilities within industrial or rural redevelopment areas.

Authorized appropriations for grants of $35 million for public facilities in redevelopment areas which could not afford to repay federal loans.

Authorized annual appropriations of $4.5 million for technical assistance to redevelopment areas.

Authorized annual appropriations of $1.5 million to enable the Secretary of Labor to set up vocational training programs for unemployed workers in redevelopment areas, with an additional $10 million authorized for subsistence payments to workers being trained for new jobs.

Stipulated that workers on redevelopment projects be covered by federal wage and hour laws.

Amended the Housing Act of 1949 to make urban renewal funds available for commercial or industrial redevelopment.

Background

REFERENCE -- Area Redevelopment (1959 Almanac p. 221); Area Redevelopment Bill Vetoed (1958 Almanac p. 147); Depressed Areas (1956 Almanac p. 517)

Legislative proposals to aid the so-called depressed areas were proposed in 1955 when the Joint Economic Committee called on the Federal Government to set up an area redevelopment program. Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), at that time chairman of the Committee and the chief sponsor of area redevelopment legislation ever since, introduced a bill to implement the Committee's recommendations. The measure, which was somewhat similar to later area redevelopment bills, was referred to the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee but got no further in 1955.

President Eisenhower in 1956 also called on Congress to enact a depressed areas bill but on a more limited scale. Bills were reported in both Senate and House, and the Senate passed, by a 60-30 roll-call vote, a modified version of the Douglas bill, providing loans and grants for both industrial and rural redevelopment areas. But the legislation died in the House when the Rules Committee refused to clear the measure for floor action.

In 1957 a revised bill introduced by Douglas and an Administration bill were referred to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, whose chairman at that time was Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), and in turn to the Production and Stabilization Subcommittee, which was headed by Douglas. Hearings were held but no further action was taken. Douglas said at the time that the Subcommittee was "stacked" against area redevelopment legislation.

President Eisenhower in his 1958 Economic Report again asked for a depressed areas bill. Former Sen. Frederick G. Payne (R Maine 1953-59) introduced a new bill in an effort to compromise differences between the Douglas and Administration bills.

The Douglas-Payne bill, providing $379.5 million in federal grants and loans to labor surplus areas, was passed by the Senate in May 1958 and by the House, trimmed to $279.5 million, Aug. 15, 1958. The Senate a week later agreed to the House version and sent the bill to the White House.

President Eisenhower Sept. 6, 1958 pocket vetoed the bill, saying it called for too little "local responsibility."

ACTION IN 1959

At the beginning of the 86th Congress, Douglas and numerous other Senators cosponsored a new bill, S 722, calling for $389.5 million in federal loans and grants to depressed areas. An Administration depressed areas bill (S 1064, HR 4278) was also introduced, carrying $53 million. The Administration measure provided for a $50 million revolving loan fund for plant redevelopment in urban areas, and $3 million for federal technical assistance. The Douglas bill, in contrast, provided two $100-million loan funds (one for redevelopment of urban, one for redevelopment of rural areas), plus additional money for grants ($75 million) and loans ($100 million) to public agencies for development of local community facilities, as well as technical assistance ($4.5 million) and subsistence grants to workers being retrained ($10 million).

The Douglas bill also proposed setting up an Area Redevelopment Administration to handle the program; the Administration bill gave administration to the Secretary of Commerce. Finally, charges on loans were computed differently in the two bills, and criteria for loan eligibility were different.

The Senate passed S 722 March 23, 1959, and the House Banking and Currency Committee reported the measure (H Rept 360) May 14, 1959, cutting the total funds to $251 million. The Committee May 19 asked the Rules Committee to grant the bill a rule for floor debate, but the Rules Committee did not do so.

1960 BACKGROUND

In his Jan. 18, 1960 Budget Message, President Eisenhower again asked Congress to pass his limited area redevelopment bill. At the same time, in a separate part of the message, the President asked Congress (the request was further explained at hearings later) to authorize an additional $20 million a year for five years to supplement an existing $100 million revolving fund, administered by the Housing and Home Finance Agency's Community Facilities Administration, for public facilities loans to small communities. The President said the existing $100 million in the fund was exhausted and $20 million was needed in fiscal 1961 to meet applications. (In 1958, a Senate-passed bill to expand the fund from $100 million to $1 billion reached the House floor, but the rule for debate was rejected, killing the bill. 1958 Almanac p. 151)

The Administration later in the year, just after the Presidential veto of S 722, combined the original Eisenhower depressed areas request of $53 million, raised to $80 million, with the $100 million community facilities request, in the new compromise Administration area redevelopment bill (S 3569, HR 12286). (See below)

In a Jan. 8 letter to one of the four Republicans who had voted for S 722 in the Senate, Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.), President Eisenhower had said he was deeply concerned with the depressed areas problem and recommended the Administration-supported legislation as the solution. He also mentioned several other methods by which the Government had attempted to help labor-surplus areas: in fiscal 1959, he said, the Defense Department had given 42.5 percent of its procurement awards to labor surplus areas; the Department of Commerce had set up two large offices of the Census Bureau in labor surplus areas (Jeffersonville, Ind. and Parsons, Kan.) for special census projects; the Housing and Home Finance Agency had approved 21 urban renewal projects in labor surplus areas; and the General Services Administration, during the 15-month period ending Oct. 15, 1959, had placed procurement contracts worth $408 million in labor surplus areas -- 62.3 percent of the dollar value of the procurement contracts awarded during this period.

LABOR SURPLUS AREAS

A source of ammunition for both sides in the depressed-areas bill controversy (even after the bill was vetoed) was the Bureau of Employment Security's surveys of the Nation's 149 major labor market areas. The BES classifies the areas into six categories according to the percentage of the local labor force out of work. Of the six classifications, groups D, E and F indicate "substantial" labor surplus -- 6 percent and up.

The July 1960 report of the BES classified as labor surplus areas 37 of the 149 major labor market areas. The Administration viewed this as encouraging in light of the fact that the July 1959 report showed 46 labor surplus areas and the July 1958 report an all-time high of 89. On the other hand, backers of the Douglas bill pointed out that the number of areas classified as labor surplus areas had advanced from 35 in the May 1960 report to 37 in July. They also noted that the July figure was the highest in a year. Comparative figures:

% Unemployed	July 1960	May 1960	July 1959	July 1958

The BES July 1960 report also listed 116 "smaller areas of substantial labor surplus," compared to 113 in May 1960 and 143 in July 1959.

Of the 37 major industrial centers listed as labor surplus areas, 21 were reported as suffering "substantial and persistent" unemployment. Of the 116 smaller areas, 74 also qualified as chronic jobless areas. While all firms located in areas of "substantial" labor surplus were entitled to preference in bidding for federal procurement contracts, a revision of the Defense Manpower Policy which went into effect July 6, 1960 granted first preference to firms located in areas of "substantial and persistent" labor surplus. In order to qualify for this designation, an area must meet the following criteria: it must have a current unemployment of 6 percent and an average annual unemployment rate (a) at least 50 percent above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years; or (b) at least 75 percent above the national average for two of the preceding three years; or (c) at least 100 percent above the national average for one of the preceding two calendar years.

The major areas meeting these criteria in July 1960 were: Evansville and Terre Haute, Ind.; Fall River, Lawrence, Lowell and New Bedford, Mass.; Detroit, Mich.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Lorain-Elyria, Ohio; Altoona, Erie, Johnstown, Scranton and Wilkes-Barre-Hazleton, Pa.; Mayaguez, Ponce and San Juan, P.R.; Providence-Pawtucket, R.I.; and Charleston, Huntington-Ashland and Wheeling, W.Va.

Of the 74 smaller areas with chronic joblessness, almost half -- 32 -- were located in West Virginia, Kentucky and Pennsylvania.

Another factor in the debate was the report of the Senate Special Committee on Unemployment Problems, issued March 30. The Special Committee majority by implication endorsed the Douglas bill, and the minority also called for a depressed areas program. (See story p. 297)

House

COMMITTEE -- Rules.

ACTION -- April 21 rejected by a 6-6 vote a proposal to grant a rule to S 722. Joining the Committee's four Republicans in voting against the measure were Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.) and Rep. William M. Colmer (D Miss.). The other six Democrats voted in favor of S 722.

Seven days later, House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) notified House Members that S 722 would be brought to the House floor under the Calendar Wednesday procedure. (See Box)

Floor Action

The House May 4, by a 202-184 roll-call vote, passed its version of S 722, authorizing federal grants and loans of $251 million for the relief of chronically depressed industrial and rural labor surplus areas. (For voting, see chart p. 442)

Passage of the bill represented a victory for the Democratic "liberal" bloc, which overcame lengthy delaying tactics by some Republicans and Southern Democrats. The Administration plan for a $53-million package of federal loans for industrial areas only was defeated.

Only a day earlier, the President had sent a message to Congress in which he reiterated his insistence on a limited area redevelopment bill. Referring indirectly to S 722, the President said he could not accept "the various schemes that would perpetuate insecurity by making distressed areas dependent upon the uncertainties of continued federal subsidies, or that would pour federal dollars into areas where distress has been temporary and which are competent to meet their problems themselves".

The failure of the Democratic leaders to extract S 722 from the House Rules Committee, where it had lodged for almost a year, forced them to resort to a rarely used procedure known as Calendar Wednesday. Under this procedure the chairman of a standing committee of the House may call up legislation on which the Committee desires action. (See box)

As soon as the House met May 4 to consider S 722, Rep. James C. Davis (D Ga.) asked for a quorum call. After a call of Members' names was completed, Democratic Leader John W. McCormack (Mass.) made a motion to dispense with further proceedings, i.e., the locating of all Members who did not answer to the quorum call. Davis moved to table, or kill, the McCormack motion and demanded a roll-call vote on the tabling motion. Thus began a series of eight time-consuming record votes which tied up the House for more than five hours before actual consideration of S 722 began. The reading of the Journal of the previous day's proceedings, a formality which usually is omitted by unanimous consent, was forced by Davis and interrupted by quorum calls and roll-call votes.

After the Journal was approved by the House, Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) ordered the call of the committees under the Calendar Wednesday procedure. Answering for the Banking and Currency Committee, Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) called up for consideration S 722.

At this point Republican Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.) ordered a test vote on S 722 by demanding a roll call on whether or not the House would begin actual consideration of the bill. The House voted 221-171 to take it up.

After two hours of general debate, Rep. Spence offered an amendment to substitute the Committee-approved $251-million measure for the Senate's $389.5-million version of S 722. A 30-minute reading of the 32-page substitute was forced by James A. Haley (D Fla.) and then William B. Widnall (R N.J.) offered the Administration proposal for a $50-million revolving loan fund for industrial plants and $3 million in grants for technical assistance. It was rejected by a 77-152 standing vote, although Halleck raised the threat of a veto if the Committee bill were passed.

Before passage of the Committee version, Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.) made a motion to recommit S 722 which was rejected by a 162-223 roll-call vote. (For voting on all record votes, see charts p. 438-42)

The only substantial amendment adopted on the bill tightened the so-called anti-pirating provisions designed to prevent migration of industry from the East to other areas of the country.

Calendar Wednesday

Supporters of the Area Redevelopment Act (S 722) relied on the unusual Calendar Wednesday procedure to get their bill to the House floor after the Rules Committee had refused to clear it.

Under this procedure, each Wednesday the names of standing committees are called out alphabetically by the Clerk. The chairman of a committee desiring immediate action on a bill may call up the bill when his committee's name is reached. Action on such a bill must be completed by the end of the legislative day, under a two-hour limit for general debate. The last previous use of the Calendar Wednesday procedure was on Feb. 15, 1950 after the Rules Committee had refused a rule to the Fair Employment Practices Commission Act. (1950 Almanac p. 375)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

May 4 -- Seymour Halpern (R N.Y.) -- Specify that federal funds would not be used to help an industry relocate from one area to another when an increase in unemployment would result in the first area. Voice vote.

Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) -- Require that an area designated as an industrial redevelopment area have at least 6 percent of its labor force unemployed at the time application for assistance is made. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

May 4 -- John P. Saylor (R Pa.) -- Increase appropriations for area assistance loans under the Widnall amendment (below) from $50 million to $150 million. Voice.

Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.) -- Delete the authorization of $35 million for public facilities grants in S 722. Standing, 67-135.

James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.) -- Substitute for S 722 the text of HR 4878, authorizing grants and loans totaling $158 million for depressed areas. Voice.

Conte -- Substitute the text of HR 4259, authorizing redevelopment loans totaling $200 million. Voice.

William B. Widnall (R N.J.) -- Substitute for the Committee bill the text of HR 4278, the Administration bill, authorizing plant loans of $50 million and grants of $3 million for area redevelopment. Standing, 77-152.

DEBATE -- May 4 -- Perkins Bass (R N.H.) -- Objected to S 722 because (1) it failed "to identify the really hard-core depressed areas the bill is supposed to help" and (2) it authorized the use of federal funds "to entice industry away from one area into another".

Flood -- "This is not a handout bill. It is not a give-away bill. Its philosophy and purpose are to bring about increased productivity, provide needed jobs for millions in chronically depressed areas, rebuild health economies in many regions of the country and revive hope and decent prospects for careers at home for the young people of those affected areas."

Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.) -- Under S 722 the Government "would be assisting unsuccessful competitors without curing the defects which prevented the borrower from launching his project in the private economy. The borrower is thus unjustly assisted in his competition with others who are not backed by the Government."

Wright Patman (D Texas) -- The bill is "an effort to help our own people...in a way that other countries are getting help now from our agencies."

Final Action

The Senate May 6, by a 45-32 roll-call vote, agreed to the House amendments to S 722, clearing the measure for the President. (For voting, see chart p. 494)

In an effort to forestall a Presidential veto, Senate supporters of the bill argued that the House version made several concessions to the Administration. Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) said all funds in the bill would have to come from Congressional appropriations and that Senators who felt the amount contained in the bill was too high "would get another crack at it" when the appropriation bill was considered. In addition, Clark said the amount had been reduced from the $389.5-million measure that had been passed by the Senate in 1959.

He said the "anti-pirating" provision had been strengthened by the House to prevent one area from taking employment away from another and he noted that the requirements for area-assistance had been tightened.

The Administration's coolness toward the final version of S 722 was indicated May 10 by Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.). Emerging with other GOP Congressional figures from a meeting with President Eisenhower, Dirksen said the depressed areas bill "almost certainly" would draw a veto. Commenting on Democratic efforts to bring the bill more in line with the Administration's proposal, Dirksen said it was still too generous to areas that actually did not need assistance. He said it would provide federal money for "communities that never knew they were distressed until they heard about the House bill".

At his news conference May 11, President Eisenhower declined to say that a veto would be forthcoming but left little doubt of his distaste for the measure. He said it was a "shotgun" approach to area-aid.

Bill Vetoed

As expected, the President May 13 vetoed S 722. In an accompanying message to Congress, he said he had vetoed the bill because its eligiblity criteria permitted assistance to areas only temporarily in a depressed condition; it unnecessarily provided $75 million for construction of industrial buildings in rural areas; it provided $35 million for direct grants for public facilities development in areas that could not afford loans, and this was too great an extension of federal responsibility; it created a new federal agency to administer the program; it permitted the federal share in certain industrial development programs to go as high as 65 percent; and it permitted certain loans to be used for acquisition of machinery and equipment for manufacturers, subsidizing them against their competitors.

Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) May 19 announced that on May 24 he would bring S 722 to the Senate floor in an attempt to override the President's veto.

ADMINISTRATION COMPROMISE BILL

The day before Johnson's announcement Dirksen and Rep. Widnall May 18 introduced a new Administration compromise area redevelopment bill (S 3569, HR 12286) tailored to meet the President's objections to the vetoed measure. As compared with $251 million authorized by

S 722 and $53 million authorized by the original Administration bill (S 1064), the Dirksen-Widnall bill authorized $180 million.

Of the $180 million, however, $100 million was actually the same $100 million requested earlier in the year for the Community Facilities Administration and already scheduled to be included separately in both the House and Senate omnibus housing bills. (See story p. 271)

In the new Administration area redevelopment bill the $100 million for the Community Facilities Administration, instead of being used solely for loans to localities for construction of water, gas and sewage systems (the purposes for which Community Facilities Administration loans were previously restricted), was to be channeled into labor-surplus areas for development of industrial facilities as well as water, gas and sewage works.

The vetoed bill, by contrast, contained $50 million for public facilities loans, but these had no connection with the Community Facilities Administration, for which, as noted above, both Banking and Currency Committees were recommending funds separately in their omnibus housing bills. (When the omnibus housing bills appeared certain to fail of final enactment, Congress passed a stopgap measure, enacted into law (H J Res 784 - PL 86-788), that enlarged the Community Facilities Administration's existing loan fund by $50 million. See p. 271)

The Dirksen-Widnall bill would have met President Eisenhower's objections to S 722 by cutting out the $35 million in grants and the $75 million in industrial loans for rural areas, by changing eligibility criteria to conform with the President's position, by limiting federal participation to 35 percent, and by putting administration of the program in the hands of an administrator, to be appointed by the President subject to Senate confirmation, within the Department of Commerce. In funds authorized, it compared as follows with the vetoed bill (millions of dollars):

	S 722	Dirksen-Widnall
Urban industrial loans	$ 75	$ 75
Rural industrial loans	75	--
Public facilities grants	35	--
Public facilities loans	50	100
Technical assistance	4.5	1.5
Special technical assistance	--	2.0
Vocational rehabilitation
Training	1.5	1.5
Worker subsistence	10	--
	$251	$180

Veto Sustained

The Senate May 24, by a 45-39 roll-call vote, sustained the President's veto of S 722. The vote was 11 short of the two-thirds majority (56 votes) required to override. (For voting see chart p. 496; for other 1960 vetoes, see story p. 641)

Joining 40 Democrats in voting to override were five Republican Senators: John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.), Kenneth B. Keating (N.Y.), Margaret Chase Smith (Maine) and Hugh Scott (Pa.). Two other GOP Senators, J. Glenn Beall (Md.) and Clifford P. Case (N.J.), indicated their support for the bill by pairing in favor of overriding the veto. These seven Senators also supported the depressed areas bill on May 6 when the Senate voted 45-32 to send S 722 to the President.

Fourteen Democrats, 12 of them from the South, broke ranks and joined the 25 Republicans voting to sustain the veto. The two non-Southern Democrats who supported the President were Frank J. Lausche (Ohio) and J. Allen Frear Jr. (Del.).

During the three-hour debate which preceded the final vote on S 722, the bill's chief sponsor, Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), criticized the Administration for "demanding the most rigid obedience to (its) will and tactics in the field of foreign affairs" while refusing to cooperate with the Democrats on domestic issues.

Holding aloft a volume of foreign aid data which he said weighed 6 lbs. 4 oz., Douglas said the President insisted on spending billions of mutual security dollars to aid economic systems abroad and "yet he refuses to permit a more-work program to go into effect for the people of this Nation."

In support of the President's veto, Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) said S 722 "does not focus on the real basic causes of unemployment and creates...an illusion that simply by the construction of buildings and purchase of equipment jobs can be created on a continuous, deep-rooted and dependable basis."

Prescott Bush (R Conn.) said the Democrats should "abandon attempts to reap political capital from the plight of areas having chronic unemployment" and support a compromise measure acceptable to the President. Bush cosponsored S 3569, the Dirksen-Widnall compromise.

Indicating no willingness to accept the compromise proposal, Douglas said the veto and the vote to override it would be "important, and in some cases decisive, factors in the choices which the voters will make in November." He reminded the Senate of the Democrats' successes in the Congressional elections of 1958 following the President's veto of the first depressed areas bill.

Additional Hearings

Beyond a one-day hearing, there was no further action in 1960 on depressed areas legislation, although President Eisenhower Aug. 8, in his message to Congress after it reconvened following the political party conventions, requested action on the "new area assistance bill (S 3569, HR 12286), with Administration backing, (which) was introduced immediately after my veto." (For text of message, see p. 640)

The hearing took place Aug. 18 before the Senate Banking and Currency Production and Stabilization Subcommittee. Subcommittee Chairman Douglas opened the hearing by saying he was unwilling to yield to demands by the Administration "that the Congress can only have an area redevelopment bill if it will rubber stamp the Administration proposal."

Principal witnesses were Sen. Jennings Randolph (D W.Va.), who appeared in support of S 722, and Commerce Secretary Frederick H. Mueller, who testified in favor of the Administration proposals. Testimony quickly revealed that neither side was willing to yield on certain key points: the percentage of federal participation (Administration favored a 35 percent limit, Douglas 65 percent); whether to include rural areas (Mueller opposed); who should administer the program (Administration favored Commerce Department, Democrats a separate new agency).

COMMITTEE ISSUES UNEMPLOYMENT RECOMMENDATIONS

A broad attack on the causes and consequences of unemployment was recommended March 30 in the final report (S Rept 1206) of the Senate's Special Committee on Unemployment Problems. The nine-member panel, headed by Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.), was created Sept. 12, 1959 on the initiative of Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas). (1959 Almanac p. 224) Its report followed 27 days of hearings in 12 states. The Committee expired June 30.

In minority views, the Committee's three Republican members -- Sens. John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), Winston L. Prouty (Vt.), and Hugh Scott (Pa.) -- presented their own program "because we differ in several respects from the majority." Their proposals, however, revealed a large measure of agreement with the majority, composed of Sens. McCarthy, Pat McNamara (Mich.), Joseph S. Clark (Pa.), Jennings Randolph (W.Va.), Vance Hartke (Ind.), and Gale W. McGee (Wyo.).

Data compiled by the Committee showed that the rate of unemployment after each of the three post-war recessions was higher than it had been before the recession. A major cause, the report said, was technological progress. Although industrial production advanced 53 percent from 1948 to 1959, factory production workers decreased from 12.7 to 12.2 million. Employment in the railroad, coal and automobile industries was particularly affected by the effects of automation and changing technology. Large numbers of farm workers were likewise displaced by improvements in agricultural productivity.

Looking ahead, the Committee noted that, while the country's total population was expected to rise by 19 percent between 1960 and 1970, a 46 percent increase was forecast in the number of persons under 25 years of age -- from less than 14 million to more than 20 million. Unemployment among this age group had amounted to more than twice the rate for all ages over the past 10 years; coupled with the continued impact of automation, this bulge in the number of younger job-seekers could lead to additional unemployment, the Committee concluded.

Recommendations

Both Democratic and Republican members agreed on the need for measures to alleviate hardships arising from chronic unemployment, to ease the impact of future unemployment and to overcome some of the causes of unemployment. The majority laid great stress on the importance of raising the Nation's rate of economic growth -- an issue on which Democrats and Republicans had taken conflicting positions for some time. For the rest, however, the proposals of the two groups differed more in degree than in kind.

● Depressed Areas: Both groups assigned priority to enactment of a program of federal assistance to areas in the country suffering from chronic unemployment. The majority endorsed by implication the terms of S 722, a $390-million package of loans and grants passed by the Senate in 1959. The minority called for a more limited program, but also proposed that the Federal Government be directed to locate new installations, civilian as well as military, in labor surplus areas. (President Eisenhower May 13 vetoed S 722, and the Senate May 24 sustained his veto. All Special Committee members except Prouty were recorded in favor of overriding the veto. See story p. 292)

● Unemployment Insurance: The majority called for improvements in the state-administered unemployment compensation system, along the lines of a bill (S 791) introduced by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.). This would provide national standards for the first time, including payment of benefits for 39 weeks. Supplementary benefits for another 13 weeks were also recommended. The minority also endorsed a system of supplementary benefits. But it rejected the notion of national standards, long opposed by President Eisenhower as a violation of states rights, and called instead for enactment of the Administration's proposals for expanded coverage. S 791 was not passed by either chamber in 1960.

● Public Assistance: The Federal Government distributed almost $2 billion to the states in fiscal 1959 in matching grants for assistance to the aged, dependent children, disabled, and the blind. No funds were provided, however, for general public assistance, on which unemployed persons who have exhausted their benefits or who are ineligible for benefits may be dependent. Both the majority and minority endorsed the recommendation of the Advisory Council on Public Assistance that federal grants-in-aid be extended to the general assistance field.

● Discrimination: Both majority and minority stressed the relatively greater impact of unemployment on certain groups, including Negroes and older workers, and proposed steps to discourage discrimination in hiring policies. The majority called for establishment of a federal agency "to combat discrimination and promote fair employment practices," and recommended enactment of legislation proposed by the Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging. The minority asked that a similar subcommittee study racial patterns in employment.

● Foreign Competition: Both groups endorsed so-called "trade adjustment" legislation to provide assistance to workers unemployed by reason of competition from imports. In the absence of such a program, the minority said, Congress should consider "developing some form of protection that will narrow wide discrepancies between our high wage levels and the low wage levels of other industrialized countries." Cooper, who once served as Ambassador to India, disagreed with this proposal.

Both groups were in essential agreement on various steps aimed at improving employment opportunities, such as additional funds for the U.S. Employment Service, expanded vocational training and guidance programs and the provision of retraining assistance for older workers displaced by technological changes. As for the cost of the various proposals, the majority said only that it "will be much less than the cost of continuing high levels of unemployment, and will represent a small fraction of the gains in production, in gross national product, and in tax yield." The minority didn't mention cost.

Nor did the minority comment on one of the majority's recommendations long discussed by Democratic liberals. This was the proposal for enactment of a series of standby measures to take effect automatically at the beginning of a recession, to stimulate economic activity through construction of housing and public works.

PAYMENTS TO LOCALITIES

S 910 --Reported Sept. 1, 1959 by the Senate Government Operations Committee (S Rept 869).

- Passed by the Senate by voice vote May 12, 1960. (For roll-call on recommittal and amendments, see p. 494)

The Senate in 1960 passed a bill (S 910) authorizing federal payments to communities suffering tax losses as a result of tax-free federal installations in their jurisdiction, but the House took no action on the bill.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 910, the Payments to Local Governments Act of 1960:

Set up, through 1966, a Presidentially appointed, five-member Federal Board for Payments to Local Governments to hear applications from local taxing authorities for payments in lieu of taxes on federal property.

Specified three tax categories for which payments for the tax years 1960-64 could be sought: (1) special assessments or taxes for public improvements (roads, sewers, etc.) levied on real property in urban or suburban areas after enactment of the bill; (2) taxes on federal real property leased or contracted to taxable persons (private companies); (3) taxes on industrial or commercial real property acquired by the Federal Government since June 30, 1950.

Authorized the Board, after hearings, to determine the amount of federal payment due, if any, and specified that the Board's decisions would be binding except in the case of adverse findings by a court or the General Accounting Office.

Directed the Board to make a comprehensive study of the problems imposed on local taxing authorities by the Government's immunity from local real and personal property taxes and of the local benefits received from federal properties, and directed it to make a final report to Congress within two years.

Authorized the President to set up a 12-member committee, composed of six federal officials, three state officials and three representatives of local taxing authorities, to advise the Board.

Directed that payments would be made by the federal agency whose installation caused the locality's tax loss.

Background

S 910 was sponsored by a bipartisan group of 35 Senators, headed by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.), Prescott Bush (R Conn.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) and Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.). Although the Eisenhower Administration had supported the principles of the legislation in 1956, when a similar bill failed to pass in the closing days of the session, the Budget Bureau in a July 8, 1959 letter to the Government Operations Committee opposed S 910.

The Bureau gave two reasons for its go-slow approach: the lack of reliable cost estimates and the uncertain effect of recent Supreme Court decisions. In four decisions rendered in 1958 the Court ruled that Government contractors and leaseholders were required to pay local taxes on federal real or personal property in their custody. The Bureau said contractors had billed the Defense Department and Atomic Energy Commission for over $125 million as a result of the Court's decisions.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Government Operations.

HEARINGS -- March 19-20, 1959. Testimony and statements in support of the measure were submitted by 11 Senators, the National Assn. of County Officials, the American Municipal Assn., the National Assn. of Tax Administrators, and numerous state and local government officials. Most of the testimony was by representatives of Western states with large areas of public lands.

ACTION -- Sept. 1, 1959 reported S 910, amended (S Rept 869), with Sens. Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) dissenting. Major Committee amendments clarified the survey and other functions and procedures of the Board and added provisions to guarantee that no communities which gained taxes from leased federal properties as a result of the Court rulings could also receive federal payments in lieu of taxes.

The majority report said the bill was "a modest attempt to deal with a problem" that Congressional committees had studied for over 10 years. "It represents the firm conviction of the Committee that no comprehensive program is possible, and that the only feasible approach to the problems involved is by means of a limited program of payments in lieu of taxes, coupled with a case-by-case consideration by an administrative board of the relative merits of individual cases."

The comprehensive study to be undertaken by the Board, the report said, would enable Congress "t evolve a uniform program on a national basis which will provide local taxing authorities with the relief to which they may be entitled without unduly burdening the Federal Treasury."

In a minority report Sen. Mundt said the bill would initiate a "vast, unrestricted" program "which is certain to expand rapidly and widely, without first measuring and defining the potential costs involved...." He called for establishment of a study commission to lay the foundation for a comprehensive program.

Floor Action

The Senate May 12 passed S 910 by voice vote. A recommittal motion by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) was rejected May 12 on a 30-52 roll-call vote and a substitute bill proposing that a commission be established to recommend a program to aid hard-pressed communities was defeated May 11 on a 24-53 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 494) Another amendment was rejected by standing vote and three amendments were accepted by standing and voice votes (see below). Dirksen May 12 said payments to communities under S 910 might amount to $500 million in the first year.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

May 11 -- Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Include special taxes, as well as assessments, for public improvements under the tax categories qualifying for federal payments. Voice vote.

May 12 -- Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- Exclude electrical generating plants from the definition of industrial and commercial properties qualifying for payments to communities (all major power projects already were covered by specific statutes). Standing vote.

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Make the District of Columbia eligible for payments under the bill. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

May 11 -- Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) -- Substitute for the bill a provision calling for establishment of a commission to study and report by June 1, 1961 its recommendations for a comprehensive program of aid to communities suffering from the tax-exempt status of federal property. Roll-call vote, 24-53.

Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) -- Delete the qualification that only commercial and industrial properties acquired after June 30, 1950 were liable for in-lieu-of-tax payments. Standing vote.

DEBATE -- May 11 -- Clair Engle (D Calif.) -- The bill is needed to take care of situations where defense industries, such as aircraft companies, give the Government title to basic construction materials "and thus exempt that property from local taxation".

Mundt -- The bill involves "fiscal irresponsibility" and "uncontrolled, back-door spendng".

Prescott Bush (R Conn.) -- Congress in passing the bill "will only be recognizing its clear responsibility to overburdened communities...invaded by federal installations."

A.E.C. AUTHORIZATION

HR 11713 -- Reported by Joint Atomic Energy Committee April 19, 1960 (H Rept 1525)
- Passed by the House by a 321-2 roll-call vote May 6. (See p. 444)
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote May 10.

PL 86-457 -- Signed into law May 13.

Congress in 1960 authorized appropriation of $256,476,000 for Atomic Energy Commission construction projects and AEC's civilian power program -- the amount recommended by the Joint Atomic Energy Committee after it made a net reduction in budget requests of $82,400,000.

As in 1959, the Committee refused to authorize construction of a proposed $100-million accelerator for research purposes pending further study. At the same time, the Committee abandoned its earlier efforts to enlarge the civilian power program, in tacit recognition of the slump in nuclear power prospects, and gave general endorsement to a 10-year development program proposed by AEC (see below).

Funds for projects authorized by HR 11713 and prior measures, as well as for AEC operating expenses, were provided subsequently in a public works appropriation bill that included $2.7 billion for AEC. (See story p. 386)

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 11713:

Authorized $211,476,000 for new AEC construction projects in fiscal 1961.

Authorized an additional $40 million for the civilian power program, and increased by $5 million AEC's authority to waive fuel charges.

Authorized $5 million for cooperative research with Canada.

Increased prior authorizations by $19 million and rescinded others totaling $18,290,000.

Extended for one year, until June 30, 1961, AEC's authority to approve proposals from industry under the third round of the power demonstration program.

Authorized AEC to undertake design studies on facilities for food irradiation, and for a steam-cooled power reactor, and to submit reports by April 1, 1961.

Committee Bill

Following hearings March 8-11 and April 5-7, the Joint Atomic Energy Committee April 19 reported identical clean bills (HR 11713 -- H Rept 1525, S 3387 -- S Rept 1277) authorizing fiscal 1961 appropriations of $256,476,000 for AEC. A budget request for $107,200,000 to build a two-mile-long linear electron accelerator at Stanford University -- first proposed by President Eisenhower in 1959 -- was denied because the Committee was "not satisfied" with the cost estimates for the project; only $3 million, to cover design and engineering work, was allowed. In separate views, six of the Committee's eight Republican members protested that "no convincing reasons" had been advanced for denying the full authorization.

While cutting AEC's request by $104,200,000, the Committee added $21,800,000 for other projects, for a net reduction of $82,400,000. The additions included $13 million for three or more power reactor plants for U.S. installations in the Antarctic, $7.8 million for two university laboratories, and an additional $1 million for biomedical research on the effects of radiation. The Committee also agreed to AEC's request for increases totaling $19 million in prior authorizations, and rescissions totaling $18,290,000.

The Committee approved in full AEC's request for $40 million for the civilian atomic power program. Of this, $25 million would be used for construction of an organic cooled prototype reactor, while $15 million would be available for research and development assistance to private power projects. In addition, the Committee approved AEC's request for $5 million for research and development on heavy water moderated nuclear powerplants, in cooperation with Canada.

Floor Action

The House May 6 and the Senate May 10 passed HR 11713 without amendment, after rejection of efforts on the floor of both chambers to restore the full authorization for the Stanford accelerator.

House passage, by a 321-2 roll-call vote, followed the defeat, by a 128-195 roll-call vote, of a motion by Rep. Charles S. Gubser (R Calif.) to recommit the bill to the Joint Committee with instructions to add the full budget request of $107,200,000. An amendment to the same effect, offered earlier by Rep. Craig Hosmer (R Calif.), was rejected by a 53-86 standing vote. (For voting, see chart p. 444)

Senate passage of the bill by voice vote likewise followed rejection, also by voice vote, of an amendment by Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) to add the Stanford project to the authorization measure. In passing HR 11713, the Senate postponed indefinitely action on S 3387, the companion bill.

10-Year Program

A long-simmering controversy over the pace and scope of nuclear power development in the United States was all but officially buried on Feb. 16, 1960, when AEC Chairman John A. McCone laid before the Joint Committee a 10-year program for the achievement of competitive nuclear power. The retirement in 1958 of McCone's predecessor, Lewis L. Strauss, whose personality as well as policies had irritated the Joint Committee's Democratic majority, had paved the way for reconciliation. At the same time, Democrats had begun to lose their earlier enthusiasm for a "crash" program of Government construction as both the Soviets and the Euratom countries scaled back their own ambitious plans for building nuclear power plants.

The Joint Committee nevertheless issued, late in 1958, a "Proposed Expanded Civilian Nuclear Power Program," calling for 21 new reactor projects over a five-to-seven-year period at an estimated additional cost of $875 million. It was in response to this proposal that AEC in 1959 accepted the goal of achieving competitive nuclear power within 10 years, and proceeded to draft the detailed program submitted to the Joint Committee on Feb. 16, at the beginning of its annual hearings on the "Development, Growth, and State of the Atomic Energy Industry."

As outlined by McCone, the AEC 10-year program envisioned no basic change in the scope of Government responsibility. The Commission proposed that it continue to construct promising experimental power reactors, assist industry in building larger prototypes, and leave to industry primary responsibility for large commercial-size nuclear power stations. No mention was made of McCone's 1959 proposal that Congress authorize AEC to subsidize the construction of large-scale demonstration plants.

In two other respects, however, the new program marked a departure from past policy and practice. First, AEC called for "the development of prototypes for large central station power plants," in contrast to its earlier emphasis on a variety of plant sizes. Second, the Commission, for the first time, envisioned a rough schedule for the achievement of competitive nuclear power under the various reactor concepts in use. While this schedule focused on 1968 as the target date for achieving competitive power in high cost energy areas, it indicated an expectation that certain types of plants might prove to be economical much sooner.

AEC's projections encompassed six reactor concepts, as follows: pressurized water reactors -- five plants in operation, under construction, or planned, totaling about 350,000 electrical kilowatt capacity; boiling water reactors -- six plants under way or planned, totaling about 350,000-EKW; nuclear superheat reactors -- two projects underway, totaling 80,000-EKW, which if successful would justify adding a 100,000-EKW prototype; organic moderated reactors -- two plants underway and another contemplated, totaling 100,000 to 150,000-EKW; sodium cooled reactors -- two plants underway, totaling 170,000-EKW; and gas-cooled reactors -- two projects underway, totaling about 60,000-EKW.

In presenting this program Feb. 16, McCone estimated it would cost AEC about $200 million a year through 1969, or about the same amount the Commission had been spending on the civilian power program. Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), chairman of the Joint Committee noted "a big gap in prototype construction with no starts from now until fiscal 1962." The Committee's April 19 report on the annual authorization bill expressed some doubt as to "whether the level of expenditures and pace of the effort is sufficient to achieve the goals set out" in the 10-year plan. But the Committee agreed that the plan was a "step forward," and made no effort to alter it during the 1960 session.

NATIONAL FORESTS

HR 10572 -- Reported April 24, 1960 by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 1551).
- Passed, amended, June 2 by voice vote of the House.

S 3044 -- Reported May 23 by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 1407).
HR 10572 -- Passed by voice vote of Senate June 8.
PL 86-517 -- Signed into law June 12.

Congress in 1960 passed a bill (HR 10572 -- PL 86-517) to develop national forest land resources in accord with practices which sponsors of the bill said the Secretary of Agriculture was already following.

National forest lands consist of forests, range-lands and high mountain watersheds in 41 states and Puerto Rico -- 181 million acres in all, administered in 151 national forests, mainly in the West. They consist largely of land reserved from the public domain in 1891. In fiscal 1959, timber, range and land use exceeded $122 million.

PROVISIONS: As enacted, HR 10572:

Established as formal Government policy that the national forests' surface resources be administered according to the principles of multiple use and sustained yield for development of outdoor recreation, range, timber, watershed and fish and wildlife resources.

Defined the principle of multiple use as management of the forests so "that they are utilized in the combination that will best meet the needs of the American people... and not necessarily the combination of uses that will give the greatest dollar return or the greatest unit output."

Directed the Secretary of Agriculture, who administers the national forest surface resources, to avoid uses that would impair the productivity of the land, and to manage the resources so that a perpetually high level of renewable resources like timber could be maintained.

Made clear that the bill was not intended to restrict mining, prospecting or water development operations in national forests or other federal lands; limit existing state jurisdiction over fish and wildlife; preclude development of wilderness areas; prevent grazing on range; or affect the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior over mineral resources.

BACKGROUND -- The House Agriculture Forests Subcommittee March 16 and 18 held hearings on HR 10572 and similar bills, and Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson's report, "Program for the National Forests", which he submitted to Congress March 24, 1959. The Secretary's report outlined to the year 2000 the needs and uses of the Nation's forests.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- June 24 -- The Senate by voice vote passed S J Res 95, to provide for reforestation by the Agriculture and Interior Departments of 48 million acres of idle and non-productive federal, state and private lands. The joint resolution had been reported June 22 by the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 1653). No action was taken on it in the House.

BANK MERGERS

S 1062 -- Reported April 17, 1959 by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 196).
- Passed by the Senate May 14, 1959, by voice vote. (1959 Almanac p. 277)
- Reported, amended, by House Banking and Currency Committee March 23, 1960 (H Rept 1416).
- Passed, amended, by the House April 4 by voice vote.
- House amendments agreed to by the Senate May 6 by voice vote.

PL 86-463 -- Signed into law May 13.

Enactment of S 1062 culminated a five-year effort to strengthen federal regulation of bank mergers following a decade during which 1,503 commercial banks, representing more than 10 percent of the Nation's total, disappeared through mergers. As finally approved, the bill fell short of President Eisenhower's original recommendations, but it provided uniform standards for the guidance of federal banking authorities in approving or disapproving mergers of insured banks, which comprise 95 percent of the Nation's banks holding 97 percent of total bank assets.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, S 1062:

Prohibited mergers or consolidations of insured banks "without the prior written consent" of the appropriate supervisory agency -- the Comptroller of the Currency for national banks, the Federal Reserve Board for state member banks, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. for non-member insured banks.

Required these agencies, in granting or withholding consent, to consider the effect of the merger "on competition (including any tendency toward monopoly)" and to obtain the views of the other two agencies and the Attorney General on this question, except in cases of emergency.

Provided that no merger be approved unless, after considering all banking and competitive factors, the responsible agency "finds the transaction to be in the public interest".

Background

President Eisenhower first asked Congress in 1956 to strengthen federal regulation of bank mergers, most of which were accomplished through the acquisition of assets and were therefore outside the purview of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, which prohibits any merger achieved through the acquisition of stock, the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

The Justice Department supported an amendment to Section 7, extending the prohibition to bank mergers involving the acquisition of assets as well as stock. But the banking fraternity argued for a more flexible approach, on grounds that competition was only one of several factors to be weighed in assessing the impact of a proposed merger. This split was reflected in Congress, when the House passed a bill amending Section 7 while the Senate passed an entirely different bill, requiring advance approval of all mergers and barring those tending "unduly to lessen competition" -- a new standard whose exact meaning was uncertain. Both bills died, however, in a session-end parliamentary tangle. (1956 Almanac p. 523)

The same split developed in 1959 when the Senate Banking and Currency Committee passed over an Administration bill amending the Clayton Act and reported S 1062 in substantially the same form as the bill passed by the Senate in 1956. It directed the three supervisory agencies, before approving a merger, to (a) consider various banking factors, (b) seek the views of the other two agencies, (c) consider whether the merger's effect "may be to lessen competition unduly or to tend unduly to create a monopoly" and (d) obtain a report from the Attorney General on that question.

The Senate passed S 1062 as reported, after voting 29-55 to reject a substitute offered by Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) to prohibit mergers fitting the test of the Clayton Act, to provide for a public hearing whenever the supervisory agencies disagreed, and to authorize court review of disputed decisions. (1959 Almanac p. 277)

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 16-18, 1960.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 18 -- Robert A. Bicks, acting Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, urged approval of the O'Mahoney amendment, including its provisions for hearings and court review.

ACTION -- The Committee March 23 reported S 1062 with amendments (H Rept 1416). For the disputed "lessen competition unduly" phrase in the Senate version, the Committee substituted consideration of "the effect of the transaction on competition (including any tendency toward monopoly)." The Committee also added language requiring a finding that the proposed merger would be in the public interest. Arguing that "some bank mergers are in the public interest, even though they lessen competition to a degree," the report added that "approval of a merger should depend on a positive showing of some benefit to be derived from it."

FLOOR ACTION -- The House April 4, by voice vote, suspended the rules and passed S 1062 as reported, without debate.

Final Action

The Senate May 6, by voice vote, agreed to the House amendments, sending S 1062 to the President.

During debate Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) inserted in the Congressional Record a series of questions he had prepared on the purpose and effect of the bill and the answers as supplied by Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee. The exchange brought out that the measure was not intended to place limits on the size of banks or discriminate against those which had been unable to merge in the past, and that the federal banking agencies in considering proposed mergers would take into account all elements of competition and the capital requirements of the area served.

DEBATE -- May 6 -- J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- The House and Senate agreed that control of bank mergers should be based on both banking and competitive factors and that the anti-merger provisions of the Clayton Act "should continue to be inapplicable to bank mergers".

Prescott Bush (R Conn.) -- "Representatives of the American Bankers Assn., the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp." said the bill was acceptable to them. The Comptroller of the Currency had slight reservations about the House language but was "willing to accept the House bill."

SMALL BUSINESS CAPITAL

S 2611 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 833) Aug. 27, 1959.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote Sept. 10, 1959.
- Reported, amended, by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 1608) May 14, 1960.
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the House May 16.
- Senate agreed to House amendments by voice vote June 2.

PL 86-502 -- Signed into law June 11.

Congress completed action in 1960 on an Administration-backed bill (S 2611) amending the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, to provide greater flexibility in the operations of small business investment companies (SBICs) receiving loans from the Small Business Administration under authority of the 1958 law. The changes were designed to stimulate activity under the Investment Act.

PROVISIONS: As enacted, S 2611:

Authorized SBICs to furnish equity financing to small businesses "in such manner and under such terms" as may be fixed by SBA regulations, rather than solely through the purchase of convertible debentures as stipulated in the original law.

Made permissive the formerly mandatory provision requiring a small business to reinvest up to 5 percent of any capital acquired from an SBIC in that company's capital stock.

Authorized banks owned by bank holding companies to invest 1 percent of their capital and surplus in any SBIC, including one owned by the same holding company.

Repealed a provision authorizing SBICs to act as depositories or fiscal agents for the U.S. Government.

Background

The financial problems of small businessmen led Congress in 1953 to set up the Small Business Administration, authorized to make loans from three revolving funds totaling $275 million. But SBA was not authorized to supply equity capital to small businesses and its loans were limited to a 10-year maturity. To help bridge the gap between supply and demand for equity financing and long-term loans, Congress passed the Small Business Investment Act of 1958. Under its terms, SBA was authorized to charter and help finance small business investment companies, which in turn would furnish equity capital or long-term loans to small businesses. (1958 Almanac p. 258)

Following hearings at which SBA Administrator Wendell B. Barnes proposed certain changes in the 1958 law, the Senate in 1959 passed S 2611. In addition to removing the restriction on equity financing, the bill repealed provisions requiring borrowers to reinvest a certain amount in SBIC stock and permitting SBICS to require borrowers to refinance all outstanding indebtedness with the SBIC. The House took no action on the bill before adjournment. (1959 Almanac p. 276)

House

An amended version of S 2611 was reported (H Rept 1608) May 14, 1960 by the House Banking and Currency Committee, following hearings March 7-11 by its Subcommittee No. 3. The Committee reinstated both of the 1958 provisions repealed under the Senate version, but made the stock-purchase proviso permissive instead of mandatory. The House May 16, by voice vote and without debate, passed S 2611 as amended, and the Senate June 2 agreed to the amendments, also by voice vote.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- April 27 -- The Senate Small Business Committee issued a report (S Rept 1293) on administration of the 1958 law. Noting that 79 SBICs with total private capital of $40 million had been licensed as of March 7, the report concluded that the program had "proved the soundness of its basic design." But the total equity needs of small business, it said, were "in the billions of dollars -- not in the tens of millions." Urging enactment of S 2611, the report also recommended six other changes in the 1958 act:

- Increase the maximum amount of subordinated debentures the Small Business Administration may buy in an SBIC from $150,000 to $1 million, and double the limit on SBA loans to SBICs, from 50 percent of the company's capital to 100 percent. These changes would permit an SBIC with $1 million in private capital to acquire total resources of $4 million and give it the same "leverage" of 4-to-1 now available to the smallest SBIC with $150,000 in private capital. The changes are needed, the report said, because "the minimum economic size for an independent SBIC is in the range of between $1 million and $5 million of lendable funds."
- Allow SBICs to grant restricted stock options to employees to attract and keep able managers. SBICs, the report said, "should not be saddled with this disadvantage during their pioneering stage."
- Permit SBICs to set up tax-deductible bad-debt reserves up to 20 percent of capital, in keeping with the similar reserve authorized by law for savings and loan associations.
- Permit SBICs to "pass through" to their stockholders, free of tax, any capital gains, a privilege enjoyed by regulated investment companies. "If this is advisable for investment trusts, a huge, established, and booming industry, it ought a fortiori to be extended to SBICs, a pioneering experiment in helping small business," the report said.
- Authorize SBICs to participate in regular SBA loans of more than 5 years' maturity. "All other financial institutions are able to augment their income and help offset their overhead by the fees they receive from SBA for servicing participation loans," the report said. "Why should SBICs be the lone outcast?"
- Place a ceiling on maximum SBIC interest charges of double the prime long-term-credit rate. Congress, the report said, "did not think it was conferring Government approval of loan sharks, nor did it anticipate it would lend SBICs public dollars at 5 percent interest for relending at 15 percent interest," a practice permitted by the Small Business Administration.

These proposals were embodied in bills (S 3785, 3786) subsequently inroduced by Chairman John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) and nine other Small Business Committee members, but no action was taken on them in 1960.

SBA LOAN AUTHORITY

HR 11207 -- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 1738) June 2, 1960.
- Passed by the House by voice vote June 6.
- Reported, amended by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 1748) June 27.
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate July 1.

Senate and House conferees were unable to compose the differences between two versions of a bill (HR 11207) increasing the business loan authority of the Small Business Administration, and the legislation died with adjournment. An increase of $150 million was approved by the House; the Senate agreed to $75 million only. The barrier to compromise, however, was a series of provisions, added by the Senate, respecting small business subcontracting.

Background

The Administration in 1959 asked Congress to increase SBA's business loan authority by $200 million, from $500 million to $700 million. The House approved the request, but the Senate cut the increase to $75 million and the House concurred. (1959 Almanac p. 276)

In 1960 the Administration returned with a request for a further increase of $150 million, from the $575 million approved in 1959 to $725 million. (Only $60 million was requested in actual appropriations, however, of which Congress approved about $50 million. (See p. 380)

House

As reported (H Rept 1738) June 2 by the House Banking and Currency Committee and passed June 6 by voice vote of the House, HR 11207 raised SBA's business loan authority by $150 million, as requested. The bill also repealed a provision of existing law requiring the Attorney General to exercise special surveillance over SBA programs to prevent undue concentrations of economic power. The provision, Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas) told the House, added nothing to the Attorney General's responsibilities and created an erroneous impression that SBA programs needed special attention.

Senate

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee June 27 reported an amended version of HR 11207 (S Rept 1748), raising SBA's business loan authority by $75 million. As reported, however, and as passed by voice vote of the Senate July 1, the bill also contained several provisions to which House conferees proved unwilling to agree, resulting in the failure to enact either version of HR 11207. These disputed provisions:

Directed the SBA Administrator to establish a small business subcontracting program which would ensure the equitable participation of small business concerns as subcontractors or suppliers to concerns holding Government procurement contracts.

Required every concern making a contract with a federal agency for property or services in excess of $1 million, or a subcontract over $500,000, to conform to the regulations of the small business subcontracting program.

Required daily publication by the Department of Commerce of all proposed defense procurement action of $10,000 or above and all civilian procurement actions of $5,000 or above, except procurements which are of a security nature, involve perishable subsistence supplies or utility services, or which are of an emergency nature.

Directed the Attorney General to make surveys of any Government activities that would injure small business (revising broader language in the original law).

GOVERNMENT PERSONNEL

S 1638 -- Reported by Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee June 10, 1960 (S Rept 1545).

A bill (S 1638) to revise government personnel management by giving the President more direct authority over civil service policy was reported to the Senate in 1960, but was not acted on.

As reported, S 1638:

Created an Office of Personnel Management in the Executive Office of the President and transferred to it the policy-making functions of the Civil Service Commission.

Restricted the activities of the Civil Service Commission to those of an appeals board and a "watchdog" over the merit system.

Established nine-year (instead of the existing six-year) terms for the three Civil Service Commissioners, with one term expiring every three years.

Established a career service including appointive offices in the Executive Branch and courts.

Held each agency head responsible for personnel administration within his agency in accordance with rules issued by the President.

Background

A "merit system" for government employment, administered by a semi-independent Civil Service Commission, was established by the Pendleton Act in 1883. Subsequently, several governmental committees periodically recommended that a personnel agency would be more efficient than the Civil service Commission, and that the personnel policy-making functions ought to be separated from the "watchdog" responsibilities of the Commission. Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) introduced S 1638 in 1959.

The President's Special Assistant for Personnel Matters, Rocco C. Siciliano, supported the objectives of the bill in a speech to the Public Personnel Assn. Oct. 5, 1959. But Vaux Owen, president of the National Federation of Civil Service Employees, opposed Siciliano's view Oct. 6.

Senate

The Post Office and Civil Service Committee held hearings May 13, 14, 27, and June 22, 1959 and June 10, 1960 reported S 1638 with amendments (S Rept 1545). The report said the President was in fact responsible for personnel management, and that the "semi-independent" status of the Civil Service Commission was a hindrance to sound administration.

In minority views Sens. Frank Carlson (R Kan.), C. Norman Brunsdale (R N.D.) and Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) said S 1638 involved "risks to the merit system."

REFUGEE IMMIGRATION

HJ Res 397 -- Reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 1433) March 29, 1960.
- Passed by a voice vote of the House April 4.
- Reported by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 1651) June 22.
- Passed, amended, by a voice vote of the Senate July 1.
- House and Senate agreed to conference report (H Rept 2088) July 2.

PL 86-648 -- Signed into law July 14.

Congress in 1960 passed a joint resolution (H J Res 397) authorizing resettlement in the United States of refugees under the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The new law set up a program under which the Attorney General would admit, of the estimated 28,000 or fewer refugee-escapees in Western Europe, one-fourth of the total number resettled by other countries.

Sponsors of the program said it would give the U.S. an opportunity to make a significant contribution to the UN's World Refugee Year, which ran from July 1, 1959 to June 31, 1960.

The proposal was passed with bipartisan support in both chambers, although many Members maintained that the program was inadequate to meet the demands of the refugee problem and said there should be an over-all revision of the immigration laws.

President Eisenhower in 1960 asked Congress to liberalize existing immigration restrictions by doubling the 154,000 quotas available for immigrants to the U.S. each year and by making special provision for entry on parole of political refugees and others fleeing persecution abroad. As enacted, H J Res 397 contained none of the President's immigration revision requests and fell short of his requests for a refugee program. Upon signing the bill into law July 14, Mr. Eisenhower said he was approving the measure because of its "general merit and the urgent need to accomplish" its purpose.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, H J Res 397:

Authorized parole admission into the U.S. of refugee-escapees who, when the application is made, are not within a Communist-dominated country, are not a national of the country from which they apply and who fall under the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

Directed the Secretary of State to inform the Attorney General of the number of refugee-escapees resettled between July 1, 1959 and June 30, 1960 by other nations and, on each succeeding Jan. 1 and July 1, of the number of refugee-escapees resettled within the preceding six months.

Limited the number of refugees the Attorney General could admit during a six-month period to 25 percent of the number reported by the Secretary of State as resettled in the preceding six-month period by other countries.

Required that the refugees must qualify for admission under the terms of existing immigration law.

Required the Attorney General to submit to Congress by Jan. 15 and June 15 of each year a detailed statement concerning each refugee admitted under the program.

Provided for termination of the program on July 1, 1962 or earlier, if either the House or Senate within 90 days of the Attorney General's report adopted a resolution stating the program should be discontinued.

Authorized the Attorney General to include 500 handicapped, "difficult to resettle" refugees, limited to those of good moral character who are not institutional cases.

Authorized the exclusion or deportation of an alien convicted of illicit possession of marijuana.

Permitted an alien admitted to the U.S. with non-immigrant status to qualify for permanent residence without leaving the country to obtain an immigrant visa.

Increased by 500 the number of special non-quota visas available for Portugese nationals from the Azores; added a year's annual quota (3,136) to the number of special visas available for Netherlands nationals expelled from Indonesia; and extended the expiration date for issuance of the visas to June 30, 1962.

Extended from June 30, 1960 to June 30, 1961 the special program for admission of alien orphans.

The basic immigration and naturalization law, the McCarran-Walter Act, was enacted in 1952 over President Truman's veto. It retained the existing national origins system as the basis for establishing quotas, but simplified the method of calculation by making the quota equal to one-sixth of 1 percent of those in the U.S. in 1920 attributable to a given national origin. The Act also continued the exemption from quota limitation for most natives of the Western Hemisphere.

Congress in 1953 passed the Refugee Relief Act, admitting 209,000 refugees over a three-year period. The 209,000 were divided into 15 different classes and quotas were established for each class. The quotas were set up without regard to those established under the McCarran-Walter Act. The Refugee Relief Act also gave immigration status to 5,000 refugees already in the U.S. In 1954 the law was amended to permit the transfer of quota numbers in certain categories.

The quota system set up by the McCarran-Walter and Refugee Acts proved inadequate, as many refugees in West European countries were not taking advantage of the program and most of the quotas for these countries which were not filled could not be transferred to other countries where the demand was high. Consequently, in 1955 and subsequent years President Eisenhower asked that the laws be substantially amended to permit the transfer of unused quotas to areas where they were needed, but Congress made no major changes in immigration or refugee laws.

ADMINISTRATION REQUESTS

In a March 17 special message to Congress, the President submitted a two-part immigration program. (For text, see p. 630)

The President made these specific proposals for revision of the McCarran-Walter Act:

(1) Remove the ceiling of 2,000 on quotas within the Asiatic-Pacific Triangle.

(2) Use the 1960 instead of the 1920 census as the statistical basis for over-all limitations on immigration.

(3) Accept annual immigration equalling one-sixth of 1 percent of over-all U.S. population.

(4) In distributing the additional immigration quotas, give each nation a quota proportional to the actual number of immigrants from that country between 1924 and 1959, instead of using the existing ethnic composition of the entire U.S. population. The effect of this request would be to give a larger proportion of the additional quota numbers to Central, Southern and East European countries from which there was heavy immigration in the period 1924-59.

(5) Distribute unused quotas of undersubscribed nations among the oversubscribed countries.

In the second part of his message, the President asked for authority to permit the entry on parole of political refugees and others fleeing from persecution abroad. As later spelled out in HR 11235 and S 3225, the Administration program would have given the Attorney General the power to admit up to 10,000 refugees annually, to be selected by the Secretary of State. The President, by special proclamation, could suspend the 10,000-person ceiling if he found that a situation had arisen creating a special class of refugees in need of help and that it was in the interest of the U.S. to admit them as parolees. The program would have applied to persons who had left Communist-occupied or Communist-dominated areas, or the Middle East, and could not return for fear of racial, religious or political persecution. It also applied to a number of other types of refugees.

Chairman Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) of the House Judiciary Immigration and Nationality Subcommittee March 17 said the Administration's immigration program had "no chance" and that it was "just a warmed-over version of what was offered four years ago."

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

HEARINGS -- July 15, 1959 and March 24, 1960 on H J Res 397, authorizing resettlement in the U.S. of certain refugees under the mandate of the U.N.

ACTION -- March 29 reported H J Res 397 (H Rept 1433) with amendments which set up a quota system of 25 percent of those refugees admitted by other countries and ending the program on July 1, 1962, if not terminated earlier by Congress.

Since the end of World War II, the report said, the U.S. had admitted about one third of the more than 2 million refugees who had been resettled since 1945. In addition, 711,212 displaced persons and refugees had been admitted to the United States under special programs. Officials estimated that 23,000 to 28,000 refugees currently were in camps run by the U.N. in Western Europe.

Floor Action

The House April 4, by voice vote, passed H J Res 397 as reported. House passage was under suspension of the rules which required two-thirds vote and prohibited floor amendments.

As sent to the Senate, H J Res 397 was in the form eventually enacted, except for technical amendments and provisions of two House-passed bills which were added by the Senate.

DEBATE -- April 4 -- Arch A. Moore Jr. (R W.Va.) -- The bill involves a minimum of risk for the U.S. since in "all probability not more than 2,500 to 3,000 people" would be admitted annually.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

ACTION -- June 22 reported H J Res 397 with amendments (S Rept 1651).

The Committee attached to the bill provisions of two other immigration measures previously passed by the House. They were: HR 9385, making the possession of marijuana grounds for exclusion or deportation and permitting an alien admitted with non-immigrant status to qualify for permanent residence without leaving the country to obtain an immigrant visa; and HR 10419, authorizing increases in special non-quota immigration visas for Netherlands nationals expelled from Indonesia after the country gained its independence and Portugese victims of an Azores Islands earthquake, and extending for one year a program for admission of certain alien orphans adopted by U.S. citizens. (1959 Almanac p. 198)

The House had passed HR 9385 by voice vote Jan. 18. As added to H J Res 397, two provisions were excluded: one granting non-quota status to spouses and children of aliens with first preference quota status, and the other providing a three-months admission period for alien fiances or fiancees of U.S. citizens, with deportation at the end of the period if there was no marriage.

HR 10419 was passed by voice vote of the House March 7.

Floor Action

The Senate July 1 passed H J Res 397 by voice vote with the committee amendments and an amendment by Sen. Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii), which was accepted on a standing vote. The Fong amendment permitted the Attorney General to parole into the United States 2,250 refugees a year for two years from areas not within the mandate of the U.N. High Commissioner. Fong in offering his amendment said the bill as reported was "grossly discriminatory" but that his amendment would eliminate the "bias" from the Nation's program to help solve the world's refugee problem.

Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) objected to the amendment on the grounds that it would jeopardize final enactment of the bill and that it went beyond the scope of H J Res 397, which was designed to enable the U.S. to participate in the World Refugee Year by helping to close European refugee camps.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

July 1 -- Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) -- Authorize the Attorney General to parole into the United States between July 1, 1960 and June 30, 1962 a total of 4,500 refugees not under the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Standing vote.

Final Action

Both chambers July 2 by voice votes agreed to the conference report on H J Res 397 (H Rept 2088). The final version included all Senate-passed provisions except the Fong amendment. Fong, noting that House Immigration Subcommittee members had announced they would study the refugee problem in the Far East before the 87th Congress assembled, said he would press for his amendment again in 1961.

CQ Fact Sheet On White House Youth Conference

YOUTH CONFERENCE STRESSED STRONG GOVERNMENT ROLE

Definite sentiment for a larger federal and state government role in welfare and educational programs was expressed by the sixth decennial White House Conference on Children and Youth, held March 27-April 1 in Washington, D.C., and attended by over 7,500 professionals, laymen and young people.

A Congressional Quarterly study of 670 recommendations released by the conference indicated the group believed a strong government role was necessary if problems affecting all ages in the Nation, but youth in particular, were to be solved. Many recommendations stressed the importance of increased federal and state financial aid and a more active concern of governmental agencies to provide better opportunities and legislative action to ensure the realization of certain basic rights. Only a few of the recommendations favored reducing governmental activity.

The report touched on the problems and opportunities of children and youth in their physical and social environments, in religion and in the fulfillment of their rights as individuals. Prominently mentioned in the recommendations was the importance of state compliance with the 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation, more adequate educational facilities at all levels with expanded federal and state scholarship programs free of loyalty-oath provisions, improved living and working conditions and the elimination of discrimination in all aspects of American life.

Background

Youth conferences have been held every 10 years since President Theodore Roosevelt convened the first White House Conference on the Care of Dependent Children in 1909. Subsequent conferences included the White House Conference on Child Welfare Standards (1919), the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection (1930), the White House Conference on Children in Democracy (1940) and the Mid-Century White House Conference on Children and Youth (1950).

The organization of the 1960 conference was directed by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and was initiated by President Eisenhower in May 1958. Financed largely by private funds ($750,000 through private contributions plus a Congressional appropriation of $350,000), the conference was developed around one governmental committee -- the Interdepartmental Committee on Children and Youth -- and two non-governmental committees -- the National Council of State Committees on Children and Youth and the Council of National Organizations on Children and Youth. All three were organized for the fifth conference, held in 1950.

Of the 7,500 delegates who attended the conference to discuss the problems of children and youth and take new ideas back to their communities, approximately 1,400 were young people between 16 and 21 years of age. Professionals attending included college presidents, judges, labor leaders, psychiatrists and social workers.

Recommendations

The list of recommendations was the major product of the conference and reflected the thought of the 18 different forums on the variety of topics discussed. In many instances the recommendations were not limited in their effect on young people, but touched on the lives of all U.S. citizens (e.g., better housing, welfare services and employment opportunities) in which case the emphasis was on the benefit which would be derived for youth. Since the recommendations were submitted by the various forums rather than the conference as a whole, in many cases they overlapped or were similar in content. The recommendations were not voted on by the conference as a whole.

A Congressional Quarterly tabulation showed that 127 of the recommendations made specific proposals or took specific positions while the remainder were more generalized in nature. Of the 127 specific recommendations, CQ found that 59 referred directly to action which should be taken by the Federal Government, 29 to action by state and local governments and 39 to action by all levels of government. The majority of these -- 69 -- involved administrative or planning action, 28 called for the enactment of legislation and 30 for some degree of government spending.

Following is a list of the major recommendations:

General Recommendations

Federal, state laws -- Liberalization of federal and state laws with respect to minimum wage, fair employment practices, workman's compensation, unemployment compensation, public assistance, housing, public recreation and racial desegregation. (For specific recommendations, see below)

Federal aid -- Increased federal aid for research and planning in the social and behavioral sciences, health, welfare, housing and recreation.

Children's Bureau -- Elevation of the Children's Bureau to a major agency within HEW; increased appropriations for its operation.

Physical Environment

Planning -- Community development of comprehensive plans to ensure safety and health of all children based on their needs regardless of residence, race, color, creed, economic or social situation; planning board membership to include professional and lay persons and young people; additional public and private funds for planning purposes to be provided.

Urban affairs -- Establishment of a federal Urban Affairs Department within the Executive Branch to provide research and planning services needed by urban areas; state encouragement of regional and metropolitan planning groups.

Improved environment -- More adequate school facilities, library services, health facilities, non-commercial recreation, public utilities, sewage facilities, water supply, low-rent public housing, middle-income housing, residential planning, slum clearance and housing for young married couples.

Highways -- Coordination of the federal highway system with state and local highway programs.

Social Environment

Planning -- Development of federal and state plans to deal with the various social and technological problems in a comprehensive and coordinated manner which would improve planning both vertically (between levels of government) and horizontally (between various agencies, public and private); establishment of committees to develop a sense of community responsibilities; development of federal and state policies to make rural life more attractive economically, socially and culturally.

Education -- Establishment of a cabinet-level Education Department and a consistent federal policy and program on public education; passage of federal legislation providing federal aid to public education; increased federal aid for research; establishment of a comprehensive federal scholarship and fellowship program free of any loyalty-oath requirements; increased programs of federal matching grants and long-range flexible interest loans for college housing; additional facilities and programs for gifted children; expanded school curricula designed to provide more motivation to children.

Schools, pupils -- Organization of public school systems which reflect in the schools the religious, ethnic and economic make-up of the community; evaluation of a pupil's progress by standards which take into account his potential, rather than evaluation by arbitrary standards; extension of public education to include kindergarten and college.

Vocational training -- Continuation of joint federal, state and local responsibility for vocational training; additional federal and state support for vocational counseling and guidance programs.

Families -- Recognition of the family as the basic unit of society; adding social workers to school staffs for counseling and guidance to families; extension of facilities for parent education; increased income tax exemptions for children.

Marriage, divorce -- Passage by the states of uniform marriage and divorce laws.

Recreation, leisure -- Establishment of a federal recreation bureau; additional federal and state aid for increasing recreational and leisure facilities; greater consideration of recreational needs when developing conservation programs, national parks and wilderness areas; wider use of radio and television facilities for children's leisure and education, including designation by the Federal Communications Commission of certain frequencies for such purposes.

Welfare services -- Increased federal and state aid to welfare services, particularly where the service benefits children; establishment of federal and state programs for the administration of public health services; periodic physical and dental examinations of all children and youths.

Overcrowded areas -- Federal aid to areas overcrowded by immigration, for improved health, education, welfare, recreation and housing.

Obscene literature -- Passage of federal legislation to control the use of the U.S. mails for the dissemination of obscene literature.

Unemployment -- Federal aid to improve employment opportunities in depressed areas or in areas with seasonal fluctuations; establishment of a federal commission to study the effects of automation; establishment of federal and state apprenticeship programs and joint federal-state workcamps.

Minimum wage -- Increased federal minimum wage to $1.25 per hour and extended coverage to migratory workers and other groups specifically exempted from existing laws.

Farm workers, migrant labor -- Extension of provisions of the National Labor Relations Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act to include farm workers; termination of the admission of foreign seasonal farm workers except where there was the intent to establish citizenship; adoption by the various states of the Interstate Commerce Commission's regulations governing transportation of migrant workers; revision of federal and state programs of domestic farm labor recruitment to provide additional security for the workers and their children; establishment of federal facilities to provide better education, health and welfare services for the children of migrant families; federal grants and matching funds to help states establish facilities for migrant workers; federal long-term, low-interest loans for migrant housing.

Child labor laws -- Passage of child labor laws to protect children under age 16.

Unemployment compensation -- Revision of state unemployment laws to increase payments to 50 percent of the individual's wages, for a period of 39 weeks; extension of the laws to include groups presently excluded.

Voting age -- Passage of state laws lowering the voting age to 18 years; encouragement of youth to participate in partisan politics.

Poll tax -- Passage of state laws abolishing poll taxes; establishment of policies at all levels of government to safeguard the basic voting rights of individuals.

Draft -- Establishment of a committee to study the effect on youth of peacetime compulsory draft laws.

Personnel

Nationwide program -- Establishment of a nationwide personnel program to meet critical shortages of qualified personnel in health, social welfare, education and recreation; increased opportunities to train professional personnel.

Human Rights

Discrimination -- Abolition of discriminatory practices which deny equal opportunities in education, employment and public places; compliance by state and local governments with the 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in schools; abolition of college and university entrance-quota systems.

Housing -- Adoption of federal regulations prohibiting segregation in federal housing projects and requiring that new housing financed with federal funds be made available without racial restrictions; enactment of state laws prohibiting discrimination in housing because of race, creed or color.

Fair employment -- Enactment of federal and state legislation prohibiting discrimination in employment; expansion of federal committees having jurisdiction over discrimination in employment.

Children and Youths as Individuals

National program -- Provision of federal and state funds for a nationwide program to include youth conservation camps, residential treatment centers for severely disturbed children, resident schools and day-care facilities on the state and local levels.

Juvenile delinquency -- Establishment of a federal commission to advise the President and Congress on matters relating to juvenile delinquency; provision of federal funds on a matching basis for programs of prevention, control and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

Juvenile courts -- Enactment of state laws containing the essential elements of the model juvenile court laws recommended by the Children's Bureau and others.

Narcotics -- Improvement of federal facilities, followup treatment and parole services for narcotic addicts.

Crippled children -- Provision of additional federal funds for programs benefiting crippled children.

Mentally retarded children -- Provision of additional federal aid for the training and education of the mentally handicapped; establishment within each state of competent mental health facilities.

Medical programs -- Greater use of federal funds for improving health facilities and medical care programs.

Adoption -- Enactment by states of uniform adoption laws.

Indians -- Additional federal attention to the needs of Indian children and the development of programs to provide more adequate health, education and welfare services on reservations.

World Concerns

Continued economic aid and technical assistance to other countries upon their request, especially in areas of child development and growth.

Future Conferences

Follow-up committees -- Establishment of a permanent follow-up committee to help carry out the recommendations of the conference, establishment of continuing permanent committees within each state devoted to children and youth.

1970 conference -- Planning the seventh decennial White House Conference on Children and Youth as a prelude to a world conference to be held during the summer of 1970 under the direction of the United Nations.

Plans for 1970

The President's National Committee on the White House Conference scheduled a final meeting for early October to create a new National Committee for Children and Youth to prepare for the 1970 conference. An additional responsibility of the National Committee will be to aid the state groups, which acted as the nucleus of the recent conference, in carrying out the recommendations where applicable.

The National Committee will be an independent organization staffed largely by volunteers and financed by private funds. No plans have been made to submit to Congress legislative proposals embodying the conference's recommendations; however, committee spokesmen said the various federal agencies concerned with these problems have indicated they may embody applicable recommendations in future legislative requests.

Legislative Requests

The conference made a number of requests for the enactment of federal legislation. Following is a list of major requests and action on them by the 2nd session of the 86th Congress (page references are to this volume):

- College housing -- The President Sept. 14 signed PL 86-788 authorizing an additional $500 million for the college housing program. (Page 271)
- Depressed areas -- The Senate May 24 sustained the veto of S 722, the depressed areas bill. (Page 292)
- Civil Rights -- The President May 6 signed PL 86-449, the Civil Rights Act of 1960. (Page 185)
- Education -- The House and the Senate passed differing aid-to-education bills, but the House Rules Commitee blocked a conference. (Page 232)
- Health personnel -- The President Sept. 8 signed PL 86-720 to provide for an expanded graduate public health training program.
- Juvenile delinquency -- The House Education and Labor Committee May 18 reported HR 12108 authorizing a $25 million, five-year program of federal aid to state, community and non-profit private agencies to help control and prevent juvenile delinquency.
- Student affidavit -- The Senate June 15 passed S 2929 changing the non-communist affidavit requirement of the National Defense Education Act. (Page 238)
- Minimum wage -- House and Senate conferees failed to reach an agreement on differing minimum wage proposals. (Page 309)
- Middle-income housing -- The Senate Banking and Currency Committee June 17 reported S 1342 to provide $100 million for the operation of a federal limited-profit mortgage corporation to make loans on housing for middle-income housing.
- Obscene literature -- The President July 14 signed PL 86-673 authorizing the courts to permit the Post Office Department to detain obscene mail until the conclusion of legal proceedings.
- Public housing -- The Senate June 16 passed S 3670 which included an authorization for the construction of an additional 25,000 public housing units, but the final housing bill (PL 86-788) made no provision for additional units. (Page 271)
- Sewage facilities -- The House Feb. 25 sustained a veto of HR 3610 to increase federal grants to communities for sewage plant construction. (Page 250)
- Slum clearance -- The Senate June 16 passed S 3670 which included a $350 million increase in the capital grant authorization of the urban renewal program, but the provision was not included in the final bill enacted. (Page 271)
- Urban affairs department -- The Senate Banking and Currency Committee June 16 reported S 3292 creating a Cabinet-level Department of Housing and Metropolitan Affairs.
- Youth work camps -- The Senate Aug. 13, 1959 passed S 812 creating a federal youth conservation corps; no action was taken in 1960. (1959 Almanac p. 237)

MINIMUM WAGE BILL DIES IN CONFERENCE

HR 12677 -- Reported by the House Education and Labor Committee June 22, 1960 (H Rept 1933).
S 3758 -- Reported by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee June 27 (S Rept 1744).
HR 12677 -- Passed by the House, amended, June 30 by a 341-72 roll-call vote. (See p. 460)
- Passed by the Senate, amended, Aug. 18 by a 62-34 roll-call vote. (See p. 513-14)
- Conference committee recessed Aug. 30 after failing to reach agreement.

Although Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), at a press conference July 31 at Hyannis Port, Mass., following his nomination as Democratic Presidential candidate, called minimum wage legislation a major objective of his party during the August session of Congress, no bill was enacted into law in 1960.

Senate and House conferees, meeting the last week of August, were unable to reconcile differences between versions of the bill passed earlier by each chamber, and the conference broke up in disagreement Aug. 30. Kennedy, the conference chairman and sponsor of the Senate bill, said the House conferees would not make significant compromises to get a bill passed and therefore "we'd rather come back and try to do it in January."

The conference broke down over the two major differences between the House and Senate versions of the bill. The first was the minimum wage rate. The House version raised the minimum required to be paid to workers covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (as most recently amended in 1955) from $1 an hour to $1.15 an hour; the Senate version raised the minimum to $1.25. Kennedy several times indicated he was willing to yield on this to the House if the House would yield to him on the other major difference, extension of coverage: the House version added to some 23.7 million workers already covered by the FLSA a net of 500,000 to 700,000 additional persons; the Senate version covered 4 million additional. No compromise was reached, however.

One factor in the impasse apparently was the reluctance of the AFL-CIO (which supported the Kennedy version of the bill) to sacrifice increased coverage in order to win a higher hourly minimum.

Background

The first successful federal attempt to regulate working hours and establish a "floor" for wages was the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, sometimes called the "Federal Wage-Hour Law". It set a minimum hourly wage for covered workers of 25 cents, to rise to 40 cents in 1945. It also made 40 hours the normal work week for most workers covered by the law and required employers to pay time and a half for overtime. For overseas possessions, however, the statutory minimum wage did not apply. Instead, industry committees were established to recommend minimums in accord with local conditions. This law provided the basis for all subsequent legislation.

Wartime conditions favorable to labor served to postpone further change in the Act until 1949, when Congress raise the minimum to 75 cents. In 1955 it raised the minimum to $1, with little other change except for amendments strengthening wage-setting procedures in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Organized labor was pressing at that time for a $1.25 minimum.

The majority of American workers did not receive wage and hour protection under the Fair Labor Standards Act. The actual number covered in 1959, according to U.S. Labor Department figures, was about 23,723,000 million out of a labor force of about 65 million. Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, speaking in 1953, said that he was "shocked" to learn that the wage-hour provisions covered only about one-third of the labor force. Even if some 23 million executive, professional, Government, self-employed and unpaid farm family workers were excluded from total employment figures, the covered workers would make up little more than half the remainder of the labor force. The others, including millions of retail clerks, farm hands, domestic servants, construction workers and "outside salesmen", as well as fishermen, seamen, local transit system workers and many others, did not fall within the provisions of the law, either because they were not engaged in interstate commerce, or because they were specifically exempted.

In the years since the Fair Labor Standards Act first was passed, efforts to amend it centered on extending the coverage as well as raising the minimum. But Congress through 1959 never extended coverage. In 1949, when the minimum was brought up to 75 cents, net coverage was actually reduced, through language changes and amendments exempting certain additional workers. Meanwhile, employment in groups largely excluded, particularly the service trades, expanded at a relatively high ratio, increasing the percentage of uncovered workers.

One result was that unionized industrial workers enjoyed the fruits of collective bargaining as well as the underpinning to bargaining provided by a rising federal wage floor, while unorganized workers in retail trade, small business and other activities had recourse neither to bargaining nor federal wage protection, and some continued to make less than 75 cents an hour.

Each year since 1955, when the minimum wage law was last amended, President Eisenhower asked Congress for limited expansion of coverage but not for an increase in the $1 minimum. During the same period, organized labor, led by the AFL-CIO, pressed for an increase to $1.25 an hour and a larger expansion of coverage than the Administration favored. President Eisenhower Jan. 20, 1959, in his Economic Message, repeated his earlier request.

Early in 1959, Kennedy introduced a bill (S 1046), corresponding to AFL-CIO proposals, raising the minimum to $1.25 an hour and extending coverage to upwards of 8 million additional persons. An Administration bill (S 1967) also was introduced simply expanding coverage to about 3 million additional persons. Key provisions of the two bills:

- S 1046 -- The bill was introduced Feb. 16, 1959 by Kennedy; a corresponding House bill (HR 4488) was introduced the same day by Rep. James Roosevelt (D Calif.).

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Labor Subcommittee, headed by Kennedy, May 7-June 4 held hearings on S 1046, S 1967 and other measures and subsequently approved S 1046 with amendments July 10, 1959. (1959 Almanac p. 306)

S 1046 as approved by the Subcommittee raised the minimum for presently covered workers to $1.15 three months after enactment and to $1.25 a year later.

Its coverage provisions introduced several new concepts in minimum wage legislation. It extended coverage beyond persons "engaged" in interstate commerce and the production of goods for interstate commerce, and brought in as well those employed in enterprises "engaged in activities affecting (interstate) commerce." "Activities affecting" interstate commerce would include activities "necessary to" interstate commerce or to the production or distribution of goods in interstate commerce. The clause provided the basis for shifting the coverage provisions of the Act, but its precise application was complicated and in some cases might depend on court interpretations. It was designed particularly to bring in retail, service and other industries which might not be covered otherwise because the workers were not "engaged in" interstate commerce. S 1046 made a

Congress and the Court: Minimum Wage Landmarks

In the historic legal struggle over Article 1, Section 8 of the U.S. Constitution, giving Congress the power "to regulate Commerce...among the several states", minimum wage legislation has been one of the key battle-grounds.

By 1960 Congressional authority in the wage and hour field was subject to little dispute. Extension of wage and hour protection in 1960 to "activities affecting" interstate commerce, as proposed by the Kennedy bill, would have added a further dimension to federal regulation in the wage-hour field, but would have set no precedents constitutionally, and in contrast to the charged atmosphere of the early 1930s, was not likely to be opposed on purely legal grounds. Wage legislation through 1960 is summarized below:

1913 -- First state minimum wage law went into effect in Massachusetts.

1918 -- Congress enacted a law governing minimum wages paid to women and children in the District of Columbia.

1923 -- The Supreme Court ruled the District of Columbia law unconstitutional (Adkins v. Children's Hospital), terming it a violation of the due process clause of the 5th Amendment. This decision served to invalidate similar state laws and effectively halted national minimum wage efforts for a decade.

1931 -- Congress enacted the Davis-Bacon Act, requiring prevailing wages to be paid laborers and mechanics on Government construction jobs.

1933 -- Congress enacted the National Industrial Recovery Act, setting up a system of "codes of fair competition" among different trades and industries, covering hours, wages and other conditions of employment. The codes were to be drawn up by representatives chosen by the trades and industries themselves. Upon approval by the President, they were to become binding on all persons engaged in each trade and industry, with heavy fines for violation. Some 500 codes were put into operation during the first year of the act. The same year seven states passed laws providing for investigations to determine whether wages paid were fair and reasonable.

1935 -- The Supreme Court declared the NIRA unconstitutional (Schechter Poultry Corp. v. U.S.), finding that Congress had stretched the commerce power unreasonably to include manufacturing, and had delegated legislative authority to the President.

1936 -- The Supreme Court ruled that neither the Federal Government nor the states were empowered to enact a general minimum wage law (Morehead v. New York ex rel. Tipaldo). The same year Congress enacted the Walsh-Healy Act requiring that prevailing wages be paid in production of goods under Government contract.

1937 -- The Supreme Court March 29 ruled the minimum wage law of the state of Washington constitutional (West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish), specifically overturning Adkins v. Children's Hospital and making possible a reconsideration of federal legislation establishing wage and hour standards in areas involving interstate commerce. In a famous related decision April 12, the Court ruled that manufacturing fell within the scope of Congressional regulation under the commerce clause (National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp.).

The same year President Franklin D. Roosevelt asked Congress to establish minimum wage and other employment standards and convened a special session Nov. 15 for this purpose, after the House failed to take action during the regular session. However, the House again balked and recommitted the bill to committee.

1938 -- After long and heated debate, the Fair Labor Standards Act (PL 75-718, 29 USC 8) was passed and signed by the President June 25. It set an initial 25 cent minimum hourly wage, to be raised to 40 cents by October 1945, in employee categories covered. No major changes have been made since 1938 in categories of domestic workers covered by the Act.

1941 -- The Supreme Court Feb. 3 upheld the Fair Labor Standards Act (U.S. v. Darby Lumber Co.). Related decisions: The Court ruled in 1941 that activities affecting interstate commerce, regardless of degree or volume, fell within Congressional power of regulation (National Labor Relations Board v. Fainblatt). In 1942, the Court recognized the authority of Congress in activities which affect commerce but are not themselves commercial in nature (U.S. v. Wrightwood Dairy Corp.; Wickard v. Filburn).

1949 -- The Fair Labor Standards Act was amended, raising the minimum hourly wage to 75 cents, effective Jan. 25, 1950.

1955 -- The Act was again amended, raising the minimum to $1 per hour, effective March 1, 1956. (1955 Almanac p. 321) specific policy declaration that detrimental labor conditions in such establishments constituted unfair competition and a burden and obstruction to interstate commerce. However, the bill included provisions limiting its application to establishments that did a specified amount of business annually. These excluded many small businesses.

One new feature of the coverage section was "establishment" coverage, under which minimum wage and hour protection would be extended to all workers in establishments doing more than $50,000 annual business when it was found that any individuals in the establishment were entitled to protection. Existing law applied only to individual employees involved in interstate commerce, not to employees of the firm or business as a whole.

● S 1967 -- The Administration bill, introduced May 15, 1959 by Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.), and a companion measure, HR 7490, submitted June 2, 1959 by Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (R N.J.), provided for extension of wage, but not overtime, coverage to all employees of enterprises employing 100 or more persons in a number of specialized categories presently exempted. These included: hotels, and laundries and retail establishments doing more than half their business in-state, seafood processing, transit systems, small telephone exchanges, taxicabs and seamen. Another provision, called the "million dollar inflow test", extended both wage and overtime coverage to all employees of enterprises not otherwise exempted in which 100 or more persons were employed and which received for their operations $1 million or more annually in merchandise or supplies that moved directly across state lines to the place of business. The million dollar inflow test would extend the coverage of construction workers, and provide coverage for all employees in a number of big business enterprises in which only certain employees were covered under the FLSA.

For tips, S 1967 permitted the Secretary of Labor to determine the average amount which could be expected and adjust accordingly the prescribed minimum wage to be paid by the employer. Neither S 1046 nor S 1967 made any change in the existing exemption for farm workers.

Throughout 1959, and at the Subcommittee hearings May 7-June 4, debate on the bills centered on charges, by opponents of increasing the minimum, that a substantial mandatory hourly wage increase would be inflationary for the entire economy and could drive many small businesses to ruin by sharply increasing their wage bill. Sources favorable to the Kennedy bill said these charges were untrue, and union leaders also argued that $1 an hour -- or even $1.25 -- was not really a decent living wage. The Administration argued for extended coverage but not a higher wage. The opposing positions were set forth by various union, business and Labor Department spokesmen, including Secretary of Labor Mitchell.

The Labor Position -- Summing up arguments in favor of S 1046 in testimony May 7, 1959 before the Senate Labor Subcommittee, AFL-CIO President George Meany said the proposed increase to $1.25 was "modest enough" in terms of human needs. "When we talk in terms of $1 an hour or less, we are not talking about poverty -- we are talking about destitution." Meany said that the average industrial wage has gone up more than three times as much as the federal minimum wage over the previous nine years; and that even at $1.25, the minimum would be about $1 under the average hourly wage in manufacturing industries. The failure of low-wage industries and retail groups to keep pace with national wage trends was creating a "widening gulf" between high-paid and low-paid workers and a "depressed class" of workers. This, Meany said, reduced purchasing power, weakened the economy, and was a "social and moral disgrace" to the Nation.

Other proponents of S 1046 argued that the cost of raising wages to $1.25 for workers already covered would be only 1 percent of the total wage bill for these workers -- the same percentage as the 1955 increase from 75 cents to $1 -- and that even if the entire wage increase were passed on to the consumer in price increases, it would not appreciably affect the national economy.

Administration -- In his March 12, 1959 annual report to Congress on the minimum wage, Secretary Mitchell opposed any increase at that time, "because of the effect it would have on the economy, especially in the low-wage industries." Mitchell said his conclusions were based on a 700-page Labor Department report. After studying this report, George Meany March 25 sent a letter to Vice President Richard M. Nixon and House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) in which he said: "It is one thing for the Secretary to oppose an increase in the minimum wage on the basis of his own beliefs and prejudices. It is quite another, and we think reprehensible, matter for the Secretary to pretend to the Congress that his opposition is based upon this report." Meany said the report "in no way" substantiated the Secretary's opposition to an increase in the minimum, and showed that the previous increase to $1 had been "readily taken in stride by the American economy, and a remarkably smooth adjustment was made even in the South, the region most affected." Meany said that even in the industries where one would expect difficulties, there were remarkably few ill effects, and these were offset by the general benefits to the communities.

In May 19, 1959 testimony before the Senate Subcommittee, Wage and Hour Administrator Clarence T. Lundquist, answering questions about the 700-page report, said that of the 2.1 million employees affected by the 1956 increase to $1, about 1,800 were discharged or otherwise adversely affected, according to information available, and this was "certainly" a small percentage of the total. However, he said that in a number of low-wage industries, concentrations of workers at the $1, $1.05 and $1.10 figure "would indicate that the adjustment is not complete." The possible adverse affects of new wage increases on these low-wage industries were at the heart of the Administration's opposition to the Kennedy proposals (an estimated 41 percent of employees in these industries were earning less than $1.25 in 1959).

Secretary Mitchell said in May 19 testimony, "Many of the workers whom the (Kennedy) bill proposes to benefit would not obtain wage increases -- instead they would lose their jobs."

Mitchell said he emphasized the low-wage industries because they were the ones most dramatically affected by any minimum wage increase. He said the risk of curtailing employment in these industries through a mandatory wage increase "would appear to be significantly greater than in 1956-57," and he recommended against taking the risk "at this time".

Other points in his testimony:

● "I don't think that I would agree with those persons who say that an increase in the minimum wage would result in widespread business failures."

● Although the original Kennedy bill would call for an increase of "$3 billion plus" in the national wage bill, "it would be very difficult to say that this would positively result in definite price increases all along the line. Our major argument here is directed to the thesis that such a large wage bill imposed on essentially low-wage industries would have the effect of curtailing employment opportunities, which is contrary to the purposes of the act."

President Eisenhower at a July 15, 1959 press conference was asked if he shared Mitchell's opinion that the Kennedy bill (S 1046), which had been approved by the Senate Labor Subcommittee July 10, might be inflationary. He said he agreed "absolutely".

ADMINISTRATION POSITION CHANGED

As the 1960 session of Congress opened, debate resumed on the minimum wage issue. The AFL-CIO called the Kennedy bill "must" legislation "of the highest priority" for the 1960 session. It set up a special joint minimum wage committee of 22 member unions to press for passage. Ranged against the bill were an array of hotel, retail, restaurant, theatre, logging, food processing, manufacturing and other organizations, including the National Retail Merchants Assn., the National Assn. of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. and many others. Arguments advanced were that it set wages by legislative fiat; was inflationary; would bring genuine imbalance, hardship and loss of jobs in a number of fields; and covered areas better left to regulation by the states.

Bill proponents said state minimum wage regulations covered only a fifth of the workers excluded from federal protection and were inadequate; opponents said the states were better able to base minimum levels on prevailing local conditions.

President Eisenhower Jan. 20, 1960 again repeated his request for extension of coverage only.

In a major development, however, Secretary Mitchell, in his annual minimum wage report Feb. 15, said that data obtained through surveys in 1959 "suggest that the adjustment to the $1 minimum (since 1956) is fairly complete." He said that "with respect to a very large majority of employees now protected by the Act, a modest increase in the minimum wage" would not have the effect of curtailing employment in the low-wage industries. In effect, the Administration now favored an increase in the minimum wage although it had opposed it in 1959.

Mitchell subsequently defined a "modest increase" as 10 cents to 15 cents an hour in testimony before the House Education and Labor Committee April 21 (see below); and President Eisenhower, in messages to Congress May 3 and Aug. 8, endorsed Mitchell's position by calling for a "modest upward adjustment" in the minimum hourly rate.

House

COMMITTEE -- House Education and Labor, Labor Standards Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- On two bills (HR 4488, 7490) to amend the minimum wage provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. HR 4488, sponsored by Rep. James Roosevelt (D Calif.), was the counterpart of the Kennedy bill (S 1046). HR 7490 was the House version of the Administration bill (S 1967).

TESTIMONY -- March 16 -- Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (AFL-CIO), favored increasing the minimum wage to $1.25 and said this would have a negligible effect on clothing prices. He said a $1.25 minimum was essential to end "poverty in the midst of plenty."

March 17 -- George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, said an increase in the federal minimum wage would put an end to the suffering of "millions of unfortunate workers." He said there was no legitimate basis to claims that HR 4488 would handicap business or contribute to inflation.

He said the $1 minimum wage was "far too little to maintain the minimum standard of living necessary for the health, efficiency and general well-being of workers"; that at least 20 million workers were denied any protection under the law.

March 24 -- James A. Suffridge, Retail Clerks International Assn. (AFL-CIO), said the Administration proposals for extended coverage in the retail field under HR 7490 were "hollow and empty". He supported HR 4488.

A.F. Hartung, president, International Woodworkers of America (AFL-CIO), objected to existing exemptions from minimum wage and hour coverage for logging operations employing 12 persons or less and urged that exemptions should be limited to employers owning 70 acres or less of land. He said that under existing legislation, large pulp and timber companies, by parceling out timber cutting on their own lands to small "independent contractors", were able to bypass minimum wage provisions, depress wages and keep costs down. He said the "independent contractor" was a "captive" in this situation and was "exploited about as badly as his employees", in that the independents were unorganized and in competition with each other while the companies were large, strong and "fabulously profitable" and appeared to have no price competition either in buying the pulpwood or selling products made from it. The economic situation in the logging industry was "at fault", Hartung said, and it would require legislation to change it. He said that none of the witnesses testifying for retention of the existing law represented the really small operators, and that one bona fide small operator whom Hartung brought to Senate minimum wage hearings in 1959 was "so frightened that he could hardly talk" and was "threatened" upon his return to Mississippi for having come to Washington to testify.

March 29 -- Representatives of the Forest Farmers Assn., the Louisiana Forestry Assn., and the Georgia Forestry Assn. opposed removal of the existing 12-employee logging exemption on grounds that it would overburden small operators with bookkeeping to comply with wage-hour law requirements, would be inflationary and would cause some workers to lose their jobs. Charles H. Lewis of the Louisiana Forestry Assn. said A.F. Hartung, who testified March 24, had a "basic lack of understanding" of logging and pulpwooding as conducted in the South. Carroll W. Maxwell of the Louisiana Forestry Assn. said the southern pine industry was in a "depressed condition".

March 30 -- Bernard E. Esters, National Editorial Assn., said an increased minimum wage and removal of exemptions for newspapers with less than 4,000 circulation under HR 4488 would have "serious economic consequences" for thousands of papers and would accelerate business failures and mergers.

Max Greenberg, president, Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union (AFL-CIO), supporting HR 4488, said that whereas the average hourly earnings of retail workers, not covered by FLSA, were higher than those of production workers when the Fair Labor Standards Act was passed in 1938, the average hourly earnings of industrial workers were presently one-third higher than those of retail workers.

March 31 -- Rowland Jones Jr., president, American Retail Federation, said HR 4488 was "highly discriminatory" in its extended coverage provisions, would be "virtually impossible to police equitably" and would lead to "highly inflationary" cost and price increases. The bill represented an "unwarranted extension of federal power" into purely local retail conditions.

J.T. Meek, president, Illinois Retail Merchants Assn., said Congress, in passing "any of these measures", would be "upholding the power and the ruthlessness" of AFL-CIO President George Meany.

April 7 -- A representative of the Textile Workers Union of America (AFL-CIO) said substandard wages resulted from discrimination, lack of organization on the part of the workers, and the superior economic position of employers. He said the proportion of textile workers earning less than $1.25 was well below 5 percent, but it was "imperative" to increase the minimum to $1.25 to promote fair competition in the industry and prevent the "chiseling fringe" of employers from paying lesser rates.

Representatives of Pennsylvania retailing groups opposed HR 4488.

April 11 -- David Dubinsky, president, International Ladies Garment Workers Union (AFL-CIO) said the proposed $1.25 minimum could be absorbed with relative ease. Even though some 15 percent of workers covered by the FLSA would get some wage adjustments under a $1.25 minimum, he said, the increased cost would be "less than 1 percent of the covered payrolls" and "only four-tenths of 1 percent" of all payrolls.

Reid Murphy, president, Signal Knitting Mills, Chattanooga, Tenn., said he supported an increase to $1.25.

April 13 -- Frederick H. Mueller, Secretary of Commerce, said he opposed the whole philosophy behind minimum wage legislation, that raises should be earned and reached by economic processes. Opposing HR 4488, he said the bill would increase wages by "$3 billion plus", which "represents a corresponding increase in labor costs to the industry". An increase of this magnitude offered "greater harm and risk to the stability and welfare of the American economy than should be contemplated at this time", and would set in motion "inflationary forces" that could "very quickly raise the cost of living so perceptibly as to rob (affected workers) of any real benefit." The "inflationary and unsettling effects" of HR 4488 would be "manifested immediately" in the direction of price increases and increased pressures for further wage increases. He said industries which had traditionally paid wages lower than the national average, notably the textile industry, accounted for a "very significant portion" of exports. "To increase the minimum wage to $1.25 at this time would place our exports at further disadvantage in world markets" and "would tend to add to our balance of payments difficulties". Mueller said that where business was local in character, working conditions should be regulated by local authority "in the light of conditions prevailing in that area." He said he favored HR 7490, extending $1 minimum wage coverage to an additional 2.3 million workers, some 400,000 of whom were estimated to be receiving less than the $1 minimum. He said this step did not "present the risks to the economy which I have described earlier" and "would be confined in its application to areas bearing reasonable and substantial relationship to interstate commerce as that term is generally understood in the American community." He said he concurred with Secretary Mitchell that a modest increase in wage floors for presently covered workers would not create unemployment or wreck low-wage industries.

O. Holt Allen, National Ice Assn., opposed HR 4488.

April 20 -- Representatives of the lumber industry, hotel resorts and the Council of State Chambers of Commerce opposed HR 4488. Willard S. Bromley of the American Pulpwood Assn. said if the Act were extended to include the lumber industry it would require considerable revision in current operations, based largely on part-time and piece work. "Elimination of the exemption would make this kind of work virtually impossible," Bromley said.

Resort hotel owners said compliance with a 40-hour work week and an increase in wage rates would "add between $950,000 and $1,000,000" to annual payroll costs for some of the larger hotels and ruin many.

MITCHELL BACKS INCREASE

April 21 -- Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell endorsed HR 7490. Mitchell recommended an increase in the minimum wage of 10 to 15 cents, but opposed an increase of 25 cents which, he said, with the increased coverage proposed by HR 4488, would result in job losses to many.

April 26 -- Representatives of the New York Hotel Trades Council, affiliated with the AFL-CIO and consisting of a number of New York trade unions, and the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union (AFL-CIO) endorsed HR 4488.

Russell R. Mueller of the National Retail Hardware Assn. opposed an increase in the amount of the minimum wage required under the Fair Labor Standards Act. Mueller said wages and hours in retail hardware stores were matters "so local in character that they are not susceptible to controls designed for nationwide application".

April 27 -- In a statement submitted to the Subcommittee, Walter P. Reuther, president of the United Automobile Workers (AFL-CIO), said enactment of HR 4488 would help to "ameliorate the poverty of some 6½ million workers...correct some of the imbalances in our economy, prevent the occurrence of still another recession and restore an adequate rate of annual growth in our national economy."

Representatives of the National Restaurant Assn. said if the provisions of HR 4488 were applied to its members it would force unemployment in the industry. Thomas W. Power, Washington counsel for the Assn. said a "$1.25 minimum would require a 37.9 percent (pay) increase", resulting in a $2 billion cost rise for the hotel industry.

May 4 -- George W. Anderson of the American Transit Assn. said elimination of the minimum hour exemption presently applied to local transit employees would seriously affect "hundreds of principally small transit companies which presently have a basic work week in excess of 40 hours." A 40-hour work week would mean a reduced work week and thus a cut in take-home pay, increased rates and curtailed service, Anderson said.

May 5 -- Representatives of various transportation associations and companies opposed HR 4488. They said wages of transportation workers were well above $1.25 and minimum hour regulations would be extremely difficult to apply. Ralph E. Casey, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute Inc., said application of the FLSA to the merchant shipping industry would upset the structure of maritime collective bargaining, and the 40-hour work week would be unworkable at sea.

Marvin E. Walsh of Safeway Trails Inc. said extending the FLSA would "impose an unwarranted and crippling financial hardship" on the trucking industry.

May 10 -- In a statement submitted to the Subcommittee, the National Assn. of Manufacturers said if HR 4488 were enacted the cost of living would go up, probably resulting in renewed "demands for another increase in the minimum wage."

May 11 -- Representatives of the American Farm Bureau and the American Trucking Assns. opposed extension of minimum wage and hour provisions and removal of certain exemptions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

May 17 -- Peter J. Salmon, representing various organizations for the blind, opposed a bill (HR 9801) to increase to 40 cents an hour the minimum wage for the blind working in sheltered workshops. He said the Labor Department already had sufficient authority to "review, control and certify" sheltered workshops for the blind.

In a statement filed with the Subcommittee, the National Federation of Independent Businesses opposed minimum wage increases.

May 18 -- Representatives of the Texas Canners Assn., the Texas Citrus and Vegetable Growers and Shippers and the National Cottonseed Products Assn. opposed extension of the minimum wage and hour regulations to their industry because of its seasonal characteristics.

Lorne S. Hamme of the Texas Canners Assn. said elimination of minimum wage exemptions for the seasonal canning industry would affect many aspects of the agricultural industry and reduce employee earnings because of the shorter number of working hours.

May 19 -- Representatives of the Texas Manufacturers Assn. and the Southern Hardwood Plywood Producers opposed increases in the minimum wage.

Clyde McFarlin, president of the Montezuma Mutual Telephone Co., opposed any change in the existing exemption of certain switchboard operators from minimum hour and wage regulations.

Emerson P. Schmidt of the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. opposed HR 4488, which he said would "curtail real purchasing power, contribute to inflation and cause substantial unemployment."

Following the hearings, the Subcommittee June 1 sent a draft bill to the full Committee.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- May 28 -- In a statement filed with the Subcommittee, Andrew J. Biemiller of the AFL-CIO said his organization was not "dead set against" the step system for increasing the minimum wage, although he did not believe such a system was necessary.

Bill Reported

COMMITTEE -- House Education and Labor.

ACTION -- June 16 approved a clean bill (HR 12677) raising the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour for an estimated 23.7 million employees already covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and extending wage and hour coverage under the Act to an estimated 3.5 million additional workers.

The Committee approved the bill by a 19-9 vote. All Democrats present except Rep. Phil M. Landrum (Ga.) voted for approval; Reps. Stuyvesant Wainwright (N.Y.) and Joe Holt (Calif.) were the only Republicans voting for approval.

The bill raised the minimum for those already covered from $1 an hour to $1.25 an hour, effective in three stages over a two-year period: $1.15 an hour on Nov. 1, 1960 and for the first year thereafter; $1.20 during the second year; and $1.25 as of Nov. 1, 1962.

For newly covered workers, minimum wages and the 40-hour work week would be brought into effect over a longer period: $1 an hour and a 48-hour work week for a year beginning Nov. 1, 1960; $1.10 an hour and a 46-hour work week during the second year; $1.20 an hour and a 44 hour work week during the third year; $1.25 an hour and a 42-hour work week in the fourth year; and a 40-hour work week as of Nov. 1, 1964.

Workers who would be newly covered under the bill included an estimated 3 million employees of large retail establishments and about one-half million workers in service trades, large laundries and local transit operations. Such workers would be brought under the Act if their employer had an aggregate sales volume of $1 million or more annually.

However, HR 12677 as approved exempted the following workers from wage-hour protection, even when their employers had annual sales in excess of $1 million: food preparers and food servers in restaurants; hotel and motel employees who relied on tips for a "substantial" part of their wages; employees of radio or television stations in communities with a population of less than 100,000; members of the immediate family of the employer; employees of seasonal recreation and amusement establishments; employees of motion picture theaters; and employees who had made contracts or agreements for a work week in excess of the required maximum more than 30 days before the new law went into effect.

The Committee bill retained existing provisions of the Act exempting seafood processers, farm workers, employees of small county newspapers, taxi drivers, seamen, loggers in operations employing 12 or less persons, telephone operators of small exchanges and certain others from wage and hour protection, and retained provisions exempting fish and vegetable canners and certain others from maximum hour protection.

The bill also made new wage provisions for Puerto Rico, Samoa and the Virgin Islands.

In extending coverage to workers in retail and service trades, laundries and transit operations, the bill wrote new language into the Fair Labor Standards Act which broadened it to cover employees of enterprises engaged in "activities affecting" interstate commerce provided their employer met the $1 million sales volume test.

REPORT FILED

HR 12677 was reported (H Rept 1933) June 2, with a number of separate views filed.

Rep. James Roosevelt (D Calif.) said coverage of additional workers was "long overdue" and a 25-cent increase in the hourly minimum was "required" to enable the Act to continue to serve its declared purposes of eliminating labor conditions detrimental to minimum living standards. He said there had been no adjustment in the minimum wage since 1955, whereas the cost of living had increased 10 percent, general economic productivity had increased 15 percent and wages generally had increased 15 to 20 percent. He said the proposed step-by-step increases in wage and hour protection would "minimize and cushion the alleged impact" of the bill on sections of the economy which would be brought under the wage-hour law for the first time. Because existing law covered only those employees (with certain specific exemptions) who were directly engaged in interstate commerce or the production of goods for interstate commerce, it was necessary to resort to a "broader concept of coverage" in order to give blanket coverage to retail and service employees, Roosevelt said.

Rep. John H. Dent (D Pa.) said the bill was "only a beginning in the fight to cover with protective covenants the millions of low-wage, low-standard wage earners."

In minority views, Republican Reps. Carroll D. Kearns (Pa.), William H. Ayres (Ohio), Robert P. Griffin (Mich.), Edgar W. Hiestand (Calif.), Albert H. Quie (Minn.) and Charles E. Goodell (N.Y.) said extension of coverage to "activities affecting" commerce represented a "sharp and, we believe, an undesirable departure of the interstate commerce principle upon which the original Act was based". They also said the bill would "work harm on many marginal employees" and the physically handicapped, and "almost certainly would result in considerable unemployment and extensive economic dislocation".

The initial increase in wage costs necessitated by HR 12677 was nearly $700 million annually, and this would have "a serious impact on the segments of the economy most affected", the minority said. They said Congress should not set the minimum above $1 for newly covered workers and $1.15 for previously covered workers.

In additional views, Reps. Goodell and Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (R N.J.) said HR 12677 "by implication accepts the Federal Government's responsibility and right to set standards in purely intrastate and local activities" and the increases to $1.25 "can result in extensive curtailment of employment and economic dislocation". They said Congress should set minimum rates at $1 for newly covered workers and $1.15 for those previously covered, and for further increases should "rely on the procedures contemplated" in an existing provision of the Act. This provision required the Secretary of Labor to submit to Congress every January an evaluation and appraisal of the effects of the Act, together with recommendations for additional legislation. They said the bill's overtime protection for newly covered workers should be postponed until the Labor Department submitted reports on the effects of the wage increase.

In additional views, Reps. Hiestand and Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) said HR 12677 was "bad legislation", "cruel to marginal workers" and it had "built-in escalator increases, guaranteeing future inflation as far as four years ahead".

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- June 28 -- The House Rules Committee approved an open rule (H Res 581 -- H Rept 2027) providing for two hours of debate on HR 12677. The rule also specifically provided for the consideration of a substitute bill (HR 12853) introduced June 28 by Rep. A. Paul Kitchin (D N.C.).

Floor Action

The House June 30 passed HR 12677, amended, by a 341-72 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 460)

Because of a drafting error in an amendment offered by Rep. Frank E. Smith (D Miss.) and accepted by voice vote, the House-passed bill inadvertently removed all wage-hour protection from an estimated 14 million previously covered workers. Smith said July 1 he regretted the mistake, had discussed it with the Chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, and was certain the error would be corrected when wage-hour legislation was acted upon by the Senate.

In passing HR 12677, the House did not vote on the bill as it was reported from the Education and Labor Committee June 22, but instead accepted an amendment offered by Rep. A. Paul Kitchin (D N.C.) in the form of a substitute for the entire bill.

The Kitchin amendment was identical to a bill (HR 12822) introduced June 25, 1960 by Rep. William H. Ayres (R Ohio). It provided a $1.15 minimum wage for previously covered workers, made certain additional exemptions from coverage, and extended minimum wage coverage at $1 an hour to employees of retail chains having five or more stores and operating in more than one state. The Kitchin amendment was in line with recommendations by Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, who proposed a narrower extension of coverage than the Roosevelt bill and indicated the President would veto any increase in the minimum wage to more than $1.15 an hour.

The Kitchin amendment was accepted by a 197-141 standing vote and a 211-203 roll-call vote, in which the support of the "conservative coalition" of Republicans and Southern Democrats was decisive. Kitchin said the new coverage provisions in his amendment would bring about 1.4 million retail workers under minimum wage protection, although it was subsequently estimated by the Labor Department that the Smith amendment would reduce this figure to 500,000 to 700,000. (For voting, see chart p. 460)

Smith, who introduced his amendment to the Kitchin amendment under rules allowing only a brief explanation, told the House July 1 that his proposal had been "designed only to write into law a definition of 'area of production'" in relation to workers engaged in the processing and canning of agricultural, horticultural and dairy products. Existing law exempted such workers from wage-hour protection if they were employed in the "area of production" of the products, but the definition of "area of production" was left to the Secretary of Labor. The Labor Department subsequently held a canning or processing plant to be within the area of production if it was located more than a specified distance from communities of over 2,500 population and if the meat or produce was raised within a certain distance of the plant. Smith's amendment defined an "area of production" as any county, outside the corporate limits of cities of more than 250,000, in which agricultural or horticultural commodities were produced in commercial quantities. The drafting mistake consisted of not limiting the exemption for such areas to workers engaged in agricultural or horticultural processing. The Wage-Hour Division estimated that the amendment stripped wage-hour protection from 14 million of the 23.7 million previously covered workers, and that if redrafted to meet Smith's intention it would remove coverage from about 700,000 workers.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 12677:

Raised the minimum wage to $1.15 an hour for previously covered workers.

Extended $1-an-hour minimum wage coverage, but not overtime coverage, to employees of retail chains having five or more stores and operating in two or more states. For employees in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and American Samoa affected by this proviso, the minimum rate would be set by the Secretary of Labor "pursuant" to the recommendations of a special industry committee.

Exempted certain additional cigar tobacco and seafood processors from minimum wage and overtime coverage.

Exempted from overtime coverage all employees of radio and television stations in communities of less than 100,000 persons.

Exempted from minimum wage and overtime coverage all employees working in counties in which any agricultural or horticultural product, including livestock and poultry, was produced in commercial quantities, provided that the place of employment was not within the corporate limits of a municipality of more than 250,000 persons.

Made the new provisions effective Jan. 1, 1961, except where extension of coverage would conflict with contracts or collective bargaining agreements entered into more than 30 days before enactment of the new law, in which case the new provisions would go into effect upon expiration of such agreements or by Jan. 1, 1962 at the latest.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

June 30 -- Kitchin (substitute for the Committee bill) -- Raise the minimum wage to $1.15 for previously covered workers, extend $1-an-hour minimum wage protection to workers in interstate retail chains, exempt certain additional cigar tobacco and seafood processors from wage-hour protection, exempt employees of broadcasting stations in communities of less than 100,000 population from maximum hours protection; make act effective Jan. 1, 1961 except where it would conflict with contracts or collective bargaining agreements; and, as amended (voice vote) by Rep. Frank E. Smith (D Miss.), exclude from wage-hour coverage employees outside the corporate limits of towns of more than 250,000 population. Standing vote, 197-141; roll call, 211-203.

DEBATE -- June 30 -- William H. Ayres (R Ohio) -- "I can tell you that the President and the Vice President do not object to the substitute bill."

James Roosevelt (D Calif.) -- "I think the President and the Vice President should speak for themselves once in a while.... I think it is significant that the (Kitchin substitute amendment)...is really the bill of the gentleman from Ohio (Ayres)....It was considered expedient to try to get a Democrat to also introduce it in order to re-create the long-time coalition."

Roosevelt, who was acting as floor manager for the Committee bill, said he would be willing to accept amendments setting $1.15 as the minimum wage for newly and previously covered employees, lessening the bill's impact on hotels conducting a restaurant business, and exempting all retail gasoline service stations from coverage -- if the Kitchin substitute were defeated.

John H. Dent (D Pa.) -- "The substitute bill is shockingly inadequate." Multi-state retail chains could escape its "token coverage by reorganizing to re-establish themselves as separate, smaller chains of four of fewer outlets or as separate corporate chains in separate states".

Charles E. Goodell (R N.Y.) -- Roosevelt and others who "have been so enthusiastic for this bill have been very, very reasonable in making concessions and adding exemptions. They want to get the bill through. I must say I suspect the reason they are doing it, is that their bill for the first time establishes in this Congress the responsibility of the Federal Government to move into any enterprise which is engaged in an activity affecting commerce. That is so important to them that they are willing to concede almost anything to get it.... If we... say that Congress has such a responsibility to invade purely local situations, we will have no defense from federal invasions in this field hereafter."

Edith Green (D Ore.) -- When told by Kitchin that Macy's, Gimbel's and Marshall Field in Chicago would not be covered by his substitute bill: "...Under the substitute bill, a corporation with 20 retail stores in one state would not be covered. I say this is a fraud on the American people."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare.

ACTION -- June 7, 1960 began voting on amendments to the Kennedy bill (S 1046), which had been approved July 10, 1959 by the Labor Subcommittee.

The Committee June 22 voted 12-2 to report a clean bill incorporating its changes in S 1046. Sens. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) voted against reporting the draft.

The clean bill (S 3758 -- S Rept 1744) was subsequently reported June 27. As sent to the Senate, it raised the minimum wage to $1.25 for workers already covered by the FLSA and broadened wage and hour coverage under the Act to include an additional 5 million workers. All increases and coverage extensions were to take place over a period of two to three years after the bill went into effect on Jan. 1, 1961.

As approved by the Committee, the bill would extend coverage to employees of major retail and service establishments for the first time since enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Act in 1938. With the exception of motion picture theater employees, tipped employees of hotels and restaurants and certain others specifically exempted, retail and service employees would be brought under wage-hour coverage if they were employed by enterprises with a gross volume of sales in excess of $1 million annually. Wage-hour coverage also would be extended to certain laundries which grossed more than $250,000 annually and were in competition with laundries meeting the $1 million sales volume test, and minimum wage protection only would be extended to employees of gasoline service stations grossing more than $250,000 annually.

The bill would bring retail and service trade workers under the Act as persons engaged in "activities affecting" interestate commerce -- thus broadening the scope of federal regulation in this area. Existing law covered only workers directly "engaged" in interstate commerce or the production of goods for interstate commerce.

The bill also would provide for "establishment coverage", under which all employees of an enterprise grossing more than $250,000 annually ($350,000 in the case of construction firms) would be subject to the law if any employee of the company was subject to the law because his work involved interstate commerce.

The impact of the bill on the economy in 1961 was spelled out in statistics released June 22 by Committee aides, based on the lastest available (1959) figures prepared by the Labor Department. According to these figures, most of the 3.5 million retail and service workers and 1.5 others who would be covered for the first time under the bill were already making $1 an hour, so their wages would not be affected when the $1 minimum for newly-covered workers went into effect Jan. 1, 1961. However, about 950,000 of the newly-covered workers were making less than $1 an hour; 700,000 of these in retail and service trades were averaging 85 cents an hour.

According to the Committee sources, the cost to employers of bringing the wages of the 700,000 below-minimum retail and service workers up to $1 an hour on Jan. 1, 1961 would be 2.2 percent of the total wages paid in 1959 to all of the 3.5 million service workers who would be brought under the Act, or one-fourth of 1 percent of the sales volume in the establishments employing the 3.5 million covered workers. Thus, they said, if the initial wage increase was passed along to the consumer, it would mean a price increase in these establishments of one-quarter of a cent per dollar.

Of the 23.7 million workers already covered by the Act, they said some 2.4 million were currently making less than $1.15 an hour and therefore would receive an increase when the bill's first-stage $1.15 minimum for already-covered workers went into effect Jan. 1, 1961. Other covered workers would have their wages raised as the minimum rose to $1.20 in 1962 and to $1.25 on Jan. 1, 1963. Pay raises for the 2.4 million affected by the initial increase would average about 9 cents an hour in 1961, or four-tenths of 1 percent of total wages paid to all currently covered workers, the Committee aides said.

The Committee said the existing $1 an hour minimum wage had "fallen far behind the upward movement of wages, the increase in productivity and the rise in the cost of living" and the recommended increase to $1.25 an hour was "modest". An employee earning $1.25 an hour for a 40 hour workweek would make $50 a week, $216 a month and $2,600 a year, which would "still be below the barest budgets set for relief clients by many states", the Committee said.

The Committee said it was "satisfied that the economy can safely absorb these increases without curtailing employment or earning power and without a perceptible increase in prices." At the same time the bill would benefit the entire economy by "providing needed purchasing power to millions of additional workers".

For newly covered employees, the gradual approach of the bill "should permit industry to adjust without substantial impact on labor costs or prices and without curtailing employment or earnings", the Committee said.

The Committee said the argument that an increase in the minimum wages would lead to wage increases "all along the line" was "exaggerated" and reflected a "widespread misunderstanding of the extent of the indirect effects of a statutory minimum wage".

In minority views, Republican Sens. Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), Barry Goldwater (Ariz.) and C. Norman Brunsdale (N.D.) said it was the "responsibility of each state" to provide minimum wage levels and the existing $1 an hour federal minimum should "remain unchanged". They said they also were "opposed to any change in the present coverage provisions" of the Act. They said the bill was directed at "big business" but would also affect smaller businesses competing in the same labor market, so that the coverage exemptions were "nothing but a delusion". The minority said the bill could "result in inflationary wage increases", with the increase reflected in all wages "since unions have an obligation to their members to preserve existing differentials".

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 18 passed by a 62-34 roll-call vote an amended bill (HR 12677) raising the minimum wage from $1 to $1.25 by stages and extending minimum wage and overtime protection to an estimated 4 million additional workers. There were nine roll calls on the bill, including passage. (For voting, see charts p. 513-14)

As passed by the Senate, HR 12677 extended wage-hour protection by stages to employees of large retail laundry and service chains, but floor compromises resulted in the specific exclusion of automobile salesmen and all employees of hotels, motels, restaurants and small units of retail chains from protection they would otherwise have received under the definitions of the bill.

Retained, however, were two key provisions sought by organized labor: (1) a broadening of the coverage concept of the wage-hour law to take in "activities affecting" interstate commerce, and (2) application of coverage on a storewide or companywide basis. Under existing law, which remained substantially unchanged in its coverage provisions since initial passage in 1938, coverage was dependent on the activities of the individual employee and was limited to employees "engaged" in interstate commerce or the production of goods for interstate commerce.

The "activities affecting" clause was a focal point of more than a week of Senate debate. Opponents, led by Sens. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) and Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), argued that the clause extended federal wage-hour regulation into fields which should be left to the states, and was being introduced as a basis for much broader expansion of coverage in the future.

Proponents, led by Kennedy, contended that the basic question was payment of an adequate minimum wage, and that state legislatures had failed to take proper action in this field. Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), a supporter of the bill, said it would serve to equalize working conditions and help prevent the attraction of industries from one area of the country to another on the basis of below-standard wage scales.

The Senate Aug. 10 began minimum wage debate, working with its own Committee-approved bill (S 3758), which was reported June 27. Before passing HR 12677, the Senate substituted for the House text the language of S 3758 as amended on the Senate floor.

The key vote on the Senate bill came on a motion to table an amendment by Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) restricting the proposed extension of retail and service coverage to employees of chains operating in two or more states. The tabling motion carried, 50-48, after Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.), a cosponsor of the bill, and Kennedy said an amendment to be introduced by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), dropping auto salesmen and hotel, motel and restaurant employees from coverage, would be more acceptable to the Democratic leadership. The Anderson amendment was then accepted by an 87-8 roll-call vote. In earlier roll calls, amendments by Holland, Dirksen and Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.), aimed largely at limiting coverage and bringing the bill closer to Administration wishes, were defeated. One amendment offered by John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) was agreed to, 50-46; a second, barring the Secretary of Labor from regulating conditions of work of migrant farm workers, was rejected, 18-80. (For details, see below)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 12677 amended the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 as follows:

Raised the minimum hourly wage for workers already covered by the Act (approximately 23.7 million) to $1.15 in 1961, $1.20 in 1962 and $1.25 thereafter.

Extended wage and overtime protection to new categories of employees (see below) according to the following schedule: $1 an hour and no overtime protection in 1961; $1.05 an hour and a 44 hour workweek in 1962; $1.15 an hour and a 42 hour workweek in 1963; $1.25 an hour and a 40 hour workweek in 1964.

Brought the following new categories of employees under the Act:

- Employees of laundry, retail or service enterprises engaged in activities affecting interstate commerce or the production of goods for interstate commerce, provided the enterprise had annual gross sales of $1 million or more exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level. (Enterprise was defined as an activity having unified operation or common control; a locally owned retail or service establishment would not be considered part of an enterprise on the basis of franchise selling agreements or similar arrangements.)
- All employees of individual establishments having $250,000 in gross annual volume of sales ($350,000 in the case of construction companies) if any employees of the establishment were directly engaged in interstate commerce or the production of goods for commerce.
- Employees of local transit enterprises, regardless of dollar sales volume.
- Employees of gasoline service stations having $250,000 or more in gross annual sales.
- Employees of laundries having $250,000 or more in gross annual sales if they were in "substantial competition" with laundries doing more than half their business across state lines. (Employees of the latter were already covered by existing law.)

Specifically exempted from coverage all employees of hotels, motels and restaurants; all automobile and farm implement salesmen; a parent, spouse or child of the owner in establishments where only such persons are employed; employees of individual retail stores doing less than $250,000 in annual business, regardless of whether they are part of a $1 million chain enterprise; outside salesmen; persons engaged in the catching, initial processing and unloading of seafood; all agricultural employees; all employees of local weekly, semi-weekly or daily newspapers with circulations under 4,000; motion picture theatre employees; persons engaged in handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing or canning agricultural commodities and flowers, or in making dairy products in the "area of production" of the product as defined by the Secretary of Labor; switchboard operators on independently owned exchanges of 750 telephone stations or less; taxicab drivers; certain telegraph employees in public places; employees in lumbering operations where the total number of persons employed does not exceed 12; and employees in seasonal recreation and amusement establishments.

Exempted from overtime coverage only: certain employees subject to provisions of the Motor Carrier Act, the Interstate Commerce Act or the Railway Labor Act; gasoline service station employees; local transit employees; announcers, news editors and chief engineers in radio or television stations with major studios in communities of 50,000 population or less; persons employed in marketing, distributing, canning or otherwise processing seafood; outside buyers of raw dairy products or poultry; seamen on American flag vessels; persons making decorative wreaths in their homes; drivers and drivers' helpers paid on the basis of trip rates where the rate of pay is twice the required minimum wage; employees of local establishments engaged in the wholesale or bulk distribution of petroleum products and doing more than 75 percent of their business in the state in which they are located. Of the above categories, seamen, local transit workers and certain persons employed as telephone operators and seafood processors were exempt under existing law from both minimum wage and overtime protection.

Increased minimum wage rates in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands by 15 percent in 1961 and by an additional 5 percent in each of the next two years, subject to review by an industry committee in hardship cases.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Aug. 18 -- Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) -- Exempt all employees of hotels, motels, restaurants, and automobile and farm implement dealerships from wage and overtime coverage (an estimated 913,000 workers). Roll-call vote, 87-8.

Gordon Allott (R Colo.) -- Include farm implement dealerships in Anderson amendment (see above). Voice vote.

Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) -- Exclude excise taxes from computation of gasoline service station volume of annual business. Voice.

J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- Exempt from wage and overtime coverage employees of retail units doing less than $250,000 in annual business regardless of whether such units are a part of a $1 million a year enterprise. Voice.

John J. Williams (R Del.) -- Exempt homeworkers making decorative wreaths from overtime coverage. Voice.

Goldwater -- Exempt employees of seasonal amusement or recreational establishments from wage and overtime coverage. Voice.

Harrison A. Williams Jr. (D N.J.) -- Exempt from overtime coverage drivers and drivers' helpers paid on a trip basis and with wages of twice the prescribed minimum wage. Voice.

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Retain existing 14-week complete overtime exemption and 14-week partial overtime exemption (12 hour workday or 56 hour workweek) for employees of seasonal industries engaged in the processing of fresh fruits and vegetables, or in initial processing of agricultural and horticultural commodities within the "area of production", or in the processing of poultry or livestock. (The amendment deleted a proposal in the Committee bill to cut the periods of complete and partial exemption to 10 weeks each.) Roll call, 50-46.

Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) -- Exempt from overtime protection employees of establishments engaged in the wholesale or bulk distribution of petroleum products and doing more than 75 percent of their business within the state in which they are located. Voice.

Vance Hartke (D Ind.) -- Extend wage and overtime coverage to employees of laundry, cleaning or linen supply establishments deriving 25 percent or more of their revenue from sales to commercial businesses. (Existing law provided coverage on the basis of 25 percent or more sales to mining, manufacturing, transportation and communications businesses.) Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Aug. 16 -- John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Substitute for the pending Holland (D Fla.) amendment (see below) an amendment prohibiting the Secretary of Labor from regulating conditions of employment of migrant agricultural workers who did not move from state to state. Roll call vote, 18-80.

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- Prohibit the Secretary of Labor from regulating conditions of employment on all U.S. migrant agricultural workers. Roll call, 42-56.

Aug. 17 -- Holland -- Reduce the number of new workers to be covered from about 5 million to about 280,000. Roll call, 39-56.

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Substitute for the bill pending an amendment to: raise the minimum wage to $1.15 for workers already covered and provide $1 an hour minimum wage protection but no overtime protection for workers employed by retail or service chains having five or more establishments and operating in two or more states; exempt employees of radio and television stations in communities of less than 100,000 population from overtime protection and temporarily waive overtime protection for employees in cases where such protection would be in conflict with collective bargaining agreements entered into more than 30 days before enactment of the act. Roll call, 39-54.

Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) -- Retain the proposed graduated increase to $1.25 an hour for workers already covered; extend coverage to workers in $1 million a year enterprises "substantially engaged in doing business as an integral part" of interstate commerce (instead of engaged in "activities affecting" interstate commerce); for newly covered workers provide $1 minimum wage and no overtime protection the first year, and $1.10 minimum wage and 45 hour overtime protection the second year and thereafter; exempt employees of auto dealers, hotels, motels and restaurants from the new coverage provisions. Roll call, 41-56.

Aug. 18 -- A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) -- Retain "activities affecting" clause, but restrict proposed extension of minimum wage and overtime protection for retail and service employees to employees of chains operating in two or more states; extend protection to such employees regardless of the employer's volume of business. Tabled by a 50-48 roll-call vote.

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) -- Require that laundry enterprises must have $1 million in gross annual sales in any one state before employees are entitled to wage and overtime protection. Voice.

Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) -- Exclude employees of tax-exempt enterprises from wage-hour coverage. Voice.

Conference Deadlock

The House Rules Committee Aug. 25 voted 8-3 to send the differing versions of the House- and Senate-passed minimum wage bill (HR 12677) to conference.

House Education and Labor Committee Chairman Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) Aug. 23 asked the House for its unanimous consent for a conference, but Rep. August. E. Johansen (R Mich.) objected and the bill automatically was sent to the House Rules Committee for clearance.

The Committee Aug. 24 was assured by Barden, chairman of the House conferees, that in conference he would insist upon the $1.15 an hour minimum established by the House bill over the $1.25 minimum of the Senate.

Voting against clearance of the bill were Republican Reps. Allen (Ill.), Budge (Idaho) and Reece (Tenn.). Voting for were Democratic Reps. Smith (Va.), Colmer (Miss.), Madden (Ind.), Delaney (N.Y.), Trimble (Ark.), Thornberry (Texas), O'Neill (Mass.) and one Republican, Brown (Ohio). Rep. Bolling (D Mo.) was absent.

After four days of conference meetings, Aug. 25, 26, 29 and 30, Democratic Presidential nominee John F. Kennedy, sponsor of the Senate version and conference chairman, Aug. 30 said the House representatives wanted their version "or nothing", that the House bill "would not be progress' and "we'd rather come back and try to do it in January." Kennedy Aug. 31 said acceptance of the House bill would have meant no new wage legislation for several years.

The House-Senate conference formally recessed in disagreement Aug. 30.

The conference broke down on the question of extended coverage, rather than the wage level. Kennedy at various points said he was prepared to settle for the $1.15 wage floor voted by the House June 30.

At the Aug. 25 meeting House conferees rejected Kennedy offers to delay the rise to $1.25 beyond the 1963 effective date set by the Senate bill, and to raise the volume-of-business cutoff for retail stores to $1.5 million.

Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) submitted five compromise proposals in the course of the talks, three of which were rejected by the Senate conferees and therefore not submitted to the House conferees.

The first Prouty compromise accepted by the Senate members would have dropped the "activities affecting" clause and extended coverage instead to an estimated 3.1 million employees of an "employer engaged in" interstate commerce who had at least five establishments and operated these establishments in more than one state, or who purchased, for use in his business, $1 million or more annually in goods which moved across state lines.

This so-called "inflow" test, closely resembling the minimum wage proposals introduced by the Eisenhower Administration in 1959, was approved 5-2 by the Senate conferees and rejected 2-4 by the House conferees. Voting for: Sens. Kennedy, Prouty, Morse (D Ore.), McNamara (D Mich.), Randolph (D W.Va.), and Reps. Roosevelt (D Calif.) and Dent (D Pa.). Voting against: Sens. Dirksen (R Ill.) and Goldwater (R Ariz.), and Reps. Barden (D N.C.), Kearns (R Pa.), Ayres (R Ohio) and Hiestand (R Calif.).

The second Prouty compromise accepted by the Senate members was similar to the first, except that the five-store requirement was dropped for interstate chains and the inflow test was replaced by a $2 million annual sales volume test. This was accepted 4-3 by the Senate members and rejected 2-5 by the House members, with Phil M. Landrum (D Ga.) joining Barden, Kearns, Ayres and Hiestand in voting against.

Prouty's final proposal, rejected by the Senate conferees, was similar to the others but would have replaced his $2 million sales volume test with a requirement that workers be covered in stores doing at least $100,000 annually in sales across state lines. Prouty Aug. 30 said this plan would have brought about 2,840,000 employees under coverage, including those in most large single-state retail stores.

COMMON-SITE PICKETING

HR 9070 -- Reported (H Rept 1556) by the House Education and Labor Committee April 27, 1960.

Despite endorsement by the Administration and influential Democrats, including sponsor John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) in the Senate, the bill (HR 9070, S 2643) to legalize common-site picketing in the construction industry did not reach the floor in either chamber of Congress in 1960. The combined opposition of building contractors, the House Rules Committee and the chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, Graham A. Barden (D N.C.), was strong enough to prevent action.

The bill would have permitted unions to picket a firm at a construction site even if the effect was to stop the work of other firms, working in cooperation with the struck firm, at the same site. A 1951 Supreme Court ruling held that such picketing, usually called common-site picketing, was an illegal secondary boycott under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Although HR 9070 was reported by the House Education and Labor Committee, the House Rules Committee refused to grant the bill a rule for floor action. An attempt to force Barden to seek floor action without a rule failed (see below).

In the Senate, S 2643 was approved by the Labor and Public Welfare Labor Subcommittee Aug. 9, but there was no further action. In the brief August session of Congress, Kennedy devoted most of his efforts to an unsuccessful attempt to reach a House-Senate compromise on the minimum-wage bill (HR 12677). (See p. 309)

BACKGROUND -- In 1951, the Supreme Court upheld a 1949 National Labor Relations Board ruling (Denver Building Trades Case) curtailing common-site picketing as a secondary boycott. In the Denver case, the NLRB held that where a number of contractors were engaged in a joint venture or in subcontractual relationships on a construction job, a union that struck against or picketed one of the firms was guilty of secondary boycotts against the other firms if the effect of the refusal to work or the picketing was to stop the work of or deliveries to and from the other firms.

The result of the Denver ruling was sharply to curtail union activities at common construction sites, and unions argued that the ruling deprived them of the right to strike. President Eisenhower in 1959 asked a change in the law on common-site picketing, but a provision embodying his request was deleted from the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959. (1959 Almanac p. 168, 170)

Subsequently, bills (HR 9070, S 2643) to enact the provision were introduced Sept. 3, 1959 by Rep. Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.) and Sens. Kennedy and Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.).

House

COMMITTEE -- Education and Labor.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 16-29, 1960 by the Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee. Highlights:

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 16 -- Richard J. Gray, AFL-CIO building trades department, said construction workers were effectively denied the "basic freedom" to engage in peaceful picketing because of a "technicality in the law which did not take into account special facts of the building and construction industry."

Feb. 23 -- Robert Patten, Carolinas Branch, Associated General Contractors of America, said that if there was complete unionization of construction work, which was "inevitable" under HR 9070, thousands of non-union Negro employees in the Carolinas would be thrown out of work because virtually all construction locals in the region excluded Negroes.

Feb. 26 -- Frank J. Rooney, Associated General Contractors of America, opposing HR 9070, said it would: encourage picketing, extend shutdowns to neutral employers who happened to be located on the same construction site, weaken the control of responsible international union officials over the locals, encourage the transfer of unlawful disputes and secondary boycotts involving use of materials and supplies to the construction site, result in a virtual closed shop for the industry, legalize secondary boycotts in jurisdictional disputes between unions, and through an increase in work stoppages raise costs and consequently prices. Rooney said the NLRB had ruled many times that unions might conduct lawful pickets or strikes against employers with whom they had a primary or direct dispute, and that this applied to construction sites.

Feb. 29 -- Under Secretary of Labor James T. O'Connell, supporting HR 9070, said the Denver Building Trades ruling had the effect of "diminishing the right to strike of employees in the construction industry." He said any construction firms engaged in joint ventures, or having contractor-subcontractor relationships at a single construction site could not validly be regarded as so "neutral" that they "should be insulated from the effects of otherwise lawful primary concerted activities" by employees.

ACTION -- The full Committee April 27 reported the bill (H Rept 1556) after an April 8 vote of 21-5 in favor of the measure.

Voting for: Powell (D N.Y.), Bailey (D W.Va.), Perkins (D Ky.), Wier (D Minn.), Elliott (D Ala.), Green (D Ore.), Roosevelt (D Calif.), Zelenko (D N.Y.), Thompson (D N.J.), Udall (D Ariz.), Holland (D Pa.), Teller (D N.Y.), Dent (D Pa.), Pucinski (D Ill.), Daniels (D N.J.), Brademas (D Ind.), Giaimo (D Conn.), O'Hara (D Mich.), Frelinghuysen (R N.J.), Quie (R Minn.) and Goodell (R N.Y.).

Voting against: Barden (D N.C.), Landrum (D Ga.), Wainwright (R N.Y.), Griffin (R Mich.) and Hoffman (R Mich.).

Absent and not recorded: Kearns (R Pa.), Holt (R Calif.), Ayres (R Ohio) and Hiestand (R Calif.).

The Committee said unions having grievances against a single employer should be allowed to strike against all employers on a joint construction site because the employers on that site, in practice if not legally, operated as partners.

Committee Chairman Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) opposed HR 9070 in additional views. He said unions with common-site picketing power could close down any construction project and this could have a "devastating effect...on the health and welfare of a community, or upon our national defense effort". Barden said employers on a construction site normally did not act factually as partners or co-partners. "It is not uncommon for one contractor to make a profit on a construction project while another contractor on the same project suffers a substantial loss", Barden said.

Ranking Committee Republican Rep. Carroll D. Kearns (Pa.) said enactment of HR 9070 would be a "disservice to all concerned". Kearns said supporters of HR 9070 had not agreed on its meaning and that the bill would intensify racial discrimination by certain unions who would use common-site picketing to force such discrimination.

Reps. Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) and Edgar W. Hiestand (R Calif.) said HR 9070 should be rejected because it would: establish a "disastrous" precedent; subject employers not involved in construction labor disputes to undue harassment; legally force construction employees to join construction labor unions; help labor racketeers; help Teamster Union President James R. Hoffa; enable certain unions to get a "stranglehold" on many construction materials; increase the cost of construction; encourage undesirable restraints on trade; permit secondary boycotts in the construction industry; conflict with state laws governing the letting of contracts for state and local construction projects.

Reps. Stuyvesant Wainwright (R N.Y.) and Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.) opposed HR 9070 and said that existing law protected construction unions' rights to engage in primary picketing at construction sites provided it did not have the effect of a secondary boycott.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- May 2 -- The Education and Labor Committee formally asked the House Rules Committee to grant HR 9070 a rule for floor debate. The Rules Committee took no action on the request either immediately or during the remainder of the session.

June 23 -- Eighteen members of the Education and Labor Committee met in Barden's absence and adopted a resolution ordering Barden to seek floor debate on HR 9070 through Calendar Wednesday procedures if no rule were granted. House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) later in the day ruled action taken at the meeting invalid. (For explanation of Calendar Wednesday, see story on depressed areas bill, p. 292)

June 29 -- The Committee met, with Barden in the chair, but failed, in the face of his opposition, to reach a vote on proposals by several members that he be ordered to seek floor action through Calendar Wednesday procedures.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare, Labor Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- June 24, 27, 28, 29 on S 2643.

TESTIMONY -- June 24 -- Under Secretary of Labor James T. O'Connell endorsed the bill, despite a comment from Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), a Subcommittee member, that while President Eisenhower had specifically requested legislation to permit common-site picketing in his 1959 labor message, he had not repeated the request in 1960.

June 27 -- C.J. Haggerty, president of the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department, representing about 3 million workers, supported the bill, and also cited a May 6 AFL-CIO Executive Council resolution supporting it.

June 28 -- Sen. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) opposed S 2643 because it could do "irreparable harm" by permitting unions to shut down defense construction jobs.

Charles B. Keller Jr., Associated General Contractors of America Inc., opposed S 2643. He said the bill would permit unions to picket a contractor and shut down his entire job, because of their dispute with one of his subcontractors, despite the fact that a contractor did not always have free selection of subcontractors. He said six states -- Arkansas, California, Delaware, Idaho, Massachusetts and Wisconsin -- limited free selection of contractors. Even where there was free selection, the contractor only infrequently was able to control the labor policies of his subcontractors, Keller said.

June 29 -- The National Assn. of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. and the Building Contractors Assn. of New Jersey opposed the bill.

The Subcommittee Aug. 9 approved the bill by unanimous vote of the three members present, Kennedy, Pat McNamara (D Mich.) and Jennings Randolph (D W. Va.).

INTERNATIONAL HEALTH

S J Res 41 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 243) May 11, 1959.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate May 20, 1959 by a 63-17 roll-call vote. (1959 Almanac p. 411)

H J Res 694 -- Reported by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 1915) June 17, 1960.

S J Res 41 -- Passed, amended, by the House by a 259-114 roll-call vote June 24. (See p. 458)
- Senate June 30 by voice vote agreed to House amendments.

PL 86-610 -- Signed into law July 12.

S J Res 41, the International Health Research Act of 1960, provided a program of international cooperation in medical research and investigations relating to causes, prevention and cure of diseases and disabilities. The measure was a revised version of the "Health for Peace Act" which had only limited Administration support when it was passed by the Senate in 1959.

House revisions met Administration objections and reemphasized the President's powers under the Mutual Security Act to cooperate in international health matters. The resolution also expressed the sense of Congress that the President should use, to the fullest extent practicable, available foreign currencies or credits and stipulated that use of counterpart funds would require specific appropriation.

Funds to implement the program were included in the fiscal 1961 appropriation bill for the Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare (HR 11390). Under the bill, the National Institutes of Health received $5 million for international medical research and $3,707,000 for purchase of foreign currencies accruing under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480) for use in scientific activities overseas. An NIH report on 1960 international activities said the $5 million would go toward establishment of International Research Training Centers and that the foreign currencies were available in eight countries for use in developing research activities.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S J Res 41:

Authorized the Surgeon General to support international research through fellowships, grants, loans of equipment and interchange of research scientists.

Authorized the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to establish fellowships and make grants for research in rehabilitation of the handicapped and in child welfare.

Authorized the President to encourage and support an international research program and to delegate authority to carry out the program to the HEW Secretary.

Expressed the sense of Congress that the President should use, to the fullest extent practicable, foreign currencies or credits available through the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act (PL 83-480), Mutual Security Act or other foreign programs, and made such expenditures subject to specific appropriation.

Directed the President to submit a report on the program to each session of Congress and stipulated that his activities should not extend to any operational health program.

BACKGROUND -- S J Res 41 was introduced in February 1959 by Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.) and 63 co-sponsors. Hill said its purpose was to implement domestically a policy statement in the 1958 Mutual Security Act which said the United States should continue and strengthen "mutual efforts among the nations for research against diseases such as heart disease and cancer." The 1959 resolution authorized an annual $50 million appropriation for the program, opposed by the Administration which sought an "open end" authorization under which Congress would provide whatever funds it considered necessary. The Senate measure also established a new Institute under the Public Health Service, with the HEW Secretary in general charge. The Administration favored placing the program directly under the President. (1959 Almanac p. 197)

House

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Health and Safety Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 9 on S J Res 41 and related House bills. The Subcommittee March 9 approved a clean bill, H J Res 649, which authorized a $10 million-a-year program.

ACTION -- The Committee June 17 reported H J Res 649 (H Rept 1915), after revising the Subcommittee version. The report said H J Res 649 sought to meet Administration objections to S J Res 41 by not authorizing new appropriations; by not establishing in HEW a new National Institute for International and Medical Research; and by granting certain powers to the President as distinguished from those given the HEW Secretary and Surgeon General.

Floor Action

The House June 24, by a 259-114 roll-call vote, passed H J Res 649. Following the roll call, the House amended S J Res 41 by substituting the text of H J Res 649, then returned the measure to the Senate. (For voting, see chart p. 458)

DEBATE -- June 24 -- John B. Bennett (R Mich.) -- It was "a perfectly meaningless piece of legislation".

John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) -- The bill would be an "explicit expression" of a substantial U.S. stake in furtherance of health sciences.

Paul F. Schenck (R Ohio) -- Since health research "can be conducted in other nations at very little...cost to the U.S. through the use of foreign currencies...we should take advantage of this unusual opportunity."

Final Action

The Senate June 30 agreed by voice vote to the House amendments to S J Res 41, sending it to the White House.

INTERNAL SECURITY

HR 1992 -- Espionage overseas, reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 42) Feb. 23, 1959.

- Passed by the House March 2, 1959, by voice vote.

HR 2369 -- Smith Act amendments, reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 39) Feb. 18, 1959.

- Passed by the House March 2, 1959, by voice vote.

HR 6817 -- Registration of foreign agents, reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 949) Aug. 19, 1959.

- Passed by the House Aug. 31, 1959, by voice vote.

HR 9069 -- Passport regulations, reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 1151) Sept. 4, 1959.

- Passed, amended, by the House Sept. 8, 1959, by a 371-18 roll-call vote. (See 1959 Almanac p. 394).

S 2652 -- Omnibus internal security bill, reported by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 1811) June 30, 1960.

HR 12753 -- Propaganda dissemination, reported by House Un-American Activities Committee (H Rept 2025) June 28, 1960.

- Passed by the House Aug. 22, by a 395-3 roll-call vote. (See p. 466)

Despite House passage of five separate bills sponsors claimed would strengthen the Nation's internal security, and the incorporation of four of them in an omnibus bill reported to the Senate floor, the 86th Congress failed to enact new internal security measures.

The attempt to strengthen existing laws began in 1959 with House passage of four bills dealing with prosecution of espionage committed overseas (HR 1992), the definition of "organize" under the Smith Act (HR 2369), registration of foreign agents (HR 6817) and passport regulations (HR 9069). Although an omnibus bill (S 2652) containing provisions corresponding to each of the four House-passed measures was reported June 30, 1960 by the Senate Judiciary Committee, there was no Senate floor action during the remainder of 1960.

The last attempt to enact internal security legislation was made Aug. 22, 1960 when the House passed a bill (HR 12753) to broaden the definition of those persons required to register with the Justice Department when disseminating propaganda within the United States. The Senate, however, did not take up either HR 12753 or another House measure (HR 8121) furnishing specific statutory authority for the Government's industrial security program. (For HR 8121 see story p. 281)

Senate (S 2652)

BACKGROUND -- See 1959 Almanac p. 205-211.

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

ACTION -- June 30, 1960 reported a four-part omnibus internal security bill (S 2652 -- S Rept 1811) sponsored by Sens. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) and Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.). It was approved by the Internal Security Subcommittee Sept. 7, 1959. (1959 Almanac p. 210) Each of the four provisions corresponded to a bill passed by the House in 1959. As reported, S 2652:

● Foreign Agents -- Amended the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 to require persons employed by U.S. groups "supervised, directed, controlled or financed" by foreign governments or parties to register under the Act. Under existing law, such persons did not have to register unless they worked for groups "subsidized" by foreign governments or parties. A bill containing this provision (HR 6817 -- H Rept 949) was passed by voice vote of the House Aug. 31, 1959. It was supported by the Justice Department.

● Espionage -- Provided judicial procedures for prosecution of espionage and other acts against the United States committed anywhere in the world. The provision would have repealed a section (18 USC 791) of the federal espionage laws restricting prosecution for espionage to acts committed in the U.S., on the high seas or within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the U.S. A House bill with this provision in it (HR 1992 -- H Rept 42) was passed by voice vote of the House March 2, 1959. In the 85th Congress, the House Aug. 18, 1958 passed a bill (HR 13676) similar to HR 1992 but it died in the Senate.

● Smith Act -- Defined the Smith Act prohibition (18 USC 2385) against organizing a group advocating forcible overthrow of the Government as applying not only to the initial act of bringing the group into being, but also to continuing organizational activities such as recruiting members, reorganizing units and conducting classes. The provision, in effect, overturned part of a June 17, 1957 Supreme Court ruling, in the Yates case, which held that the prohibition against organizing applied only to the initial act of bringing a group into being. This provision of S 2652 would have made continuing activities like recruiting a crime, even if they took place long after the organization was initially created. A similar provision was contained in a bill (HR 2369 -- H Rept 39) passed by voice vote of the House March 2, 1959. In the 85th Congress, the House Aug. 12, 1958 passed a bill (HR 13272) similar to HR 2369 but it died in the Senate. (1958 Almanac p. 288)

● Passports -- Permitted the Secretary of State to declare certain areas off-limits for travel by persons with U.S. passports and to deny passports, after a hearing, to Communists and Communist sympathizers whose presence abroad the Secretary thought would endanger U.S. security. The Secretary could use confidential information which he would not have to reveal in deciding the case. The House Sept. 8, 1959 passed a passport bill (HR 9069) which, however, required the Secretary to reveal the confidential information to the applicant and to a federal court if his decision to deny a passport were appealed, or excise it from the record on which the court decided the appeal.

Both S 2652 and HR 9069 were aimed at redressing a Supreme Court decision of June 16, 1958, in the Kent-Briehl case, in which the Court held that Congress has never given the State Department power to deny a passport to an applicant solely on the basis of his "beliefs or associations," including Communist party membership. President Eisenhower July 7, 1958 and Jan. 19, 1959 asked remedial legislation, and the House, in 1958, as well as 1959, passed a passport bill, but the Senate Foreign Relations Committee did not approve any passport bills in 1958, 1959 or 1960. (1958 Almanac p. 702; 1959 Almanac p. 209)

In a Senate speech July 1, Foreign Relations Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) said passport legislation fell under the jurisdiction of his Committee. He said that if S 2652 were brought to the floor, he would move to have it referred to his Committee for a study of the passport provisions. The bill, however, was not taken up by the Senate in 1960 and died with the 86th Congress' adjournment.

MINORITY REPORT

A minority report on S 2652, signed by Sens. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) and John A. Carroll (D Colo.), was filed Aug. 26 (S Rept 1811, Part 2). The minority opposed the passport provisions of S 2652 on the grounds that the State Department would be permitted to use classified reports containing information from secret informers and because the bill permitted the Department to deny a passport to anyone going abroad contrary to the national interest but did not define national interest or set criteria for determining it. The minority said passport legislation was properly the province of the Foreign Relations Committee. The minority report also said the provision expanding the number of persons required to register under the Foreign Agents Registration Act was so broad it would cover ordinary business men with some connections overseas and that the provision permitting the U.S. to prosecute individuals for offense against the U.S. committed anywhere in the world had not been studied thoroughly enough.

House (HR 12753)

COMMITTEE -- Un-American Activities.

ACTION -- June 28, 1960 reported HR 12753 without amendments (H Rept 2025). The report said that loopholes in the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (as amended in 1950 by the Subversive Activities Control Act) were being used by the "Communist conspiracy" to pour an "ever-increasing flood of Communist propaganda... into the United States." The 1938 Act required registration with the Department of Justice of agents of foreign governments and of persons and groups disseminating political propaganda in the U.S. on behalf of a foreign principal, and also required such political propaganda to be labeled.

The report also said various Government agencies shared responsibility for administering the Act, and there was an "urgent need for fixation of responsibility for administration" in one agency. Consequently, the Committee recommended enactment of HR 12753, amending both the 1938 and 1950 Acts, to tighten registration requirements and to create an Office of the Comptroller of Foreign Propaganda. (For detailed provisions, see below)

Floor Action

The House Aug. 22, by a 395-3 roll-call vote, suspended the rules (two-thirds majority required) and passed HR 12753 without amendments. (For voting, see chart p. 466)

The three voting against the proposal were Reps. William H. Meyer (D Vt.), Byron L. Johnson (D Colo.) and Frank Kowalski (D Conn.). Meyer said the bill would restrict the flow of valuable information into the U.S. and Johnson said it would contravene the constitutional ban against interference of freedom of the press and freedom of speech.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 12753 made these changes in the 1938 Foreign Agents Registration Act, as amended in 1950:

Required any individual or group to register with the Department of Justice if they were the agent of any domestic group that was supervised, or directed, or controlled, or financed, in whole or in part, by a foreign government, foreign political party or other foreign "principal". (Under existing law, agents of a domestic group had to register only if the group was subsidized directly or indirectly by a foreign principal.)

Required such agents who imported or transmitted political progaganda in any form to report the fact to the Attorney General within 48 hours and file copies of the propaganda with the Justice Department and Library of Congress. (Under existing law, these requirements applied only if the propaganda being transmitted was in printed form or in a form adaptable for circulation among two or more persons).

Required labeling of all political propaganda. (Under existing law, labeling was required only if the propaganda was printed or in a form adaptable for circulation among two or more persons.)

Stipulated that anyone outside the U.S. who disseminated or circulated foreign political propaganda into the U.S., except to someone already registered under the Act, would be considered an agent of a foreign principal and would be subject to the Act.

Established, within the Customs Bureau of the Treasury, an Office of the Comptroller of Foreign Propaganda, to be headed by a director who would perform the functions vested in the Secretary of the Treasury involving control of Communist and other foreign propaganda sent into the U.S.

Narrowed the exemption from registration of persons engaged in certain commercial activities.

DAIRY SUPPORTS

S 2917 -- Reported June 15, 1960 by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 1592).
- Passed Senate Aug. 19 by voice vote.
- Reported Aug. 29 by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 2182).
- Passed by the House Aug. 31 by standing vote.

PL 86-799 -- Signed into law Sept. 16.

Despite Administration opposition in recent years to high price supports for agriculture, President Eisenhower Sept. 16 signed a bill (S 2917 -- PL 86-799) raising Government price supports on butterfat and milk used for manufacturing. President Eisenhower had indicated that he signed the bill reluctantly to avoid "intensely partisan political charges" in the dairy regions.

S 2917 raised minimum support prices on dairy products from 77 percent to about 80 percent of parity from the date of enactment (Sept.16) until the end of the marketing year (March 31, 1961). In dollars and cents, this meant an increase in supports from $3.06 to $3.22 per hundredweight on manufacturing milk and from 56.6 cents to 59.6 cents per pound on butterfat. The bill did not raise the actual prices paid for these products above existing market levels.

Passage of S 2917 was recommended by the National Milk Producers Federation and the National Farmers Union. It was opposed by the American Farm Bureau Federation and the Department of Agriculture.

Senate

S 2917 was introduced Jan. 27, 1960 by Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.) and reported June 15 by the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 1592).

Prior to Senate approval by voice vote Aug. 19, the bill's proponents argued that the cost of the price support raise to the Government would be negligible since the actual prices received by dairy farmers were the same as, or exceeded, the minimum price support level. They also pointed out that the inventory of milk products held by the Commodity Credit Corp. was low. Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) said Government-held milk supplies were "below what is a safe reserve for this country's present needs, for its future needs, or for its overseas operations."

Speaking in opposition to S 2917, Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) said it was an election-year measure designed "to buy votes out of the Federal Treasury." Sen. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) called the bill "completely unrealistic" because it "set a specific minimum support in dollars and cents for an agricultural commodity without taking into account either consumption or demand, as is accomplished through the concept of parity."

House

The bill was reported to the House Aug. 29 by the House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 2182). It was passed Aug. 31 by a standing vote of 171-32.

Speaking in favor of S 2917, House Agriculture Committee Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) said it would put "a floor under the price the farmers are now receiving" and did not "pretend to increase the farmer's check". Other supporters of the bill said it would allow many farmers to remain in business "by providing a realistic floor to dairy income", and the bill would assure sufficient production of dairy goods to meet domestic and foreign needs.

Rep. Henry Aldous Dixon (R Utah) submitted a statement by Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson opposing S 2917. Benson said the bill would hurt farmers, "increase prices to consumers and pile up surpluses in Government warehouses at heavy costs to farmers and other taxpayers.... Congress should quit tinkering with the dairy industry". Also opposed to the bill was Rep. John W. Byrnes (R Wis.) who said it was "not aimed at the economic well-being of the dairy farmer" but was "aimed at the dairy farmer's vote".

Eisenhower Approval

Signing S 2917 Sept. 16, President Eisenhower said the bill "would have little practical effect", could do little to benefit or harm dairy farmers, and would not add "materially" to Government costs. Had the bill been presented to him while Congress still had recourse from his veto, he said, he would have refused to approve it because "the bill on its face violates long-established and well-known policies of this Administration." But because of election-year politics, the President said a veto "would only serve to engender intensely partisan political charges and counter-charges in the dairy regions."

WHEAT BILL REJECTED BY HOUSE

S 2759 — Reported by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 1306) May 2, 1960.
HR 12261 — Reported by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 1635) May 20.
S 2759 — Passed by the Senate by a 44-36 roll-call vote June 9. (See p. 500)
HR 12261 — Rejected by the House by a 171-236 roll-call vote June 23. (See p. 456)

Congress made no real effort at enacting general farm legislation in 1960, despite President Eisenhower's pledge to sign "constructive" legislation that followed the guidelines he laid down in a special farm message.

Instead, Congress tried to pass a bill dealing with the one commodity in greatest surplus, wheat. The effort failed. In the price-support field, all Congress could accomplish were two minor laws stabilizing tobacco support prices (HR 9664 -- PL 86-389) and temporarily raising minimum prices on dairy products (S 2917 -- PL 86-799). (See stories, p. 324, 334)

Background

REFERENCES -- Veto of Wheat bill (1959 Almanac p. 238); Agricultural Act of 1958 (1958 Almanac p. 269); Omnibus Farm Program, Price Supports (1954 Almanac p. 100).

Although farm surpluses are the most publicized of numerous farm problems, they are the concern of only about half the farmers in the U.S. -- an estimated 8.3 million farm operators and members of their families with gross annual cash sales from farming of $2,500 or more. These "commercial" farmers make over 90 percent of all cash sales. For them, the questions of surpluses and the cost-price squeeze are at the heart of the farm problem.

Central to the surplus problem is the rapid growth of farm productivity, which has increased yields steadily since World War II. Between 1946 and 1959, corn production rose from 36.7 bushels per acre to 51.5; grain sorghums, from 15.9 to 37.2.

Food consumption has not risen as rapidly. This has produced an imbalance: the farmer grows more every year than people are buying. This surplus, if added to the market, would drive prices down sharply and hence lower the farmer's rate of profit. Less efficient farmers, operating on small profit margins already, would be forced out of business.

To prevent this, the Government tries to cut back supplies. It imposes acreage allotments -- limitations on how much land may be planted to certain crops. If a surplus nevertheless develops, the Government steps in and buys it up. It does this in two ways. First, it enlarges the "normal" market by buying about $2 billion in food for foreign aid and welfare programs. Second, it stands ready to buy up the rest of the surplus, whatever it may be, at a fixed price. This has the effect of maintaining the general market level at that price. Food purchased in this second way is simply put into a stockpile. Some of it is later sold. The net cost is about $2 billion a year, half of it for storage costs. At cost value, the U.S. stockpile as of Aug. 31 was worth $7,259,663,945.

The net effect of these surplus disposal and price-support operations is to enlarge the farmer's market by about $4 billion a year over normal commercial sales.

Closely tied to the surplus problem is the cost-price squeeze, which simply means that commercial farmers' production costs are rising faster than gross receipts. This means lower net income. According to the Agricultural Marketing Service, net income has dropped fairly steadily from 42 percent of gross income in 1950 to 31.1 percent in 1959.

The price-support system helps the small commercial farmer by attempting to maintain prices at a level at which he can operate and still make a profit.

Price Programs

The Government maintains numerous price-support operations. All are designed to keep surpluses off the market -- either by restricting production, or by Government "removal" of surpluses -- and thus maintain a high market price. Most are administered by a special U.S. agency set up for this purpose, the Commodity Credit Corp. (CCC). These programs (with their annual costs) are:

Foreign Aid and Welfare -- In order to help exporters compete in world markets, the Government pays subsidies to exporters of grains, cotton and rice. This enables the exporters to sell at the lower world price, after buying at domestic prices, without a loss. Such subsidies probably amount to several hundred million dollars a year; their cost is not shown separately in the budget but is distributed among various other items.

Under the National School Lunch Act and the special school milk program (included in PL 81-439) the Government makes direct cash grants to the states for purchase of food and milk for school nonprofit food programs. This in effect creates new markets for these products. Costs in fiscal 1960: $153 million and $82 million respectively.

Under Section 32 of PL 74-320 (1935), 30 percent of annual tariff receipts may be used to purchase farm goods for which some immediate use may be found. Section 32 funds, totalling $88 million in fiscal 1960, are used in a number of ways for food welfare donations and stimulating exports.

Under Title I of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 83-480), the Treasury, in effect, with the aid of private merchants, buys U.S. farm goods and sells them overseas for foreign currencies, which the Government then uses for various purposes. Cost in 1960: $1,059,000,000.

Under Title II of PL 480, the Government ships food overseas for disaster relief. Cost in 1960: $70 million.

Under Title III of PL 480, the Government donates food to the unemployed and persons in disaster areas of the U.S. ($1,093,667); and makes food donations to welfare agencies in the U.S. ($82 million) and abroad ($130.8 million). Also under Title III, food stocks are swapped for strategic materials ($171 million).

Under other laws, donations of food are made to federal and state penal institutions, and payments are made to veterans' and armed forces hospitals for certain milk purchases in excess of normal requirements ($23 million).

Expenditures for Agriculture

The chart below shows federal budget expenditures for agriculture programs for fiscal 1960. Export subsidies, except for those supporting the International Wheat Agreement, are distributed into various categories, as are certain of the food donations. (Under the International Wheat Agreement, the U.S. and a number of other wheat-surplus nations agree to provide fixed quantities of wheat at certain prices to members of the agreement that are wheat-deficit nations. Since these prices are generally below the domestic U.S. price, the Government subsidizes the exports.)

The Commodity Credit Corp.'s net annual loss is computed by deducting dollar cash income received by the Government from sales of items in the CCC stockpile from cash expenditures for items going into the stockpile.

"Sales for foreign currencies" represents annual dollar cost of the program; it does not take into account any use of the foreign currencies so acquired. Figures for REA and FHA represent loans made in fiscal 1960. These loans are wholly repayable.

Price Supports -- The Government also supports farm prices by standing ready to buy any and all supplies at some fixed price. This sustains the market at the support level, since no one need sell for less when he can get the support price from the Government. Congress has made supports mandatory at present for wheat, cotton, rice, corn, peanuts, tobacco, butterfat and manufacturing milk, honey, tung nuts, small feed grains (oats, barley, rye and grain sorghums) and wool (the wool program is somewhat different, involving a direct payment). Supports are optional for other crops, according to the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture. In 1960, crude pine gum, dry edible beans, flaxseed, soybeans and cottonseed were also supported.

The level of support is based on the parity concept and is fixed by law within certain limits. The parity concept involves a complicated formula which attempts to determine how much a farmer should receive for a unit of produce -- say a bushel of wheat -- in order to buy as much with his receipts as he could in the years 1910-14 with the proceeds from a bushel of wheat. Ninety percent of parity is generally considered a high support level, 70 or 75 percent middling, below that relatively low.

In recent years Democrats generally have supported high support levels, the Administration lower levels.

Although supports are available for only a small number of crops, they are the most important crops. A House Government Operations Committee report (H Rept 2219) of Aug. 31 estimated that about 42 percent of farmers' cash receipts come from sales of crops and dairy products for which supports are available; and another 42 percent from sales of meat and poultry products, which are raised largely on feed grains for which price supports are available.

The four biggest items in the $7.3 billion Government stockpile as of Aug. 31 were (by cost value): wheat, $3 billion; corn, $2.1 billion; upland cotton, $865 million; grain sorghum, $839 million. Under a 1954 law, a large portion of stocks was designated as defense "set-asides."

Acreage Allotments -- Also to restrict the supply reaching the market, the Government imposes limits on acreage that may be planted to wheat, cotton, peanuts, rice and tobacco. (A national allotment is set, then shared out among producers on the basis of their history of production.) Rising yields per acre, particularly for wheat, have reduced the effectiveness of acreage restrictions in cutting supply. Under the wheat program, the "basic" allotment is 82 million acres. This may be lowered by the Secretary of Agriculture if an oversupply appears likely, but the minimum it can be lowered to is 55 million acres, set in 1938.

Soil Bank -- Another device for reducing production is the soil bank, created in 1956. (1956 Almanac p. 375) Under this program, land was temporarily retired from production of crops in surplus (acreage reserve program) or retired over longer fixed periods of up to 10 years and devoted to specified conservation practices (conservation reserve program). Farmers received compensatory payments from the Government for crops they would have planted. The acreage reserve program expired with the 1959 crop year and was not renewed. Authority for the Government to make new contracts with farmers for conservation reserve lapsed in 1960 and was not extended by Congress. But 10-year conservation reserve contracts concluded in 1960 will run through 1970, so costs of the program will continue until then. The fact that farmers put only their poorest acres into the soil bank, or put their whole farms into the conservation reserve and then left the area, or allegedly did not comply with conservation requirements, made this a controversial program. Cost in 1960: $323 million.

Direct Payments -- Instead of using price supports the Government aids sugar and wool producers by making direct payments to them. These amounted to $94 million for wool and $74 million for sugar in 1960.

Wheat Problem

More than twice the amount of wheat consumed in the U.S. in one year is stored in commercial elevators, in bins owned by the Commodity Credit Corp. and in 167 ships of the Maritime Administration's "moth-ball fleet." Normally, the U.S. wheat crop runs 1.1 billion bushels or more; 500 million bushels are consumed in the U.S., another 450 million sold overseas with the aid of export subsidies, leaving an annual surplus of about 150 million bushels or more.

The seriousness of the wheat surplus was underlined by President Eisenhower Feb. 9 in a special message to Congress. (See p. 629) In urging Congress to act "quickly and constructively" to revise the programs which have resulted in excessive overproduction of wheat, the President warned that these programs might "collapse under the pressure of public indignation." He pointed out that federal funds tied up in wheat approximated $3.5 billion -- well over 30 percent of the total funds invested in inventories and loans of the CCC -- but that wheat provided only 6 percent of the cash receipts from sales of farm products. He said it cost the Government about $1.5 million each day the year around to stabilize wheat prices and income.

Calling for "constructive" solutions to farm problems that were "largely due to economic distortions induced by years of federal interference," the President delineated three definite guidelines within which he would approve "any constructive solution that the Congress wishes to develop." They were:

- That price support levels be "realistically" related to production controls, with recognition that "the higher the support the more regimented must be the farmer." Mr. Eisenhower said he preferred a program that would "ultimately free the farmer rather than subject him to increasing governmental restraints."
- That price supports be set at levels that would not "stimulate still more excessive production, reduce domestic markets, and increase subsidies required to hold world outlets."
- That new legislation contain no "direct subsidy payment programs for crops in surplus; likewise, we must avoid programs which would invite harmful counter measures by our friends abroad, or which, while seeking to assist one group of farmers, would badly hurt other farmers."

Within those three guidelines the President said he would "approve any one or a combination of constructive proposals."

For wheat, the President said he preferred (as in 1959) new legislation that would eliminate acreage allotments and marketing quotas and provide for lowered support levels by setting price supports as a percentage of the average price of wheat during the three preceding years, rather than on the parity standard that reflected cost-price relationships of a previous period.

The President also recommended an "orderly expansion of the Conservation Reserve Program up to 60 million acres, with authority granted the Secretary of Agriculture to direct the major expansion of this program to areas of greatest need." (In 1960, an estimated 28 million acres were banked in the CRP). Within the CRP, the President also said he would accept an authorization "with proper safeguards" to make payments-in-kind in whole or part for the withdrawal of acreage from cultivation.

In addition to these legislative proposals, Mr. Eisenhower mentioned three agriculture programs being expanded administratively: The Food-for-Peace program, designed to use federally held commodities to supplement food supplies of friendly foreign countries; the Rural Development Program, to assist rural people in low-income areas to achieve a better living; and a utilization research program to develop new markets and new uses for farm products. The President added that a "coordinator for utilization research" would be named shortly. Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.), chairman of the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee, said that although the President's message "casts a ray of hope that we may soon enact wheat legislation," in order to do so it was also necessary "that we obtain the active support" of Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson. Ellender said there was "no prospect of Committee members agreeing on an over-all farm bill," and that the Committee should try instead to solve the wheat problem.

Ellender said he believed the only wheat legislation which would "receive the blessings of Congress" was his own bill, S 2759, which he introduced Jan. 7.

As Congress prepared to take up various wheat proposals, it faced two sets of conflicts that made a solution more difficult: the conflict between corn and wheat producers, and the conflict between large wheat producers and small.

Wheat-Corn -- Farmers in the corn-belt area, centering around Iowa, Nebraska, Illinois, and Indiana, are extremely wary of any proposed solutions to the wheat problem that might result in "dumping a lot of cheap wheat in the corn-feed grain area," as Rep. Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) put it March 10 at a House Agriculture Committee hearing.

At its current support prices, wheat cannot compete with corn and small feed grains as an animal feed. But if the wheat price were permitted to drop, as it might be under some plans which envision a two-price system under which wheat used for feed would not be supported by the Government, it might fall low enough to compete with corn as an animal feed. Such proposals have advocates in the Great Plains wheat belt. Corn-belt farmers also fear cutbacks in wheat acreage allotments that would result in planting of feed grains, in competition with those in the corn belt, on acres cut back from wheat, as occurred in Texas where grain sorghums became a major crop in former wheat areas.

15-Acre Exemption -- Except in a few states where production is negligible, all wheat farmers have wheat acreage allotments. Farmers who plant more than the permitted acreage must pay penalties. But a farmer whose allotment is less than 15 acres may overplant, and grow up to a total (including his allotment) of 15 acres without having to pay penalties. He frequently takes full advantage of this exemption. Farmers who come under this exemption number about 1.3 million. They plant 8 million acres of wheat a year and grow 240 million bushels of wheat. These farmers are located almost entirely in Ohio, Virginia, New York, Michigan, Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana, Minnesota and Missouri.

In the wheat belt -- the Dakotas, Montana, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado and Texas -- there are 500,000 farmers who plant 52 million acres and harvest 950 million bushels of wheat a year. Their complaint is that overplanting under the 15-acre exemption produces a large share of the annual wheat surplus of approximately 150 million to 250 million bushels.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Agriculture and Forestry.

HEARINGS -- April 20, 21 on proposed wheat legislation (S 2759, 3159, 3335 and others).

TESTIMONY -- April 20 -- Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Marvin L. McLain verified reports that the Administration was willing to compromise on wheat legislation. The reports had started April 5 when Senate GOP leaders emerged from a meeting with President Eisenhower with the assertion that the President "might" sign a bill increasing wheat price supports from 75 percent to 80 percent of parity and reducing the national wheat acreage allotment by 20 percent. McLain also repeated the Administration's opposition to the so-called wheat certificate plan embodied in S 3159 and HR 11011-11022 (for House bills, see House Agriculture Committee hearings, below).

McLain said the Administration would not be opposed to a bill (S 2759) sponsored by Committee Chairman Allen J. Ellender (D La.) if certain modifications were made. The Ellender bill would raise wheat price supports to 80 percent of parity for the 1961 wheat crop and drop them to 75 percent in 1962, 70 percent in 1963 and to a floor of 65 percent in 1964 and following years. It also would cut wheat acreage allotments by 20 percent for the 1961 crop and 25 percent in 1962 and thereafter.

McLain proposed keeping the price supports at their present level of 75 percent for the 1961 wheat crop, dropping them to 70 percent in 1962 and to 65 percent thereafter, at the same time cutting acreage by 25 percent in 1961.

McLain said the Administration still preferred the proposal it made to the House Agriculture Committee March 14 to eliminate acreage allotments and to set supports at 75 percent of the average wheat prices for the three previous years. But, he said, "If this is the direction Congress insists in going, we would not be opposed."

The president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Charles B. Shuman, urged adoption of the plan developed by his organization and introduced as S 3335. The Farm Bureau bill would eliminate acreage allotments and marketing quotas and base wheat price supports on support levels for corn.

April 21 -- A North Dakota farmer and seed company operator, Russell Duncan, said wheat production controls should be based on bushel allotments instead of acreage. He said wheat growers should receive 100 percent of parity for wheat consumed in the U.S. and world prices for that sold abroad.

ACTION -- May 2 reported an amended version of S 2759 (S Rept 1306). The measure was approved by the Committee April 27 after it had rejected by an 8-8 vote the wheat certificate bill, S 3159. The wheat certificate measure had the backing of the National Assn. of Wheat Growers, National Farmers Union and the National Grange. (For explanation of plan, see House hearings, below) The bill sponsored by the American Farm Bureau Federation, S 3335, also was rejected April 26 by a 3-14 vote.

Approval of S 2759 came on a motion by Sen. Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) to report the bill with a provision to increase price supports to 80 percent of parity for the crop years 1961, 1962 and 1963. The Mundt motion carried by an 8-7 vote and S 2759, which also provided for a cut in national wheat acreage by 20 percent, was ordered reported to the Senate.

Earlier the Committee took the following action:

- Rejected by an 8-9 vote a motion by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) to set price supports at 85 percent.
- Rejected by an 8-9 vote a motion by Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) to set price supports at 75 percent of parity.
- Rejected by a 5-10 vote a motion by Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) to increase and extend the Conservation Reserve Program (soil bank).
- Voted 6-5 to agree to an amendment by Mundt to establish a permanent wheat advisory council to aid the Secretary of Agriculture on long-range planning.
- Agreed unanimously to accept an amendment by Sen. Milton R. Young (R N.D.) to give the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to increase acreage of durum, soft fed and other wheats not part of the surplus.

In its report accompanying S 2759, the Committee said the Department of Agriculture had estimated that the 1960 wheat crop would total about 1.2 billion bushels, the fifth largest on record. Supplies during the 1959-60 marketing year were 2.4 billion bushels compared to estimated wheat disappearance of 1.1 billion. The carryover of wheat on July 1, 1960 therefore, the Committee said, would be 1.3 billion bushels. It said a further increase appeared likely by July 1, 1961.

Floor Action

The Senate June 9, by a 44-36 roll-call vote, passed S 2759, with amendments, and sent it to the House.

The bill called for a cut of 20 percent, or 11 million acres, in the Nation's 55 million wheat-producing acres. At the same time, it froze wheat price supports at the existing level of 75 percent of parity.

The Senate agreed to the 75 percent subsidies in lieu of the 80 percent level that had been recommended by the Senate Agriculture Committee May 2. The lower figure was proposed in an amendment by Agriculture Committee Chairman Allen J. Ellender (D La.), which was adopted 48-34. (For voting, see charts p. 499-500)

During the debate, Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) said it was his personal opinion that the President would not sign a bill providing supports at 80 percent of parity. That morning he had asked Mr. Eisenhower about rumors he might sign an 80-percent bill, and the President had replied, "I made no such commitment and I gave no such assurance."

In earlier action, the Senate, 32-59, rejected an amendment by Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) to continue the soil bank Conservation Reserve Program for three more years, through 1963, and to permit up to 60 million acres to be placed in the soil bank, compared with 28,620,000 acres currently in it.

A series of four roll-call votes in two hours spelled defeat for an Ellender amendment that would have drastically cut wheat price supports. In the first vote, the Senate, on a 45-41 roll call, agreed to the amendment, proposing to cut national wheat acreage permanently by 20 percent and to continue price supports at 75 percent of parity for the 1961 wheat crop, dropping to 70 percent in 1962 and 65 percent in 1963 and each year thereafter.

Then, with several Democrats who had voted for the amendment switching their votes, the Senate, by a 41-45 roll-call vote, rejected a Holland (D Fla.) motion to table a move to reconsider the action on the amendment. This opened up the possibility of more voting on the amendment. By a 45-42 vote, the Senate next agreed to the motion to reconsider the amendment. Finally, the amendment, on reconsideration, was rejected on a 39-46 roll call.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the House, S 2759:

Set wheat price supports at 75 percent of parity for the 1961, 1962 and 1963 crops.

Provided for a permanent cut of 20 percent in total wheat acreage, currently about 55 million acres, starting with the 1961 crop.

Authorized payments-in-kind of Government-owned wheat stocks to farmers agreeing to the 20 percent acreage-cutback; the payments-in-kind would be equal to one-half the value of the wheat that would have been produced on the withdrawn land.

Authorized increased payments-in-kind to farmers taking more than 30 percent of their wheat acreage out of production if they used the land for soil and water conservation.

Reduced the maximum size of wheat farms exempt from marketing quotas and other controls ordinarily applicable to the wheat program from 15 acres to either 12 acres or the maximum number of acres planted in the previous five years, whichever was smaller.

Prohibited price support payments for any other commodity produced in 1961, 1962 or 1963 to wheat producers failing to comply with wheat requirements.

Preserved farm wheat acreage history on the land on which no wheat would be planted during the three-year period.

Provided that if the 1961 marketing quotas should be disapproved by more than one-third of the producers voting in a referendum, wheat marketing quotas and acreage allotments would be ended for 1961 and all subsequent years and wheat price supports would be reduced to 50 percent of parity.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 9 -- Ellender -- continue existing price supports at 75 percent of parity, provide 20 percent permanent cut in total wheat acreage and fix payments-in-kind at 50 percent of production potential of withdrawn land for crop years 1961-63. Roll-call vote, 48-34.

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) -- Strike section authorizing establishment of nine-member Advisory Committee on the Production, Marketing and Utilization of Wheat. Voice vote.

Milton R. Young (R N.D.) -- Prohibit payments-in-kind on acreage voluntarily retired, above the mandatory 20 percent, if this brought total payments-in-kind to more than $10,000. Voice.

Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) -- In future wheat referenda, permit only producers who planted more than the acreage-exemption maximum the previous year (12 or 15 acres) to vote. Voice.

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Permit small producers to plant either 12 acres or the maximum number of acres that they planted in any one of the five preceding years (instead of three), without losing their exemption from marketing quotas. Voice.

Young -- Permit farmers participating in the Great Plains program to abandon wheat acreage and remain out of wheat production and still not lose wheat acreage history. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 9 -- Hickenlooper -- Extend Conservation Reserve Program through 1963 and expand it to 60 million acres. Roll-call vote, 32-59.

Ellender -- Set wheat price supports at 75 percent of parity for 1961 crop, 70 percent for 1962 and 65 percent for 1963 and subsequent years, provide acreage cuts of 20 percent for 1961 and subsequent crops and 50-percent payments-in-kind for 1961, 1962 and 1963. First accepted, on 45-41 roll call, then reconsidered and rejected on a 39-46 roll call.

Cooper -- Permit farmers who had planted no wheat, or had planted less than 12 acres in the previous three years, to plant up to 12 acres and still be eligible for classification as a small producer not subject to marketing controls. Standing vote.

Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) -- Strike language permitting Secretary of Agriculture to increase acreage allotments for certain kinds of durum wheat if needed in commercial food products. Voice.

Dirksen -- Reduce payments-in-kind from one-half to one-third the value of the wheat that would have been produced on land withdrawn from production. Voice.

House

COMMITTEE -- Agriculture.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 18 on the Administration's proposed wheat bill and March 9, 10, 11, 14 on various other wheat bills (HR 11011-11022, 11044, 10666, 10774).

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 18 -- Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson proposed farm legislation to reduce price supports and eliminate production controls for wheat. The draft bill, he said, expressed the Eisenhower Administration's solution to the wheat surplus problem, but he indicated willingness to accept, as did the President in his farm message, more rigid controls as long as they did not cause overproduction or raise price supports above existing levels.

The proposed wheat legislation would:

- Eliminate acreage allotments, effective with the 1961 crop.
- Set price supports for the 1961, 1962 and 1963 crops at 75 percent of the previous three-year average.
- Set price supports for the 1964 crop and each year thereafter at 90 percent of the previous three-year average.
- Bar sales of wheat from Government stocks except "on the basis of 100 percent of the three-year average price used in determining the price support level."

In addition, Benson proposed extending the Conservation Reserve Program for three years, with a goal of retiring 60 million acres.

March 9 -- Spokesmen for three major farm organizations -- the National Grange, National Farmers Union and the National Assn. of Wheat Growers -- presented a new plan, jointly developed. Bills implementing the plan were introduced the same day by eight Democrats and four Republicans (HR 11011-11022).

As explained by Glen Bayne, programs chairman for the wheat growers association, the plan would establish a national wheat quota which in 1961 would be about 950 million bushels -- 500 million for U.S. consumption, 450 million for export. Farmers would be permitted to produce 150 million bushels less than the national figure. The 150 million bushel deficit would be taken from the Government's surplus stockpiles. No wheat could be marketed without "use" certificates. To qualify for use certificates, farmers would be required to cut 10 percent from their normal wheat acreage and conform to their production quotas. All certificated wheat would be supported at 75 percent of parity.

Additional support came from the National Farmers Organization, the Missouri Farmers Assn., National Corn Growers Assn., American Soybean Assn. and Grain Sorghum Producers Assn. John A. Baker of the National Farmers Union also appeared in support of the plan.

March 10 -- Herschel Newsom, Master of the National Grange, testified for passage of the legislation.

March 11 -- The American Farm Bureau Federation, largest of all farm groups, called for adoption of its wheat control plan as contained in HR 10666 and HR 10774. Charles Marshall, president of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation, said the Farm Bureau legislation would implement a four-point program: (1) elimination of wheat acreage allotments and marketing quotas; (2) wheat price supports based on the support level for corn, with adjustments for differences in weight, nutritive value, and buyer preference (he said this would mean supports of about $1.27 per bushel); (3) restrictions on sales of wheat stocks held by the Government to protect farmers against competition from surplus Government stocks; and (4) expansion of the conservation reserve (soil bank), to 60 million acres from the existing level of 28 million acres, in three years. He said a certificate price support plan, such as that presented by the other farm organizations, would "seriously jeopardize income opportunities for traditional wheat growers."

March 14 -- Marvin L. McLain, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture said wheat would drop to about $1.35 a bushel during 1961 under the Administration plan.

OTHER HEARINGS

The Committee also held hearings on general farm legislation Feb. 29, March 1 and 15.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 29 -- Representatives of the National Farmers Union, including James G. Patton, NFU president, proposed a program of producer marketing agreements. In addition to its stated aim of giving the farmer a bigger voice in controlling production, the NFU said such a program would reduce the Government's surplus stockpile and increase farm income. NFU endorsed a bill (HR 10355), sponsored by Rep. W.R. Poage (D Texas) and 16 other Democrats, which would permit farmers to work closely with the Agriculture Department through farmer advisory committees to devise ways of controlling production of crops. Under the Poage bill, the farmer advisory groups would consult and work with the Department on farm programs for specific commodities. It would permit the Department to set up nationwide marketing quotas for a commodity after two-thirds of the producers of that commodity gave their consent. The quotas then would govern the amount of the commodity an individual farmer could sell. Farmers whose market price fell below a certain "fair" price would be eligible for direct subsidy payments from the Government.

March 1 -- The president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Charles B. Shuman, said a program of rigid nationwide marketing quotas and production payments, as contained in the Poage bill, would be a long step towards "collectivization of farmers in the U.S."

"Production costs of the magnitude that would be required by the proposed legislation -- the inevitable regimentation that would be necessary to enforce such a program -- and the proposed limitations on payments to individuals would level per family farm income and reduce even our most productive farmers to peasant status," Shuman said.

The AFBF president urged an increase in the conservation reserve to 60 million acres within three years and a general move toward elimination of controls and lower price supports for surplus crops.

March 15 -- Seven Democratic Governors of Midwestern farm states appeared in behalf of the Poage bill. Gov. Hershel C. Loveless (Iowa) said the appearance was the result of several conferences among the Governors on the decline of farm income. Others present were Govs. Orville L. Freeman (Minn.), G. Mennen Williams (Mich.), Gaylord Nelson (Wis.), Ralph Herseth (S.D.), Stephen L.R. McNichols (Colo.) and James Blair Jr. (Mo.).

Herschel Newsom, Master of the National Grange, also supported the Poage bill, but he said he feared it might take too much authority over farm matters away from Congress. He said the measure needed further study.

Also supporting the Poage bill at the March 15 hearing were the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture Cooperatives, Wisconsin Farmers Union and the Wisconsin Pure Milk Products Assn.

ACTION -- The Committee May 20 reported a clean bill (HR 12261 -- H Rept 1635) providing wheat producers with a choice between two production control plans. The bill, sponsored by W.R. Poage (D Texas), also included a program for feed grains -- corn, oats, barley, rye and grain sorghums. The Committee approved the measure May 18 by a 20-13 vote with one Democrat, Harold B. McSween (La.), joining the Committee's 12 Republicans in opposition.

The section of the bill dealing with wheat was similar to legislation (S 1968) vetoed by President Eisenhower in 1959. Under it, major wheat producers would vote in a national referendum for one of the following plans:

- A program raising wheat price supports from the existing level of 75 percent of parity to 85 percent, cutting back national wheat acreage of 55 million acres by 25 percent and granting to farmers who reduce their wheat acreage payments-in-kind from the Government's wheat surplus equal to 55 percent of the average yield on the withdrawn land.
- A program removing all Government controls on wheat production and putting price supports for the 1961 crop at the level currently paid for feed grains -- about 60 percent of parity -- dropping to 50 percent thereafter, and extending the Conservation Reserve Program for three years while raising it to 60 million acres.

The bill provided that the wheat referendum would be held by July 25, 1960, with producers of more than 15 acres of wheat eligible to vote. The outcome would be determined by a simple majority vote.

A third section of the bill provided an expanded program for the distribution of dairy, poultry and meat products to the needy and to schools by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Floor Action

The House June 23, by a 171-236 roll-call vote, rejected HR 12261. The defeat of the bill illustrated, to a degree, the resentment of big city Democrats for federal price support policies and the high cost of food. The measure was backed by the Democratic leadership and represented traditional party policy. Yet of 56 Democrats from Chicago, Albany, New York, Schenectady, Buffalo, Philadelphia and urban districts in Connecticut, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, only 52 voted, and 42 of them voted against the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 456)

Before the final vote on HR 12261, the House rejected by a 195-211 roll-call vote a motion by Rep. Henry Aldous Dixon (R Utah) to substitute the production control plan that was approved by the Senate June 9 (S 2759).

The House, by failing to pass a wheat bill of its own and by its rejection of the Senate bill, virtually ended any chance for new legislation to deal with the wheat surplus problem. That meant the existing program would remain in effect for the 1961 wheat crop with price supports at 75 percent of parity or about $1.77 per bushel.

As reported by the House Agriculture Committee, the feed grains section of HR 12261 (Title II) would have authorized producers of corn, oats, barley, rye and grain sorghum to elect a nine-man committee to develop, with the aid of the Secretary of Agriculture, a program for feed grains that would bring production into line with demand, return feed grain farmers between 85 and 100 percent of parity and authorize the retirement of up to 50 percent of crop land in return for payments-in-kind. It would have authorized direct subsidy payments to producers of feed grains, but prohibited any Government purchase or storage of feed grains.

This section was expanded when the House by voice vote June 22 agreed to an amendment by Rep. H. Carl Andersen (R Minn.) that would have permitted feed grain producers to choose in a national referendum between electing a nine-man farmer committee to work out a program and setting up a so-called green acres program for reducing production. Andersen's green acres proposal would have required feed grain producers to divert 20 percent of their cropland into so-called non-conserving crops -- crops, such as grass, that are not harvested and which do not deplete the soil. Farmers accepting such cuts in their acreage would be eligible to receive price supports eventually reaching 90 percent of parity. The proposal also authorized payments-in-kind to farmers reducing their feed grain acreage below the average acreage devoted to feed grain production during the immediately preceding two years.

Price supports that would have been paid under the green acres proposal were originally put at 75 percent of parity by Andersen, but were increased when the House, by a 61-29 standing vote, agreed to an amendment by Rep. Leonard G. Wolf (D Iowa) to peg them at 80 percent for the 1961-62 crops, 85 percent for the 1963-64 crops and 90 percent for the 1965 and subsequent crops.

Title III, expanding the distribution of dairy, poultry and meat products to the needy and to schools, was not changed before the final vote on the bill.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 22 -- Leonard G. Wolf (D Iowa) -- In the Andersen (R Minn.) green acres plan, instead of supporting feed grains at 75 percent of parity, support them at 80 percent in 1961-62, 85 percent in 1963-64 and 90 percent thereafter. Standing vote, 61-29.

H. Carl Andersen (R Minn.) -- Amend the Quie (R Minn.) substitute for the feed grains section by substituting a green acres plan, as amended by Wolf, giving farmers a choice between working out a feed grains program for Congress to ratify or adopting a plan for cutting acreage 20 percent and raising supports for feed grains to 90 percent of parity by 1965, instead of the existing level of about 60 percent. Voice vote.

Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) -- Substitute for existing language permitting farmers to work out their own feed grains plan a new title, as amended by Andersen and Wolf. Standing, 68-23.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 21 -- Robert W. Levering (D Ohio) -- Strike a section of the Dixon (R Utah) amendment reducing the 15 acre wheat acreage limitation to 12 acres. Voice.

Henry Aldous Dixon (R Utah) -- Substitute the Senate-passed wheat bill (S 2759) for the committee bill. Standing, 85-92; teller, 92-108.

June 22 -- Quie -- Permit small producers, operating under the 15-acre limitation, to participate in the wheat referendum to choose between the two wheat plans. Standing, 50-68.

Keith Thomson (R Wyo.) -- Test vote on first of several amendments to strike out everything but the second wheat plan from the bill. Voice.

Melvin R. Laird (R Wis.) -- Regardless of what happens in the referendum on wheat, extend the conservation reserve program for three years, permit up to 65 million acres to be placed in it, and provide payments in kind up to $7,500 for putting acreage in the soil bank. Voice.

June 23 -- George McGovern (D S.D.) -- Strike out the wheat and feed grains sections and substitute a section authorizing 90 percent of parity supports for wheat, feed grains and most other crops, with production controls in units of production, rather than acreage, and support payments limited to $5,000 for any one farmer. Standing 59-65; teller 55-73.

Delbert L. Latta (R Ohio) -- Maintain the 15-acre wheat acreage limitation for small farmers, or permit them to plant the maximum number of acres up to 15 that they planted in the three preceding years. Standing, 27-89.

James G. O'Hara (D Mich.) -- Reduce the 15-acre limitation to 12 acres, but do not reduce the acreage of farmers planting below that. Standing, 17-85.

William H. Avery (R Kan.) -- Strike out Title III. Standing, 37-89.

Gerald T. Flynn (D Wis.) -- Increase the conservation reserve to 80 million acres and discontinue wheat and feed grain supports starting with 1964. Voice.

DEBATE -- June 23 -- McGovern -- Said his amendment fixing price supports at 90 percent of parity for virtually all farm commodities would "enable farm families to stay on the land" whereas "Secretary Benson's proposals would not only destroy family farm life but would undercut the economic social and spiritual basis of our community life."

Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) -- Said HR 12261 was too costly, too "involved" and could not be enacted into law. "Does it make sense that we should in these last days of the session pass a bill which is so complex and so complicated that no one really knows how it will affect our agricultural economy?"

HELIUM CONSERVATION

HR 10548 — Reported by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 1552) April 26, 1960.
- Passed by voice vote of the House May 2.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 1814) June 30.
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate Aug. 31.
- Senate amendments agreed to by voice vote of the House Sept. 1.

PL 86-777 -- Signed into law Sept. 13.

Congress in 1960 passed a helium conservation program (HR 10548 -- PL 86-777) to provide for the production, distribution and storage of the gas to meet essential Government requirements. The program had been requested by the Administration.

About 90 percent of the total amount of helium consumed is used by the Government, primarily for defense purposes. Although current helium needs were being met, a great amount of the gas was wasted. A by-product of natural gas, helium was allowed to go to waste by natural gas producers at a daily rate of about 10 times the amount of helium consumed per day in the U.S. The Government owned the only helium producing plants.

The Helium Act Amendments of 1960 were designed to begin a program of helium conservation by encouraging private companies to construct helium plants or, if enough were not constructed by private industry, by authorizing the Government to build more plants, to be paid for through additional sales of helium. It was envisioned that under HR 10548 an additional 12 helium-extracting plants would be built over a period of 25 years, at an estimated cost of $225 million. The date the bill would become effective was delayed until March 1, 1961, to permit the new Administration to put the program into operation.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 10548:

Authorized the Secretary of Interior, for the purpose of conserving, producing, buying and selling helium, to:

- Acquire helium-bearing lands by purchase, lease, gift, exchange or eminent domain when necessary to the national interest or when other methods failed.
- Make contracts necessary to accomplish the purpose of the Act for periods up to 25 years.
- Construct or purchase facilities for the production, storage, transportation and sale of helium or helium-bearing gas.
- Encourage private industry to construct the facilities necessary for the conservation of helium and otherwise contribute to the program, and establish joint projects with federal, state and local agencies.

Authorized the Secretary of Interior to maintain and operate helium production and purification plants.

Ensured complete availability to the Government and general public of technological information and inventions developed with federal funds under the provisions of the Act.

Ensured that the owner of any background patent relating to helium would not be deprived of any rights under it because of subsequent research conducted under contract to the Federal Government.

Required all federal agencies to purchase all major helium requirements from the Interior Department to the extent that such supplies were available.

Emphasized that the Federal Power Commission retained its jurisdiction over natural gas containing helium, but not over helium itself; authorized the FPC to determine helium cost allocations on a volumetric basis when setting natural gas rates.

Placed all helium producers, regardless of contracts with the Federal Government, on an equal basis for determining rates.

Authorized the Secretary of Interior to dispose of certain helium-bearing lands and related property not necessary for Government use.

Prohibited helium producers holding Government contracts from selling surplus helium on the open market at prices lower than the lowest price paid by the Government.

Authorized the Secretary of the Interior, when the President determined it essential for national security or the general welfare, to license the sale of helium and regulate its transportation in interstate commerce, in order to prevent its sale or transportation for nonessential or wasteful uses.

Limited the duration of the licenses to five years, after which they could be renewed and permitted suspension of licenses during periods of national emergency.

Authorized the sale of helium for federal, medical, scientific and commercial uses at prices set by the Secretary of Interior.

Authorized the Secretary of Interior, for a period of 25 years, to borrow from the Treasury amounts needed for construction of helium plants, the exact sums to be determined in future appropriations bills.

Required that the amounts borrowed for construction be repaid with interest from the proceeds of the sale of helium to Government agencies and private groups.

Provided for the return to the Treasury of funds borrowed to establish a revolving fund for purchasing helium. The revolving fund was authorized by an earlier law; it was expected that the 1960 amendments would produce enough revenue from helium sales both to repay the original loans from the Treasury and to make the fund self-sufficient thereafter.

Made the Act effective March 1, 1961.

Background

The Federal Government was authorized under the Helium Act of 1937 to condemn helium-bearing lands in order to produce helium for defense purposes. Through 1960, the Government had built and was operating five helium-producing plants. Prior to the 1960 amendments, there had been proposals for legislation to have more helium plants built which would conserve helium for the future, preferably by private industry.

These proposals were based primarily on the Jan. 24, 1958 report of an inter-agency Helium Working Group under the chairmanship of former Under Secretary of the Interior Hatfield Chilson.

The group reported that all known sources of helium had been discovered in the U.S. between 1905, when helium was first discovered in a natural gas well in Dexter, Kan., and 1943. No significant discoveries had been made since 1943, the report said. The group also said that 99 percent of all known helium-bearing natural gas was in four fields (the Hugoton field in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas; the Texas Panhandle; the Keyes field in Oklahoma; and the Greenwood field in Kansas). The report said that the gas companies which drew natural gas from these fields made no effort to conserve the helium gas.

The Chilson committee recommended that a large-scale helium conservation program be started immediately and failure to do so "would be gross wastage of a very limited and unique natural resource" and might cause a slowdown in the progress of scientific, technical and military developments in the United States.

President Eisenhower approved the recommendations of the Chilson committee and asked for their enactment in 1959 and again in his 1960 Budget Message.

House

COMMITTEE -- Interior and Insular Affairs.

ACTION -- April 26 reported HR 10548 with amendments (H Rept 1552).

As reported the bill extended the scope of the Helium Act of 1937 and gave the Secretary of the Interior authority to acquire helium-bearing land, either through purchase or eminent domain, necessary to the purpose of the act. It also gave the Department authority to produce, store, transport and sell helium either by itself or through cooperative agreements with state, private or other federal agencies, with contracts for as long as 25 years. Under the bill the Secretary could sell land no longer necessary for the conservation of helium or other federal uses, reacquire private helium supplies in national emergencies, and license producers and issue regulations concerning the sale and transportation of helium in interstate commerce. Committee amendments were largely technical.

The report said HR 10548 would enable private industry to participate in the financing, construction and operation of "plants to produce helium for purchase and conservation by the Government. If, however, private industry should not indicate a willingness and capability to perform in a reasonable time," the Government would develop the program.

Floor Action

The House May 2 passed HR 10548, with the committee amendments, by voice vote. There was little opposition to the bill. Members emphasized the need to conserve helium for the future.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interior and Insular Affairs.

ACTION -- June 30 reported HR 10548 with amendments (S Rept 1814).

Committee amendments: prohibited helium producers holding Government contracts from "dumping" surplus helium on the open market at prices lower than the lowest price paid by the Government; ensured complete availability to the Government and the general public of technological information and inventions developed with federal funds under the provisions of the Act; limited the use of licenses to prevent the transportation or sale of helium for nonessential uses, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior; and emphasized that the Federal Power Commission retained its jurisdiction over natural gas containing helium, but not over helium itself.

The report said that current consumption of helium was 80 times the 1937 level, helium was essential to the Nation's missile and atomic energy programs and was becoming increasingly valuable as an industrial material. The continuing upward demand for helium, the report said, and the daily waste of helium in fuel gases at a rate about 10 times the daily rate of consumption would lead to inadequate amounts of helium to meet the Nation's needs by 1980-85.

Sen. John A. Carroll (D Colo.) in a July 7 minority report (S Rept 1814, part 2) recommended delaying further consideration of the proposal until the next session of Congress in order to conduct "full and adequate hearings" on certain aspects of the bill.

Carroll's principal objection to the bill was language which specified that helium income should not be considered by the FPC in determining rates for natural gas companies and did not permit the FPC to allocate the cost of extracting helium. Natural gas consumers stood to lose between $28 million and $50 million in benefits over a 20-year period if the FPC could not make cost allocations to helium in determining rates, the minority report said. Carroll in his report said the helium conservation program had his "wholehearted support," but he urged adoption of amendments to include cost allocations to helium in the determination of natural gas rates.

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 31, by voice vote, passed HR 10548 with amendments.

Before passage the Senate adopted an amendment which delayed the effective date of the Act until March 1, 1961. Carroll (D Colo.), who offered the amendment, urged the delay on grounds it was not in the "public interest" to have an outgoing Administration negotiate $225-million-worth of contracts with private industry when there could be no Congressional review of the contracts.

To meet Carroll's objection that the bill did not give the FPC authority to include cost allocations to helium in the determination of natural gas rates, the Senate by voice vote agreed to an amendment by Gordon Allott (R Colo.) which authorized the FPC to determine the cost allocations to helium on the basis of the volume of helium in the natural gas. Carroll said the amendment made the bill acceptable although he would have preferred to give the FPC authority to determine the cost allocations on the basis of the market value of the helium.

DEBATE -- Aug. 31 -- Gordon Allott (R Colo.) -- Helium is "vital and essential" to the Nation's defense, missile and atomic energy programs.

John A. Carroll (D Colo.) -- The "specific legislative intent" of the bill is not to exempt helium-bearing gas from FPC jurisdiction under the Natural Gas Act. "Much pressure (from the Administration) is being exerted for passage of the bill because of the large amount of helium... going to waste" which is urgently needed for the Titan, Atlas and other missiles.

Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) -- Although the bill gives the Interior Secretary power to condemn natural gas wells and pipelines, the power would be used "only in the event the industry failed to cooperate with a Government program."

Final Action

HR 10548 was cleared for the President Sept. 1 when the House agreed by voice vote to the Senate's amendments. The President Sept. 13 signed the bill into law and on Oct. 27 the Interior Department invited proposals from more than 100 companies and individuals expressing interest in extracting helium from natural gas for sale to the Federal Government.

TOBACCO SUPPORTS

HR 9664 — Reported by House Agriculture Committee Feb. 4, 1960 (H Rept 1242).
S 2845 — Reported by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee Feb. 8 (S Rept 1081).
HR 9664 — Passed by the House by voice vote Feb. 9.
● Passed by the Senate by voice vote Feb. 15.
PL 86-389 — Signed into law Feb. 20.

Congress in 1960 enacted legislation changing the definition of the parity concept used to compute tobacco price supports.

Under the previous support program -- in effect since 1950 -- supports for any year were fixed at 90 percent of parity, parity in that case being defined as the average of prices farmers received for tobacco over the previous 10-year period.

Because tobacco prices, along with the prices of most other commodities, had risen steadily in recent years, the Government and the tobacco industry found that price supports, which were intended to keep prices from dropping, actually were rising and served to push tobacco prices higher and higher. As a result of the rise in prices, the U.S. tobacco industry had lost markets, both at home and abroad.

To stabilize tobacco price supports, that is, to hold support levels down in good times and to keep them from dropping when the market was off, Congress in HR 9664 directed that parity after 1960 would be figured on the basis of the prices paid by farmers, including wages, interest and taxes, instead of on the basis of prices received by the farmers.

Under HR 9664, supports to be paid on the 1960 tobacco crop were fixed at the same cash level of supports as paid on the 1959 crop. For the 1961 and subsequent crops, the bill provided that supports would be adjusted upward or downward from the 1959 level in direct proportion to increases or drops in the average of prices paid by farmers for other goods and services over the three preceding calendar years.

The measure met little, if any, opposition in either Chamber and had the qualified endorsement of Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson. In a letter to the House Agriculture Committee, Benson Feb. 2 wrote that the bill "does not go as far as we would like," but "it is a step in the right direction."

Benson said that studies by the Department of Agriculture showed that the U.S. had lost markets at home and abroad because of the rising price of tobacco. U.S. tobacco exports had dropped, Benson said, at a time when world-wide tobacco consumption was increasing at an annual rate of 5 percent.

Of several reasons given by Benson for not opposing HR 9664, the major one was the fact that the bill ended the system under which supports were fixed at 90 percent of parity, using the average price received for tobacco over the previous 10-year period as a base.

According to the report of the House Agriculture Committee of Feb. 4 (H Rept 1242), HR 9664 was supported by the three major national farmers organizations, the American Farm Bureau Federation, National Grange and National Farmers Union, as well as by numerous organizations within the tobacco industry. The report said no witnesses appeared in opposition to the bill at hearings held Jan. 14 and 26, 1960. It also said there would be no additional cost to the Government resulting from the enactment of HR 9664.

BACKGROUND -- In 1959, President Eisenhower vetoed a tobacco bill which would have tied price supports to the system in effect prior to 1950. Under this system, supports were fixed at 90 percent of parity, parity being the average of prices received for tobacco over the fixed 10-year period, 1919-29. Even though this system was expected to provide supports somewhat lower than under the 1950 system, the President said they "would still be too high" to regain lost markets. (1959 Almanac p. 242)

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 9664:

Fixed price supports for the 1960 tobacco crop at the cash level of supports paid on the 1959 crop.

Provided that support levels for the 1961 and subsequent crops would be determined by multiplying the 1959 support level by the ratio of (a) the average of prices paid by farmers, including wage rates, interest and taxes, for the three preceding calendar years to (b) the average prices paid by farmers for calendar year 1959.

BOND INTEREST RATES

HR 10590 — Reported Feb. 29, 1960 by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 1297).

President Eisenhower was no more successful in 1960 than in 1959 in getting Congress to remove the statutory ceiling of 4.25 percent on Government bond interest rates. Although the House Ways and Means Committee reported a compromise measure acceptable to the Treasury, the bill was held at the Speaker's desk where it died with adjournment. Two factors were responsible for its death: the President's request symbolized, for most Democrats, the Republican Administration's "high-interest, tight-money policy" later scored by the Democratic 1960 platform; and the Administration's justification for the request rapidly lost political force as market interest rates began a steady decline in the wake of slackened economic activity throughout most of 1960.

Background

The President first requested repeal of the bond interest rate ceiling in a special message to Congress June 8, 1959, at a time when market rates were rising and some long-term Treasury issues outstanding were selling at a heavy discount. The "artificial ceiling" dating from 1918, he said, "makes it virtually impossible" to sell new issues in the existing market, forcing the Treasury to rely on costly and inflationary short-term financing when refunding the public debt.

The President also asked the legislators to remove the 3.26 percent interest ceiling on Series E and H savings bonds. Instead Congress authorized the President, upon his finding that it was in the national interest to do so, to raise the rate to no more than 4.25 percent, the same ceiling in force for marketable bonds of more than five years' maturity. But Congress refused to comply with the first and more important of the two requests. (1959 Almanac p. 273)

The President Jan. 12, 1960 sent Congress another special message, repeating his original request for removal of "this archaic restriction on flexible debt management". Describing the move as "imperative", he blamed Congress' refusal to act in 1959 for "a much more rapid increase in short-term debt than would otherwise have occurred." (For text of message, see p. 634)

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- Feb. 23 voted 18-7 to report a compromise bill (HR 10590) giving the Treasury limited authority to exceed the 4.25 percent ceiling. Earlier, following a series of closed-door sessions with Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson, the Committee had rejected, 11-14, the Administration's own proposal for outright repeal of the ceiling. Voting for repeal, along with the Committee's 10 Republicans, was Rep. A. Sydney Herlong Jr. (D Fla.).

HR 10590 won approval with the votes of Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) and seven other Democrats, along with those of the 10 Republicans. Democrats who opposed the bill were Aime J. Forand (R.I.), Hale Boggs (La.), Frank M. Karsten (Mo.), Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (Mich.), James B. Frazier Jr. (Tenn.), William J. Green Jr. (Pa.), and Lee Metcalf (Mont.).

In dissenting views accompanying the Committee's report (H Rept 1297) filed Feb. 29, Machrowicz, Green and Metcalf said that HR 10590 "is not a compromise bill," since it gave the Administration "all of the authority it can use to continue its 'tight money' policy." Republicans, in a separate statement, said they supported the bill "reluctantly," since "it fails to provide a permanent solution to the problem."

PROVISIONS -- As reported, HR 10590:

Authorized the Treasury to refund outstanding bonds in advance of their maturity by offering new bonds at par, with coupon rates up to 4.25 percent, in exchange for unmatured bonds selling below par in the market. (For example, to match the 4.5 percent yield on a 2.5 percent bond selling for $96.22 and having two years to run to maturity, the Treasury could offer in exchange a $100 bond with nine years to maturity and bearing a coupon rate of 4 percent, which would also yield 4.5 percent in view of the discount on the exchanged bond.)

Authorized the Treasury, upon a finding by the President that it was needed in the national interest, to issue bonds at coupon rates of more than 4.25 percent in an amount not to exceed 2 percent of the public debt each year -- a fraction amounting to almost $6 billion.

Exempted from the 4.25 percent ceiling any special issues of non-marketable bonds sold to Government trust funds, which collectively hold more than $50 billion worth of Treasury obligations.

Removed the 4.25 percent limitation placed on Series E and H savings bond interest rates by the 1959 law, but continued the requirement that the President find it to be in the national interest before raising the rates above 3.26 percent.

Secretary Anderson, although still favoring repeal of the interest ceiling, said HR 10590 would "permit the Treasury, to a substantial extent, in the period immediately ahead to achieve the debt lengthening which is so highly important in the national interest." But the bill was never taken to the floor, reportedly because Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) was convinced that it would split the Democratic party.

At the same time, falling interest rates deprived Anderson of his most urgent argument. Yields on Treasury bonds, which had risen from 3.2 percent in June 1958 to 4.37 percent in January 1960, sagged thereafter, reaching 3.8 percent shortly before adjournment Sept. 1. The yield on three-month Treasury bills dropped from a high of 4.57 percent at the end of 1959 to less than 2.3 percent in August. Keeping step with the market, the Federal Reserve discount rate was cut from 4 to 3.5 percent in June, then to 3 percent in August. The President, addressing Congress as it reconvened on Aug. 8, again asked for repeal of the ceiling, but the issue had become moot. (For text, see p. 639)

Senate

Although the Senate took no formal action on the interest-rate issue in 1960, the outspoken opposition expressed by several Democrats apparently contributed to Rayburn's decision to withhold HR 10590. At a party conference Feb. 15, attended by about 30 of the Senate's 65 Democrats, Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, won substantial support for his argument that the interest-rate ceiling should not be relaxed until the Administration undertook certain debt management reforms.

These reforms were spelled out earlier in the Joint Committee's Jan. 26 report (S Rept 1043) on its study of jobs, growth, and prices. They included: sale of long-term Treasury issues at auction, to increase competition in the Government bond market; sale of long-term issues when interest rates are low; and issuance of more bonds with call privileges permitting the Treasury to refinance at lower interest rates. The Joint Committee's Republican minority said the proposed reforms merited consideration, but accused the Democrats of "political blackmail" by opposing repeal of the interest-rate ceiling pending changes in Administration policy.

Sen. Douglas maintained his pressure at a Feb. 16 session of the Joint Committee, when he asked Secretary Anderson to send Congress a "letter of intent" that he would "reform" Treasury policies along the proposed lines. Anderson declined, on grounds that he should not let the bond market know his intentions in advance. He also took issue with the proposal that he try to refinance the debt during low-interest rate periods, arguing that this would mean waiting for a recession.

Anderson did agree, however, to consider Douglas' two other proposals, involving the sale of longer-term securities at auction and the issuance of callable bonds. (Only three-month bills are normally sold at auction, other securities being offered at fixed prices. The Treasury last issued callable bonds in 1953.)

Douglas told the Senate March 21 that the average yield on the 26 outstanding issues of Treasury bonds had dropped below 4 percent, with the highest yield being 4.2 percent. Douglas then charged that "wealthy investors" had "made a killing" on shorter-term notes issued by the Treasury in recent months at 4.75 percent to 5 percent interest.

Sen. Prescott Bush (R Conn.) countered March 22 with the charge that Democrats "think they've got a hot political issue," but that "they are gambling" with the Nation's credit. He said interest rates had declined somewhat because "there has been a slight recession in business," but he predicted that rates would rise again as the economy picked up steam. He asked Democrats "to drop this silly issue" and give the Treasury a free hand in managing the public debt by removing the ceiling.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

HR 5 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 1282) Feb. 19, 1960.

- Passed, amended, by the House May 18, by a 196-192 roll-call vote. (See p. 446)
- Rejected by Senate Finance Committee Aug. 31.

Congress in 1960 failed to enact a controversial bill (HR 5) designed to encourage greater U.S. private investment in underdeveloped countries. As passed by a narrow margin in the House, the bill would have permitted companies doing most of their business in less developed countries to defer payment of the U.S. corporation income tax on their earnings until such time as the funds were returned to the United States.

Although twice amended to meet Treasury Department objections, HR 5 never won the whole-hearted support of the Eisenhower Administration. The measure also encountered opposition from import-conscious Members who feared that it would encourage U.S. manufacturers to "export jobs" by moving their operations to low-wage countries abroad. Both of these factors contributed to the bill's demise.

Background

HR 5 was the outgrowth of hearings in December 1958 by the Foreign Trade Policy Subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee. Chaired by Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.), the hearings produced general agreement on the desirability of increasing private investment in underdeveloped areas. Business spokesmen recommended enactment of various tax incentives, including tax deferral on foreign earnings until repatriated, a U.S. tax credit for taxes forgiven as well as paid to another country, and worldwide application of the preferential tax rate enjoyed by companies qualifying as Western Hemisphere trade corporations.

Administration spokesmen, however, were divided on the matter. Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon and Assistant Secretary of Commerce Henry Kearns gave support in principle to the use of tax incentives to stimulate private investment. But the Treasury witness, Dan Throop Smith, argued that "inherently unattractive (investment) situations cannot be made attractive by artificial stimulants." The Treasury, moreover, was opposed to any tax revisions that would entail a large loss of revenue.

Most of the business community recommendations were nevertheless incorporated in HR 5, which Boggs introduced Jan. 7, 1959. Major provisions of the bill (which made no distinction between underdeveloped and other foreign countries) would have:

Permitted "foreign business corporations' -- domestic companies deriving at least 90 percent of their gross income abroad -- to defer payment of the 52 percent corporation income tax on their "reinvested foreign business income" until distributed to stockholders.

Permitted companies qualifying as "international trade corporations" to make the same deduction in computing taxable income as permitted to Western Hemisphere trade corporations since 1942 -- a preference amounting to a 14-percentage-point reduction in the corporate tax rate, from 52 percent to 38 percent.

Revised rules for crediting income taxes paid to other countries to provide, in effect, that any firm's total foreign and U.S. tax liability would not exceed the tax due on an equal amount of domestic income.

Extended the credit allowed for income taxes paid to other countries to taxes waived by those countries as an inducement to invest, for up to 10 years.

Excluded from taxable income any insurance proceeds from the involuntary conversion of property owned by a foreign subsidiary of an American firm, when such proceeds were reinvested in the subsidiary.

Made the transfer of foreign business property nontaxable without (as required by existing law) securing an advance ruling that the transfer was not for the purpose of tax avoidance.

DEVELOPMENTS IN 1959

Additional support for tax and other incentives to private investment abroad was voiced in two reports submitted to the Administration early in 1959. That of the Committee on World Trade Practices, named by President Eisenhower in 1958 and headed by Harold Boeschenstein, was released March 2, 1959. The second, a special report to the Department of State entitled "Expanding Private Investment for Free World Economic Growth" and prepared by Ralph I. Straus, was released April 1, 1959.

Both reports agreed that special incentives were needed and appropriate to offset unfavorable investment conditions in many underdeveloped areas. Both recommended tax deferral for companies qualifying as "foreign business corporations," along the lines of HR 5. They also recommended the rapid negotiation of "tax sparing" treaties and revision of rules concerning investment losses in foreign businesses.

Armed with these recommendations, the State and Commerce Departments took their case to the White House, in the face of continuing Treasury opposition to HR 5. The upshot was that Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson, in a letter May 6, 1959 to Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) of the Ways and Means Committee, announced that he would support a single provision of HR 5 -- tax deferral for foreign business corporations -- so long as it was applied solely to "investments in one or more of the less developed areas of the free world." He also endorsed two of the recommendations of the Straus and Boeschenstein reports:

- Ordinary loss treatment for losses on stock of foreign business corporations "by original investors."
- Recognition of the principle of "tax sparing" by treaty or negotiated agreement with other countries.

The tax deferral provision of HR 5, Anderson said, would cost the Treasury from $300 million to $500 million a year and would result in "substantial tax benefits" to existing U.S. investment in industrialized countries. Restricting the deferral provision to less developed countries, Anderson said, would have "a relatively small impact" on revenues.

Anderson rejected the provision in HR 5 for worldwide application of the 14 percent tax reduction on grounds that it would cost $200 million and "create an incentive to repatriate foreign earnings rather than reinvest them abroad." He also opposed the proposed change in treatment of foreign tax credits because the revenue loss would be "substantial" and "most of this tax relief would go to a few large corporations."

Foreign Investments

Total U.S. investments abroad increased by almost 500 percent between 1939 and 1959; private investments, in the same period, quadrupled. Amounts shown are in billions of dollars.

	1939	1950	1959
Total U.S. investments	$11.4	$32.8	$64.8
A. Private investments	11.4	19.0	44.8
1. Long term	10.8	17.5	41.2
a. Direct	7.0	11.8	29.7
b. Other	3.8	5.7	11.4
2. Short term	0.6	1.5	3.6
B. U.S. Government credits and claims	---	13.8	20.0

Although direct private investment in foreign subsidiaries and branches almost tripled between 1950 and 1959, from $11.8 to $29.7 billion, Canada, Latin America, and Western Europe continued to account for more than 80 percent of the total. The table shows the amount (in millions) and percentage of total direct private investment, by major area, for 1950 and 1959.

	End of 1950		End of 1959
	Amount	%	Amount	%
Canada	$ 3,579	30.3	$10,171	34.2
Latin America	4,576	38.9	8,990	30.2
Europe	1,733	14.7	5,300	17.8
Africa	287	2.4	843	2.8
Asia	1,001	8.5	2,236	7.5
Oceania	256	2.2	876	3.0
International	356	3.0	1,320	4.5
Total	$11,788	100.0	$29,735	100.0

Petroleum and manufacturing enterprises together accounted for more than two-thirds of total direct private investment abroad at the end of 1959. The table shows amounts (in billions) invested in (1) mining and smelting, (2) petroleum, (3) manufacturing, (4) public utilities, (5) trade, and (6) all other activities.

	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)
Canada	$1.09	$2.47	$4.56	$0.64	$0.56	$0.86
L. America	1.42	3.31	1.43	1.15	0.69	1.00
Europe	0.05	1.45	2.93	0.04	0.58	0.25
Africa	0.25	0.34	0.12	----	0.05	0.08
Asia	0.02	1.66	0.25	0.09	0.11	0.10
Oceania	0.03	0.36	0.41	----	0.05	0.03
Other	----	0.84	----	0.48	----	----
Total	$2.86	$10.42	$9.69	$2.41	$2.04	$2.31

Two months later, the full Ways and Means Committee held hearings, July 7-9, on HR 5, at which spokesmen for the State, Commerce, and Treasury Departments endorsed Anderson's view that tax deferral should be restricted to earnings in underdeveloped areas, since these were the countries most in need of additional private investment. (For the size and location of U.S. foreign investments, see box.)

Ralph I. Straus testified against such a limitation, and suggested instead that taxes be deferred on earnings in other industrialized countries so long as these funds were reinvested in the poorer nations. Spokesmen for the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. and the National Assn. of Manufacturers supported HR 5 as introduced by Rep. Boggs. On Aug. 19, the Committee agreed to several amendments to the bill, but took no further action before Congress adjourned Sept. 15, 1959.

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- Feb. 19, 1960 reported a substantially amended version of HR 5 (H Rept 1282). Dropped from the original bill were provisions extending the Western Hemisphere 14-point reduction worldwide, revising the rules on foreign tax credits and extending such credits to taxes waived or forgiven, and giving special treatment to insurance proceeds from the involuntary conversion of foreign property. (The foreign tax credit provision was incorporated in another bill, HR 10087, and considered separately. See story p. 339)

All that was left of the original measure were provisions for tax deferral for firms qualifying as foreign business corporations, and for the nontaxable transfer of foreign business property. The Committee did not, however, heed the Administration's request, repeated in the President's Budget Message of Jan. 18, that tax deferral be limited to earnings in underdeveloped areas. But it did anticipate opposition from import-conscious Members by including a provision to make any firm receiving more than 10 percent of its income from the sale of products exported to the U.S. ineligible for tax deferral.

Deferral of the U.S. corporation income tax, the report said, "is already available to the bulk of American investments abroad which are carried on through foreign corporations. Thus, the principal purpose of this bill is merely to bring the tax treatment for foreign operations carried on through U.S. corporations more nearly in accord with that applicable where foreign subsidiaries are used." The bill would stimulate investments in less developed countries, the Committee said, because "for the most part these are the countries where the tax rates are lower than those in the United States, and it is only to the extent that the taxes on the same income are lower in the foreign countries that the deferral of U.S. tax results in any benefit." Cost of the bill in terms of lost revenue was estimated at $85 million a year.

In separate views, the Committee's 10 Republican members called HR 5 as reported "inadequate", saying it did not "cure the problem of having to resort to devious devices to achieve tax deferment." They questioned in particular a highly technical "gross-up" provision added by the Committee, and called for public hearings on the matter. Rep. Lee Metcalf (D Mont.) also cited his objections to the bill, saying it was "limited to extending a few more tax benefits to foreign investment income and leaving the problems alone."

Floor Action

The House March 8 began debate on HR 5, but the bill encountered so much opposition that Democratic leaders next day postponed further consideration indefinitely. Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) announced that the Ways and Means Committee would amend the bill further, to make it more acceptable to the House. Most of the criticism voiced by Members of both parties during the debate reflected fear that the measure might injure U.S. industry and labor, despite the Committee's amendment placing a 10-percent limit on earnings from exports to the United States.

Members also objected to the fact that HR 5 was brought to the floor under a closed rule (H Res 468) barring all but Committee amendments. Before adoption of the rule, Rep. Keith Thomson (R Wyo.) proposed a substitute that would have permitted consideration, as an amendment to HR 5, of a bill (HR 4918) to amend the Trade Agreements Act. The bill, sponsored by Rep. James C. Davis (D Ga.), was designed to make Tariff Commission recommendations in escape-clause cases binding upon the President. Thomson was barred from offering the substitute rule, however, when the House, by a 236-127 roll-call vote, agreed to "order the previous question," thus bringing H Res 468 to an immediate vote. The closed rule was then adopted by voice vote. (For voting, see chart p. 428)

After further consideration, the Ways and Means Committee April 21 approved two additional amendments to HR 5 as reported. The first of these limited the benefits of tax deferral to earnings in "less developed" countries, as recommended by the Administration. This amendment also eliminated the disputed "gross-up" provision originally added by the Committee. The second amendment barred tax deferral to firms found to be operating abroad under substandard labor conditions.

Brought to the floor again May 18, HR 5 encountered its first test when Rep. H.R. Gross (R Iowa) moved to strike the bill's enacting clause. The motion was agreed to, first by a standing vote of 101-93, then by a teller vote of 107-101. But on a roll-call vote demanded by Rep. Boggs, the motion was rejected, 160-232. The House then agreed to the Committee's April 21 amendments and rejected a motion to recommit the amended bill, offered by Rep. Noah M. Mason (R Ill.), in both instances by voice vote, before passing HR 5 by a 196-192 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 446)

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, HR 5:

Authorized U.S. firms to be taxed as "foreign business corporations," provided they derived at least 90 percent of their gross income from activities in less developed countries and not more than 10 percent of such income from the sale of goods "for ultimate use, consumption, or disposition in the United States."

Authorized FBCs to defer payment of the U.S. corporation income tax on their "reinvested foreign business income," until such time as these earnings were paid to stockholders or otherwise distributed.

Authorized the President to designate countries, including U.S. possessions, qualifying as "less developed," but specifically excluded these industrialized countries: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Monaco, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom and Northern Ireland, and members of the Sino-Soviet bloc.

Specified that tax deferral would be denied to FBCs if the Secretary of Labor found them to be operating under labor conditions judged to be "substandard" in the countries concerned.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

ACTION -- Aug. 31, by an undisclosed vote, agreed to reject HR 5, following receipts of conflicting reports on the bill from the Administration. The State Department June 10 approved the bill, but recommended deletion of the labor standards clause. The Treasury June 13 said it was withholding support of the bill pending further study. Hearings June 13 and Aug. 23 failed to produce unqualified Administration endorsement for the measure, which died with adjournment.

SALINE WATER

S 3557 -- Reported by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 1668) June 23, 1960.

● Passed by the Senate by voice vote June 24.

A bill (S 3557) to expand the existing saline water conversion program and extend it through 1969 was passed by the Senate in 1960, but not the House.

The proposal was designed to speed up an experimental saline water research program initiated by Congress in 1952 and subsequently amended, most recently in 1958. The 1958 amendments authorized the construction of five pilot conversion plants and a $10 million appropriation for their construction. (1958 Almanac p. 330)

Construction on the first saline water conversion plant was begun Aug. 30 at Freeport, Texas. Three others were to be located at San Diego, Calif., Webster, S.D., and Roswell, N.M. The fifth plant was to be located on the East Coast.

During debate, Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), author of the bill, said that unless Congress acted immediately, within 15 or 20 years many areas of the United States would face "crucial water shortages" which would not necessarily be limited to traditionally arid sections and which could affect the Nation's large metropolitan and urban areas.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 3557:

Instructed the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a research program to develop a low-cost investment and operations saline water program; to convert pilot operations to large-scale operations; and to determine the markets for saline water and conversion plant equipment.

Instructed him to cooperate with federal, state and local agencies regarding the development of saline water conversion operations.

Authorized federal loans to state or local governments or authorized agencies to finance the construction of saline water conversion plants for municipal, industrial, domestic or other beneficial consumptive uses, subject to veto by Congress.

Limited the amount of each loan to 90 percent of the estimated cost of the project, or $1 million, whichever was smaller, and the length of the loan to 40 years, effective three months after the plant commenced operation, and set an interest rate corresponding to the average paid on outstanding government securities of 15-year maturity or longer.

Authorized a $20 million appropriation.

Provided that processes developed under the program with federal funds should be made available to the public except where such action would jeopardize the national security.

FOREIGN TAX CREDITS

HR 10087 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 1358) March 8, 1960.
- Passed by the House by voice vote April 6.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 1393) May 19.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by voice vote June 1. (For roll call on recommittal, see p. 497)
- Conference report (H Rept 2199) agreed to by voice votes of Senate and House Aug. 30.

PL 86-780 -- Signed into law Sept. 14.

Congress in 1960 liberalized provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 respecting the computation of foreign tax credits, at an estimated annual loss to the Treasury of $20 million in revenue. As enacted, HR 10087 permitted U.S. firms with foreign income to take credit, in computing their U.S. tax liability, for income taxes paid to other countries, either on a per-country basis or an over-all basis. Only the per-country formula had been permitted previously. The Treasury did not oppose the change, which had the effect of maximizing foreign tax credits for American firms with extensive operations abroad.

Amendments added by the Senate and accepted by the House strengthened the Treasury's hand in obtaining information concerning the foreign income of American investors, and, in an unrelated matter, authorized certain employees of an Atomic Energy Commission contractor to file claims for tax refunds on reimbursed moving expenses.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 10087:

Permitted U.S. business firms with foreign investments to compute their foreign tax credits on the basis of a per-country limitation or an over-all limitation.

Provided that, after a choice between the two limitations was made, the taxpayer could change from one to the other only with the consent of the Treasury.

Provided that unused foreign tax credits from a per-country limitation year or from an over-all limitation year could be carried over and used only in another year in which the same limitation was applied.

Provided that, in a consolidated tax return by an affiliated group of corporations, any unused tax credits of a Western Hemisphere trade corporation which is a regulated public utility and a member of the affiliated group could be used to offset the U.S. tax on the income of any other member of the group provided the income was earned in the same country or countries in which the Western Hemisphere corporation operated and 80 percent of it was derived from regulated public utilities.

Provided the following penalty for a domestic corporation in control of a foreign corporation or subsidiary for failing to furnish information required by the Treasury Department: a 10 percent reduction in the foreign tax credit claimed by a foreign corporation or subsidiary for the first 90 days in which the controlling domestic corporation failed to furnish the required information, plus an additional reduction of 5 percent for each three-month period thereafter.

Required reports on newly organized foreign corporations by every U.S. citizen or resident who is an oficer or director of the corporation and by every U.S. shareholder owning at least 5 percent of its outstanding stock, within 60 days of the organization of the company.

Provided that reimbursed moving expenses incurred after 1949 and before Oct. 1, 1955 by certain employees of nonprofit corporations formed by the Atomic Energy Commission for scientific research would not be treated as gross income for tax purposes and gave such employees six months from the enactment of the bill to claim tax refunds or credits.

Background

Under the original federal income tax law of 1913, taxpayers with foreign income could deduct income taxes paid to other countries in computing their taxable income, in the same manner that taxes paid to state and local governments could be deducted. But in 1918, the law was changed to allow taxes paid abroad on foreign income as credits against the U.S. tax rather than deductions from gross income. Assuming taxable income of $1 million and identical U.S. and foreign tax rates of 10 percent, the new method cut the U.S. tax liability from $90,000 ($1 million less foreign tax of $100,000, times 10 percent) to zero ($1 million times 10 percent, less foreign tax of $100,000).

To prevent the foreign tax from offsetting U.S. tax on domestic income in addition to foreign income, the law prior to 1954 imposed both a per-country and over-all limitation, restricting total foreign tax credits to the same proportion of a taxpayer's tentative U.S. tax which his taxable income from all foreign sources was of his total taxable income. But in 1954 the over-all limitation was repealed, leaving only the per-country limitation, on grounds that it "discourages a company operating profitably in one foreign country from going into another country where it may expect to operate at a loss for a few years." (1954 Almanac p. 476)

The per-country limitation, however, prevented companies operating in several countries from obtaining maximum benefit from their foreign tax credits, because of varying tax rates. Thus a taxpayer earning $1 million in Country A with a tax rate of 42 percent would receive full credit for $420,000 against the U.S. tax, at 52 percent, of $520,000, leaving a U.S. tax of $100,000. But on another $1 million earned in Country B with a tax rate of 62 percent, the taxpayer could claim no more than $520,000 as a credit, that being the maximum U.S. tax, although he had paid $620,000 in foreign tax. Hence, on total foreign income of $2 million, he would have paid $1,040,000 in foreign tax -- equal to the U.S. rate of 52 percent -- but could take credit for only $940,000 against the U.S. tax, leaving a U.S. tax liability of $100,000.

To permit such companies to take full credit for foreign taxes, Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) proposed in 1959 that taxpayers be permitted to compute their credits either on a per-country or an over-all basis. The latter method would permit the averaging of high and low tax rates in different countries, and in the example cited, give the taxpayer full credit for $1,040,000 paid in foreign taxes, thus relieving him of any U.S. tax on his foreign income of $2 million.

Boggs included the option of choosing the per country or over-all limitation as one provision of his proposed Foreign Investment Incentive Act (HR 5). (See story p.336) Before approving an amended version of HR 5 on Feb. 9, 1960, the House Ways and Means Committee deleted the entire foreign tax credit provision, which was then introduced as a separate bill, HR 10087, by another Committee member, Rep. Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (D Mich.).

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- March 8 reported HR 10087 (H Rept 1358) unanimously. The bill was justified on grounds that it was "appropriate" to allow those firms that "think of their foreign business as a single operation" to lump their foreign tax credits together. Moreover, the report said, making the over-all limitation generally available for foreign operations only provides treatment which is already available in the case of the so-called foreign base corporation, or foreign subsidiary serving as a holding company for its subsidiaries carrying on active business enterprises."

FLOOR ACTION -- The House April 6 passed HR 10087 by voice vote under suspension of the rules. Unopposed, the bill was passed as reported.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

ACTION -- May 19 reported HR 10087 (S Rept 1393) with amendments. The Committee deleted a provision permitting taxpayers to switch from one formula to the other every five years, providing instead that after the initial election no change could be made without Treasury consent. The Committee also tightened provisions covering carryback and carryforward of foreign tax credits, and added a provision limiting use of the over-all limitation in the case of Western Hemisphere trade corporations. Finally, the Committee added an unrelated provision designed to permit certain employees of the Sandia Corp., an Atomic Energy Commission contractor, to file claims for tax refunds on reimbursed moving expenses. The provision had been inserted by the Senate in the Technical Amendments Act of 1958, but deleted in conference.

In an outspoken dissent filed with the report, Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) said "the foreign tax credit, considered as a tax package, constitutes one of the glaring loopholes in our tax laws (and) should be abolished." Congress should revive the pre-1918 rule, he said, making foreign taxes deductible from gross income just as were state and local taxes. HR 10087 had been improved by the Committee, Gore said, but "it still represents an effort to enlarge an existing loophole in the tax laws without justification" and would amount to a gift of $20 million or more to a few corporations "which have shown neither need nor deserts to such largess."

Floor Action

The Senate June 1 passed HR 10087, with amendments, by voice vote, after two days of debate dominated by criticism of the foreign tax credit by Gore and Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.). Before passage, the Senate rejected three amendments offered by Gore, including one to abolish the foreign tax credit. Also rejected, by a 24-58 roll-call vote, was Gore's motion to recommit the bill to committee. (For voting, see chart p. 497)

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

May 31 -- Gore -- Add sections requiring U.S. corporations controlling foreign subsidiaries to furnish annual information reports to the Treasury Department and requiring reports on the organization of foreign corporations by every U.S. citizen or resident who was an officer or director of the corporation and by every U.S. shareholder owning at least 5 percent of its outstanding stock, within 60 days of the organizing of the company. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 1 -- Gore -- Substitute for the text of HR 10087 an amendment repealing the section of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 that authorizes foreign tax credits. Voice.

Gore -- Repeal the section of the Internal Revenue Code providing preferential tax treatment for Western Hemisphere trade corporations. Voice.

Gore -- Amend the Internal Revenue Code to prohibit foreign subsidiaries of U.S. corporations from claiming both tax credits and tax deductions for the same foreign taxes. Voice.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees Aug. 29 reported a compromise version of HR 10087 (H Rept 2199). The Senate's amendments respecting the election of per-year or over-all limitation and the carryover of unused tax credits were retained, while those concerning Western Hemisphere trade corporations and information requirements were modified in part.

ACTION -- The Senate and House Aug. 30 agreed to the conference report, by voice votes and without debate, sending HR 10087 to the President, who signed it Sept. 14.

"HISS ACT" AMENDMENT

HR 4601 -- Reported March 26, 1959 by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee (H Rept 258)

S 91 -- Reported March 24, 1959 by Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee (S Rept 144).

HR 4601 -- Passed by voice vote of House April 14, 1959.

S 91 -- Recommitted by voice vote of Senate May 12, 1960.

HR 4601 -- Reported by Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee June 10 (S Rept 1544).

A House-passed bill (HR 4601) to restore pension rights to some of the federal workers disqualified under the "Hiss Act" of 1954 died in the Senate in 1960.

The bill as passed by the House and sent to the Senate floor revised portions of the 1954 Act so that pension rights were denied only to workers involved in various acts or crimes concerning national security, and not, as under the 1954 law, to various other groups of Government employees whose offenses in no way involved national security.

The measure, passed by the House in 1959, reached the Senate floor May 12, 1960, where it was considered along with an identical bill (S 91) that had been reported by the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee. Opponents, who argued that persons committing any kind of serious crime against the Government, not just national security crimes, should lose federal pension rights, succeeded in having S 91 recommitted and HR 4601 referred to committee.

Despite the fact that the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee again endorsed the measure and reported HR 4601 June 10 without change, noting that the Civil Service Commission, Defense Department, Post Office Department, Comptroller General and Bureau of the Budget had re-endorsed the bill, HR 4601 did not pass the Senate and died with the end of the 86th Congress.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, HR 4601:

Amended Public Law 769, 83rd Congress, the so-called "Hiss Act," so that pension or retirement rights would be denied only to those federal employees who were convicted of crimes involving national security or who committed specified offenses involving national security, including refusal to testify in court or before Congress on security or loyalty matters.

Restored annuity rights to Government employees who had been deprived of such rights under the law because of convictions or offenses entirely unrelated to national security.

Background

The "Hiss Act" removed the pension rights of any Government worker who had been convicted of a crime or who had pleaded protection of the Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination. The act also applied to Communist party members and those who were known to have supported the party. The purpose of the 1954 act was to prevent Alger Hiss, convicted in 1950 of perjury on charges of denying he passed secret documents to the Communists, from receiving the federal pension to which he otherwise would have been entitled upon reaching age 62.

In 1959, the House April 14, by voice vote, passed HR 4601 (H Rept 258). An identical Senate bill (S 91) was reported March 24, 1959 by the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

Senate

The Senate May 12, 1960 by voice vote adopted a motion offered by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) to refer both S 91 and HR 4601 back to the Committee. Debate had already started on the House bill when the Williams motion was adopted.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), floor manager of the legislation, May 12 said the 1954 law, which was enacted "at the height of the witch-hunt atmosphere of that year, has had some unintended and unjust effects". Clark said 189 persons had been denied federal retirement benefits, worth more than $3 million, and of these, only 11 were charged or convicted of crimes connected with national security.

Williams said "everyone of these individuals who is convicted of a crime...whatever it may be, gets back all of his contributions to the civil service retirement fund.... All we said when we passed the 1954 law was that we would not put crooks on the retirement rolls of the taxpayers after they had violated their official trust."

COMMITTEE ACTS -- The Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee May 26 voted unanimously to report HR 4601 and did so June 10 (S Rept 1544).

OCEANOGRAPHY RESEARCH

S 2692 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 1525) June 7, 1960.

- Passed by the Senate, by voice vote, June 23.

A Senate-passed bill (S 2692) to establish a 10-year program of oceanographic research and surveys died in 1960 with House failure to act on the measure.

Designed for the participation of 19 federal agencies and departments, the bill would have provided specific authorizations of $534,382,485 over 10 years for the program, of which $170,840,000 would have been authorized for a new Division of Marine Sciences to be established by the National Science Foundation. The division would have been responsible for coordinating the program.

S 2692 also would have authorized $60,555,000 for the Atomic Energy Commission for the control and monitoring of radioactive waste disposal, and for various general studies of radioactivity in the oceans. Provisions also were included for an authorization for the Navy to build, during the decade, 24 research and survey ships ranging in size from 300 to 3,000 tons; the new NSF division was authorized $9,950,000 for 10 years to build similar ships. The Interior Department was authorized $100,000,000 over the 10 years to study water resources.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 2692, the Marine Sciences and Research Act, authorized the following appropriations over a 10-year period:

NSF Marine Sciences Division	$170,840,000
Interior Department	131,000,000
Navy	113,300,000
Atomic Energy Commission	60,555,000
Commerce Department	33,687,485
Army	20,000,000
Health, Education and Welfare Department	5,000,000
TOTAL	$534,382,485

The bill also:

Established a Division of Marine Sciences in the National Science Foundation, directed to foster the interchange of scientific information among the program's participants in the Federal Government, and internationally; recommend and give grants and other forms of assistance necessary to the program; and construct and operate ships, laboratories, and other equipment.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HEARINGS -- April 20, 21, 22 on S 2692.

ACTION -- June 7 reported S 2692 (S Rept 1525). The Committee said the United States needs to "know the oceans" in the interests of national defense.

The bill was opposed by the Budget Bureau but was supported by other agencies.

FLOOR ACTION -- The Senate June 23 passed S 2692 by voice vote, without opposition. Prior to passage, the Senate accepted by voice vote an amendment by Sen. John Marshall Butler (R Md.) specifying that the construction of all ships and craft authorized in the bill should be done in U.S. commercial shipyards.

COLOR ADDITIVES

S 2197 — Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 795) Aug. 21, 1959.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by voice vote Aug. 24.

HR 7624 — Reported by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 1761) June 7, 1960.

S 2197 — Passed, amended, by voice vote of the House June 25.
- Senate agreed to House amendments by voice vote June 30.

PL 86-618 — Signed into law July 12.

The Color Additive Amendments of 1960 (S 2197 -- PL 86-618) regulated the use of color additives in foods, drugs and cosmetics. Like the Food Additives Amendment enacted in 1958 (PL 85-929), S 2197 placed the responsibility for demonstrating the safety of color additives on the industries involved. It also included the highly controversial anti-cancer clause, sponsored by Rep. James J. Delaney (D N.Y.), which stipulated that no additive could be deemed safe if tests showed it was cancer-producing in man or animal.

Interest in both the bill and its anti-cancer clause was heightened following the November 1959 "cranberry scare," in which the "Delaney cancer clause" was invoked by the Food and Drug Administration and a public warning issued against contaminated cranberries. Subsequent action by the FDA to ban certain coal-tar colors used in lipstick added to the urgency of legislative action.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, S 2197:

Established uniform criteria for the use of all color additives, including coal-tar colors, in or on foods, drugs or cosmetics.

Provided for the official listing of color additives for use in foods, drugs or cosmetics for which they were determined to be safe, subject to any conditions including maximum tolerance limitations.

Provided that a color additive should be considered unsafe and not listed for any use that might result in ingestion if found to induce cancer when ingested by man or animal, or found to induce cancer in man or animal by other tests, not involving ingestion, which were considered appropriate for evaluation of additive safety; provided that a color additive should be deemed unsafe for any use not resulting in ingestion if, after tests or other relevant exposure of man or animal, it was found to induce cancer in man or animal.

Provided for comprehensive lists of colors for use in foods generally when there was a published finding of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare that they were generally recognized by qualified experts as safe.

Provided for certification of batches of listed colors and permitted the HEW Secretary to grant exemptions from certification when not necessary to protect the public health.

Made the bill's provisions effective upon enactment; provided a two-and one-half year transitional period, with provisional listing and certification of color additives, to the extent consistent with the public health, pending completion of scientific investigations by industry; made provisional listings subject to temporary tolerance limitations.

Provided that in any proceeding for issuance, repeal or amendment of a regulation, any person who would be adversely affected by a forthcoming order could request a public hearing or, if the matter concerned the anti-cancer clause, request referral of the proposal to an advisory committee of experts for a report and recommendations.

Stipulated that the term "color additive" did not apply to any pesticide chemical, soil or plant nutrient, or other agricultural chemical solely because of its effect in plant metabolism or enzymatic processes either before or after harvest.

Background

Two separate issues were involved in 1960: one, an attempt, which was unsuccessful, to loosen the restrictions on the use of food additives imposed by the Delaney clause; the second, an attempt, which was successful, to establish criteria and procedures for determing the safety of color additives.

FOOD ADDITIVES -- In 1958 Congress enacted the Food Additives Amendment (PL 85-929) to the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. This legislation, sought for 10 years, reversed the existing "innocent until proved guilty" rule whereby it was up to the Food and Drug Administration to prove that an additive was "unsafe" before its use could be barred. Henceforth, the makers and users of additives were required to establish their safety to FDA's satisfaction before their use could be sanctioned.

To provide for an orderly transition from the old to the new system, however, the law permitted what amounted to a grace period of 30 months for most additives. For those introduced after January 1, 1958, the deadline for compliance was set at March 6, 1959. But for the great bulk of additives in use prior to Jan. 1, 1958, the law allowed up to two additional years for compliance -- one year without question, and an additional year at the option of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. When the first deadline was reached March 6, 1960, few applications for clearance had been received and fewer granted, so Secretary Arthur S. Flemming proclaimed a blanket extension until March 6, 1961.

Complicating the additives picture was the "cancer clause" inserted in the 1958 law on the initiative of Delaney, who carried out the original investigation of additives during the 81st Congress. The clause provided that "no additive shall be deemed to be safe if it is found to induce cancer when ingested by man or animal, or if it is found, after tests which are appropriate for the evaluation of the safety of food additives, to induce cancer in man or animal."

It was this prohibition that led Secretary Flemming to announce Nov. 9, 1959 that FDA had found traces of a cancer-causing weed-killer in certain lots of cranberries, and to warn against buying any cranberries until proved free of contamination. Although relatively few berries were so contaminated, sales plummeted as a result of the "scare," and the Government agreed to indemnify cranberry growers for their losses, at an estimated cost of $10 million.

The furore raised by the cranberry incident and a subsequent case involving certain hormone-treated chickens led President Eisenhower to call for a scientific review of the situation. A panel of experts, headed by Dr. Detlev W. Bronk, reported May 9 that "a literal interpretation of the (Delaney) section must lead to the prohibition of such a (cancer-inducing) substance even though present in trace amounts." The panel took no position on the argument advanced by business spokesmen that the law should permit FDA to establish tolerance limits for carcinogenic additives as it does for others. But the panel argued for discretion in interpreting the Delaney clause, and proposed a series of steps to assist Secretary Flemming in administering the clause.

The panel also recommended modifications in existing law if it did not permit the HEW Secretary to exercise discretion and apply a "rule of reason"; urged greater emphasis by Government agencies on the study of carcinogens (cancer-inducing substances) in a variety of animals to determine dose-response relations; and proposed expansion of research by the Department of Agriculture, state agricultural experiment stations and industry to discover additional safe and effective materials for producing and processing foods.

COLOR ADDITIVES -- New legislation to deal with color additives was requested by Flemming in 1959 following a Supreme Court ruling that existing law prohibited the certification of any coal-tar colors found to be "harmful" in any amount -- the same principle embodied in the Delaney clause, although that was not at issue. The decision led FDA to withdraw approval of seven food colors and, subsequently, 14 coal-tar colors used in lipstick, although none was alleged to be carcinogenic.

At the lipstick industry's request, FDA postponed the order and held new hearings Feb. 17-March 2, 1960. Dr. O. Garth Fitzhugh, chief of the FDA toxicity branch, Feb. 17 testified that three coal-tar colors used in lipsticks had been proved harmful to test animals. In Feb. 18 testimony, George R. Clark, head of FDA's cosmetics division, said he did not have any information to enable him to say whether colors in lipsticks were harmless to humans. Dr. Lloyd W. Hazelton, head of a private research laboratory in Virginia, Feb. 29 said the 90-day tests FDA conducted on lipstick colors were not long enough to determine whether the dyes were cancer-producing. Fuller Holloway, attorney for the Toilet Goods Assn., March 2 protested that the hearings had been unfair, confined to issues that were too narrow, and that testimony on what he called the harmlessness of colors in the manner they were used had been excluded.

Meanwhile, the Senate Aug. 24, 1959, had passed a color additives bill (S 2197) modeled after the 1958 food additives law. It did away with the existing distinction between coal-tar and other colors, and provided for certification of colors, even if harmful in certain quantities, under tolerance limits. S 2197 did not contain the Delaney clause.

House

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 26 - March 14 on proposals (HR 7624, S 2197) for color additive amendments to the Pure Food and Drug Act. HR 7624, sponsored by Committee Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.), contained the Delaney clause.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 26 -- Secretary Flemming said the Delaney clause should be included in the bill. He also proposed that: FDA be given more leeway to decide when colors could be used safely in limited amounts if not cancer-suspect; manufacturers assume the burden of proof for color safety; FDA be given power to revoke approvals made prior to the 1958 legislation; the 1958 Amendment be modified to allow use of cancer-inducing substances in animals as long as no residue was left in the food consumed by man.

Jan. 27 -- Rep. Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (D Mo.) urged thorough study of lipstick colors and said those who claimed women didn't swallow lipstick "don't use the stuff themselves."

George D. Riley, AFL-CIO legislative representative, supported HR 7624 as "a minimum protection to captive consumers."

Arthur T. Schramm, representing the certified color industry, said FDA should have discretionary rather than mandatory power to ban colors.

Feb. 10 -- H.F. Dunkelberger Jr., National Canners Assn., said both the Senate and House bills "go far beyond the announced objectives they are purportedly designed to attain" and would "broaden the licensing to many substances...concerning which no question of safety has been raised."

Paul Gerden, Abbott Laboratories, said "if the flat ban of a cancer clause is to be applied on the basis of remote implications from inconclusive scientific reports," common foods and beverages such as cream, milk, coffee, tea, sugar and eggs might also have to be banned. Gerden said the pending bills gave too much power to the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and should be redrafted.

Feb. 11 -- Dr. Thomas P. Carney, vice president of Eli Lilly & Co., testified on behalf of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn. and said retention of the Delaney anti-cancer clause in HR 7624 would stifle research on use of chemical substances to boost agricultural production. He said a synthetic female sex hormone, stilbestrol, was used in feeds to increase the weight of about 75 percent of all beef cattle under controlled feeding in the U.S., but that under the 1958 Food Additives Amendment new uses were banned because the product had been shown to produce cancer in animals. Carney said tests showed that no residue of stilbestrol remained in the animals' tissues but Committee members John E. Moss (D Calif.) and John D. Dingell (D Mich.) contested this. Carney said the drug industry would like to see the cancer clause changed to read that an additive, either in food or color, should be ruled unsafe for any use in food if found to induce cancer in man or animal when given "in amounts and under conditions reasonably related to the intended use."

March 11 -- M. R. Clarkson, associate administrator of the Agriculture Department's agricultural research service, endorsed a proposal to authorize the Government to set safety tolerances on color additives, but declined to take a stand on the Delaney clause in HR 7624 which would ban the use of any additive found cancer-producing in man or animal. Clarkson, representing Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson, said the Department felt the problem should be thoroughly reviewed and there should be an opportunity, wherever possible, for the Government to exercise scientific judgment in questionable cases.

Committee member John D. Dingell (D Mich.) said the Agriculture Department was "being rather leisurely" in taking a position on the Delaney clause, whereas the Department of Health, Education and Welfare Jan. 26 had taken an emphatic stand in favor of extending the clause to colors. Clarkson said the Department preferred to delay its decision pending a study ordered by President Eisenhower Feb. 12.

May 9 -- Flemming reiterated his support for the Delaney clause as follows: "The rallying point against the anti-cancer provision is the catch phrase that it takes away the scientist's right to exercise judgment. The issue thus made is a false one, because the clause allows the exercise of all the judgment that can safely be exercised on the basis of our present knowledge.

"The clause is grounded on the scientific fact of life that no one, at this time, can tell us how to establish for man a safe tolerance for a cancer-producing agent. Until cancer research makes a breakthrough on this point, there simply is no scientific basis on which judgment or discretion could be exercised in tolerating a small amount of a known carcinogenic color or food additive."

ACTION -- The Committee June 7 reported HR 7624 (H Rept 1761) and said it was designed to meet "a pressing need for replacing the inconsistent, and in part outmoded, provisions which now govern the use of different kinds of color for articles covered by the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, with a scientifically sound and uniform system for the listing of color additives of any kind."

The report said the Delaney anti-cancer clause had been included in view of expert testimony, the support for the clause of the HEW Secretary and "the uncertainty surrounding the determination of safe tolerances for carcinogens."

Committee amendments: exempted from the provisions pesticide, chemical, soil and plant nutrients; provided for listing of color additives for general use when there was a published finding on their safety; allowed the HEW Secretary to waive certain additive analyses if he determined they were unnecessary; methods for additives; provided for an advisory committee to review findings under the Delaney clause that are appealed by someone adversely affected by the finding; exempted certain additives from certification and provided for review of certain limiting actions taken by the HEW Secretary.

The report said the estimated cost of enforcing the legislation would be approximately $1 million the first year and close to $900,000 annually thereafter.

Floor Action

The House June 25 passed HR 7624, with committee amendments, by voice vote. The House then tabled HR 7624, substituted its text for that of S 2197, and passed S 2197. The bill as passed was the same as that enacted into law.

DEBATE -- June 25 -- Kenneth A. Roberts (D Ala.) -- The bill would particularly help the cosmetic industry by permitting the continued use of certain coal-tar colors under safe tolerances.

John H. Kyl (R Iowa) -- Measurements under the anti-cancer clause are most difficult; the regulatory agencies should "apply the rule of reason in their administration" of it.

Final Action

The Senate June 30 agreed by voice vote to the House-amended version of S 2197, sending the bill to the White House.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE ACT

The FDA Oct. 12 authorized a provisional listing of 10 of the 14 controversial lipstick colors, with tolerance limitations, for 30 months. Four of the colors were banned.

The FDA Nov. 22 ordered no further use of Red No. 1, a water soluble coal-tar color used in foods including some frankfurter casings and maraschino cherries, drugs and cosmetics (not lipsticks). FDA Deputy Commissioner John L. Harvey said the action came after preliminary experiments showed the color produced liver damage in test animals and because no safe use level had been established. He said the tests had not provided a basis for concluding the color could cause cancer, but the testing would be continued.

PUBLIC HEALTH GRANTS

Congress in 1960 passed two bills dealing with research and training in the field of public health. Both measures had Administration support.

● GRADUATE TRAINING -- Congress Aug. 29 cleared a bill (HR 6871 -- PL 86-720) which authorized a 5-year program of project grants to public health schools and nursing and engineering schools which provided graduate or specialized training in public health. It also extended indefinitely the Surgeon General's authority under the Public Health Service Act (PL 85-544) to make $1 million in grants-in-aid annually to public health schools. Approval came after the House agreed to a conference report (H Rept 2162) adjusting minor, technical amendments made in the bill on the Senate floor July 1.

● RESEARCH GRANTS -- Congress Aug. 31 completed action on a bill (HR 10341 -- PL 86-765) authorizing the Surgeon General to make broad grants for health research to institutions by setting aside part of the research grants regularly appropriated to the National Institutes of Health.

The bill, amending the Public Health Service Act, provided that funds for the institutional grants were to be a uniform percentage not exceeding 15 percent of the NIH appropriations for specific project grants. Applications for funds would be made by schools of medicine, dentistry, and public health and reviewed by the National Advisory Health Council.

The report of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 2174), made after Committee hearings June 6-7, said the present NIH grant structure, restricting grants to specific projects, lessened the flexibility of research.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Congress took no action on a bill (HR 12550) introduced June 8 by Rep. John B. Bennett (R Mich.) to embody proposals made June 2 by Secretary of Health Education and Welfare Arthur S. Flemming to reorganize the Public Health Service and establish a new Environmental Health Bureau and a National Center for Health Statistics.

FOREIGN SERVICE CHANGES

S 2633 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 880) Sept. 2, 1959.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote Sept. 9.
- Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 2104) Aug. 17, 1960.
- Passed, amended, by the House by voice vote Aug. 22.
- House and Senate agreed to conference report (H Rept 2173) Aug. 29.

PL 86-723 -- Signed into law Sept. 8.

The 1960 amendments to the Foreign Service Act of 1946, reflecting the growing concern in Congress over the quality of the Service, raised the standards for Foreign Service personnel.

The bill passed by Congress (S 2633) tightened language requirements for Foreign Service personnel and provided facilities and incentives for language training; required Foreign Service officers, "to the maximum extent possible," to have a thorough knowledge of the country in which they served; gave the Secretary of State more flexibility in hiring and promoting personnel; revised and expanded the Service's retirement and disability program; and authorized a $10 million increase in funds for buildings.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 2633:

Directed the Secretary of State to establish foreign language standards for all overseas assignments; directed him to designate every Foreign Service officer position abroad which should be filled by a person proficient in the appropriate language or dialect and required that after Dec. 31, 1963 those posts be filled by persons possessing the specified ability.

Directed the Secretary to arrange for appropriate language training to meet the standards.

Authorized incentive pay to encourage Foreign Service personnel to acquire a proficiency in a difficult foreign language or a special ability.

Provided that chiefs of mission and Foreign Service officers, to the maximum extent practicable, should have a thorough knowledge of the language, culture, history and institutions of the country in which they served.

Stated that specialization in a geographic area would not prejudice promotions of Foreign Service officers.

Provided for the language training and orientation of spouses of Foreign Service personnel.

Authorized the Secretary to take into account the needs of the Service and non-Governmental experience when assigning salary classifications to newly recruited Foreign Service personnel.

Authorized annual within-class salary increases for every Foreign Service officer whose work met "the standards required for the efficient conduct of the work of the Service."

Clarified the authority of the Secretary to make appointments involving different lengths of tenure, and his authority to assign Foreign Service personnel to any international body or Government agency.

Authorized the employment of retired Foreign Service officers by other Government agencies.

Provided that a Foreign Service officer who resigned from the Service could be reappointed regardless of whether or not he had spent the intervening time in Government service as required previously.

Permitted the recall to duty of Foreign Service reserve officers whenever it was in the public interest (thus deleting a section of existing law prohibiting recalls except during an emergency).

Authorized the Secretary to extend the services of career ambassadors or career ministers for five years beyond the retirement age of 65, and of other personnel for five years beyond the required retirement age of 60, and adjusted retirement provisions for these persons.

Permitted career ambassadors and ministers, if appointed by the President to another State Department position, to retain or be reinstated to their Foreign Service status until the end of that appointment even though they passed the Foreign Service retirement age.

Authorized the firing of a reserve officer, staff officer or employee for "unsatisfactory performance of his duties" or any other cause to "promote the efficiency of the Service", subject to a hearing by the Board of the Foreign Service. (The firing of Foreign Service officers under the same conditions was already authorized by law.)

Required the Secretary of State to classify all Foreign Service positions abroad, excluding those held by chiefs of missions.

Clarified existing provisions governing the termination of the service of chiefs of mission by stating that such service shall terminate within 50 days after the appointment of the successor.

Authorized the establishment of wage and salary schedules for alien personnel employed overseas based on the prevailing local pay practices.

Provided that Foreign Service staff officers or employees, after 10 years of continuous service, would become participants in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability system (rather than the Civil Service Retirement system) with an eventual mandatory retirement age of 60 years; increased salary retirement deductions from 5 percent to 6½ percent of the basic salary and authorized federal matching payments (at an estimated annual cost of $2.5 million).

Authorized a $10 million increase in appropriations for erecting office buildings overseas. (The conferees said it was their intention that to the greatest extent possible the funds should be provided in local foreign currencies owned by the United States.)

FLOOR ACTION -- S 2633, supported by the Administration, was passed by the Senate in 1959 (1959 Almanac p. 218) and by the House with extensive committee amendments (H Rept 2104) Aug. 22, 1960. The conference report (H Rept 2173) resolved these major differences:

- The Senate directed that the Secretary of State designate every Foreign Service officer position abroad which should be filled by a person proficient in the appropriate language or dialect, and that after Dec. 31, 1963 those posts be filled by persons possessing the specified ability. The House bill stipulated that after 1963 a prescribed quota of personnel proficient in the language had to be assigned to each country, but not necessarily to specific positions. (Resolved in favor of the Senate.)
- The Senate authorized incentive pay to encourage language proficiency. The House bill authorized salary increases after the proficiency had been obtained, provided the person was eligible for promotion. (Resolved in favor of the Senate.)
- The Senate authorized $100 million for the construction of office buildings. The House provided no authorization for this purpose. (Compromised at $10 million.)

ACTION ON SPACE REORGANIZATION PROPOSALS

H J Res 567 -- Transfer of the von Braun team to NASA, reported by House Science and Astronautics Committee (H Rept 1240) Feb. 4, 1960.

- Passed by the House Feb. 8, by a 92-2 standing vote.
- Reported by Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee (S Rept 1142) Feb. 26.

HR 12049 -- Amendments to the 1958 Space Act, reported by House Science and Astronautics Committee (H Rept 1633) May 19, 1960.

- Passed by the House June 9, by a 235-31 standing vote. (For roll call on recommittal, see p. 454)

Administration attempts to change the Nation's space program were only partially successful in 1960. One proposal of President Eisenhower -- the transfer to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration of the Army rocket team headed by Dr. Wernher von Braun -- went into effect March 14. The President made the shift under power granted him in the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (PL 85-568), and the transfer could have been stopped only by Congressional adoption of a resolution disapproving. Instead, the House adopted a resolution (H J Res 567) endorsing the move.

A bill embodying a second Eisenhower proposal, however, made in a Jan. 14 message to Congress, died in the Senate after House passage. The measure (HR 12049) changed NASA's makeup and clarified the agency's functions in an attempt to distinguish more clearly between civilian and military space activities. It also contained one especially controversial provision which would have given the NASA administrator the discretion to acquire title to inventions made under contract with NASA, or to waive the title while retaining for the Government the right of royalty-free use of the patent. The 1958 space act reserved as the "exclusive property of the United States" any invention made under NASA contract.

Any chance for enactment in 1960 was killed when Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee Chairman Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) Aug. 31 read into the Congressional Record a memorandum saying there was no urgent need for the modifications and that a new President in January might want to make different changes. Johnson also said changes in the NASA patent system should be delayed until they could be related to a new, uniform, Governmentwide patent policy.

Background

REFERENCE -- Space Agency (1958 Almanac p. 160).

The National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (PL 85-568) created a new civilian agency to direct the nation's scientific non-military space activities. The Act was the result of a Congressional reappraisal of the U.S. missile and satellite program which was brought about by the Soviet Union's launching of the first earth satellite in November 1957.

The purpose of creating a civilian space agency, Congress said, was to devote U.S. activities in outer space to peaceful purposes which would benefit all of mankind. Through NASA, Congress and the Administration intended to draw a distinction between strictly military and non-military exploration into outer space. In order to give the program some flexibility and permit subsequent realignment of the nation's civilian and military space programs, Congress included a provision in the 1958 Act which authorized the President to transfer to NASA the functions of any other department or agency which were related primarily to the functions of NASA. In order to accomplish such a transfer, the President was required to submit a report to Congress setting forth his proposal. If Congress did not pass a concurrent resolution objecting to the proposal within 60 days after it was submitted, the plan would automatically go into effect.

Von Braun Transfer (H J Res 567)

The plan to transfer von Braun's missile team (the Development Operations Division, stationed at Redstone Arsenal, Huntsville, Ala.) from the Army Ballistic Missile Agency to NASA was announced by President Eisenhower Oct. 21, 1959 after a conference of top space officials. It was put before Congress Jan. 14 in a Presidential message which said that it was in the "best interest of the nation" to provide NASA with an organization capable of developing and operating large space vehicle boosters and conducting related research. The transfer of the von Braun team to NASA would accomplish this purpose, the message said.

For administrative purposes the transfer was to become effective July 1, but it could have taken place any time after March 14 (60 days from the date the message was delivered to Congress) unless Congress in the meantime passed a concurrent resolution disapproving the plan. However, in order to emphasize its support of the transfer, the House Science and Astronautics Committee Feb. 4 unanimously reported H J Res 567 (H Rept 1240), introduced by B.F. Sisk (D Calif.), stating that prompt and positive endorsement would remove employment uncertainties among Redstone personnel and "add impetus" to the space effort. The resolution was supported by Dr. von Braun and Army officials at Feb. 2 hearings.

The House Feb. 8 passed H J Res 567, by a 92-2 standing vote, and the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee reported the measure (S Rept 1142) Feb. 26. The Senate March 28, however, indefinitely postponed H J Res 567 when it was informed that the 60-day waiting period had expired March 14.

HOUSE DEBATE -- Feb. 8 -- Samuel S. Stratton (D N.Y.), who introduced H Con Res 559 Feb. 2 to disapprove the transfer -- "We are proceeding down the road to disaster in trying to separate military and nonmilitary aspects of space" and "freeze out the military" from full-scale participation in the space effort. "I personally would favor a single over-all civilian-military agency charged with responsibility for the whole missile and rocket field."

John W. McCormack (D Mass.), House majority leader -- The Saturn project is currently in a "very unsettled status" and under the circumstances "there is nothing else we can do" but approve its transfer to NASA.

James G. Fulton (R Pa.) -- The transfer "will make for a more efficient U.S. space program" and is a "well-worked-out plan by the President for dividing the various functions among the various groups."

NASA Changes (HR 12049)

House

COMMITTEE -- Science and Astronautics.

HEARINGS -- March 8-10, 16, 24, 29-31 and April 4 on the President's requests, as clarified in a NASA draft bill (HR 9675). (For text of President's message, see p. 638)

TESTIMONY -- March 8 -- Dr. T. Keith Glennan, head of NASA, endorsed the President's proposals, particularly the abolition of the National Aeronautics and Space Council and Civilian-Military Liaison Committee. He said it was "imperative" that NASA-Defense liaison be conducted at many levels and that "the attempt to formalize this need and center the activity in one committee had proven to be...unnecessary, cumbersome and unworkable."

March 10 -- William M. Holaday, chairman of the liaison committee, disagreed with the President's proposal that civilian and military space programs should be conducted separately because their similarity was "far greater than anyone would be led to believe". He said all space research and development should be under one agency, preferably NASA. This, he said, would result in a more efficient program.

March 16 -- Lt. Gen. Arthur G. Trudeau, chief of the Army's research division, said the space exploration program could not be successfully divorced from the problems of national defense, but warned against putting the NASA administrator on the same administrative level as the Secretary of Defense, who, he said, should be free to make the final decisions.

March 29 -- Lt. Gen. James M. Gavin (ret.), former deputy chief of Army's Office of Research and Development, recommended NASA be given over-all responsibility for the space program, from which could be drawn military applications.

March 30 -- Roy W. Johnson, former chief of the Advanced Research Projects Agency, said interservice rivalry and poor planning had made him doubt the ability of the United States "to win a war five to 10 years from now". He said a failure on the part of military chiefs to grasp the military significance of outer space was one reason the U.S. was not developing its potential to build an effective satellite system to warn of approaching missiles. He suggested the Committee concentrate on military efforts in the space race and cease worrying about reorganization of the space program.

March 31 -- Lee A. DuBridge, president of the California Institute of Technology, supported the Administration's proposals and said a "single all-inclusive space organization" was neither necessary, feasible nor desirable. He said the military and civilian organizations could not be expected to devote adequate time and finances to each others programs.

ACTION -- The Committee May 19 reported a clean bill (HR 12049 -- H Rept 1633) which, as requested by the President in his message: (1) made clear that the NASA had sole responsibility for managing the Nation's non-military space program; (2) scrapped existing provisions that imposed on the President duties for detailed planning of the program, and abolished the National Aeronautics and Space Council, whose function was to advise him on such planning; (3) gave the President power to decide whether to assign the development of each new launch vehicle project to NASA or to the Defense Department; and (4) abolished the Civilian-Military Liaison Committee but, contrary to the President's request, established in its place a civilian-military coordinating board.

A fifth provision, not specifically requested by Mr. Eisenhower, but included in the NASA draft bill, permitted NASA to waive title to inventions but provided that the Government could acquire a royalty-free license to all inventions developed by NASA contractors, if federal ownership to the title were waived.

The report dwelt largely on the provision changing the patent section of the 1958 Act, which provided that any invention made under contract with NASA "shall be the exclusive property of the United States". The Committee version of HR 12049 would have given the NASA administrator the "discretion of acquiring title" to the inventions or waiving title to the developer. The administrator, however, would be directed to acquire such rights where it was necessary to protect "the public interest and the equities of the contractor" or where it would be in the interest of national security.

The report said the Government in any case would retain a "royalty-free, nonexclusive, irrevocable license" for the use of patents developed under NASA research contracts. This would permit NASA to have an invention developed by one company and produced by a second.

A minority report signed by four Democratic Representatives -- B.F. Sisk (Calif.), James M. Quigley (Pa.), Leonard G. Wolf (Iowa) and Joseph E. Karth (Minn.) -- said the strategy of the proposed change was to establish a beachhead from which eventually it would be possible to "drive the Government out of the field of patent ownership" and that the change "invariably" was supported by representatives of industry and the patent bar.

Floor Action

The House June 9 passed HR 12049 without amendments by a 235-31 standing vote. Before passage the House rejected, by a 120-270 roll-call vote, a recommittal motion offered by Rep. B.F. Sisk (D Calif.) to return the bill to the House Science and Astronautics Committee with instructions to delete the section on ownership of patents. (For voting, see chart p. 454)

Earlier the House had defeated a similar amendment, first by a 97-118 standing vote and then by a 91-154 teller vote, by Rep. James M. Quigley (D Pa.). It would have deleted the controversial section and thereby retained the existing provisions of the Act which declared that any invention made under contract with NASA became the exclusive property of the United States. Defeat of the recommittal motion and Quigley's amendment retained in the bill the new patent provision.

Proponents of changing the patent rights system argued that the 1958 Act's provision encumbered NASA's research and development program because companies were reluctant to develop an item when they were not allowed to retain patent rights. Opponents of the change said it would benefit only large business concerns and further complicate existing Government patent policies. The new NASA patent policy was similar to that of the Defense Department and other Government agencies except the Atomic Energy Commission.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 12049:

Clarified NASA's role as the agency solely responsible for managing the Nation's non-military space program.

Scrapped existing provisions that imposed on the President duties for detailed planning of the space program, and abolished the National Aeronautics and Space Council, whose duty it was to advise the President on such planning.

Authorized the President to decide whether to assign the development of each new launch vehicle project to NASA or to the Defense Department and directed the Defense Department to undertake space activities, including research and development, necessary for the defense of the Nation.

Abolished the Civilian-Military Liaison Committee and established in its place a NASA-Defense Department coordinating board.

Gave the NASA administrator the discretion of acquiring title to inventions developed under NASA research contracts or waiving the title to the companies that developed the inventions, but retained for NASA a royalty-free non-exclusive, irrevocable license for use of the inventions.

Authorized the Administrator to indemnify contractors against potential dangers.

Eliminated a requirement that the President and the NASA administrator, in their annual reports, make legislative recommendations to Congress if necessary.

Authorized NASA to waive performance and payment bonds of Government contractors for construction work, otherwise required by law, where it was warranted by the financial responsibility of the contractor.

Permitted the President, when the Senate concurred, to appoint the NASA administrator to the National Security Council.

Authorized NASA to lease Government property for other than monetary considerations and to acquire releases for past infringements of patents; clarified the authority of other federal agencies to acquire items for NASA through appropriate contract.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

June 9 -- James M. Quigley (D Pa.) -- Delete the section giving the NASA Administrator the discretion of acquiring or waiving title to inventions developed under NASA contract, thereby restoring a provision of the 1958 Act giving the United States exclusive property rights over any invention developed under NASA contract. Standing, 97-118; teller, 91-154.

Senate

Chairman Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) of the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee Aug. 31 inserted in the Congressional Record a statement giving the Committee's reasons for postponing consideration of HR 12049 until 1961. It said analysis of the amendments failed to uncover any "persuasive reasons" for pressing for enactment and that the changes could restrict the freedom of action of the next President.

In addition to recommending that any patent changes be related to a new, uniform, Governmentwide patent policy, the statement said that the principle organizational changes recommended by HR 12049 could be or had been accomplished by administrative action under the existing law and that the proposed indemnification provisions would accomplish little.

NATO CITIZENS COMMISSION

S J Res 170 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee Feb. 23, 1960 (S Rept 1122).
- Passed by the Senate June 15 by a 51-44 roll-call vote. (See p. 501)
- Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee June 23 (H Rept 1957).
- Passed by the House Aug. 24 by a 289-103 roll-call vote. (See p. 468).

PL 86-719 -- Signed into law Sept. 7.

Congress in 1960 passed and the President approved a joint resolution (S J Res 170 -- PL 86-719) to provide for the appointment of a U.S. Citizens Commission on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Commission, working with similar groups from the other NATO nations, was instructed to explore ways of promoting greater political and economic cooperation among the North Atlantic countries.

The resolution authorized appointment by the Vice President and Speaker of the House of up to 20 private citizens as members of the Commission to participate on an unofficial basis in a convention with similar citizen groups from other NATO countries. It authorized Commission expenses of $300,000 through Jan. 31, 1962, when the Commission was scheduled to expire.

Background

Passage of the resolution in 1960 was the result of pressure over several years by private U.S. citizens' groups and a small group of Congressmen for U.S. efforts to strengthen the Atlantic community's non-military ties. Such moves were opposed by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Daughters of the American Revolution and the National Economic Council.

Resolutions in support of an Atlantic Union movement, suggesting as a goal a "free federal union", were introduced in 1949 and 1951, but no action was taken on them. (1949 Almanac p. 388)

In 1955, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee held hearings on a similar resolution (S Con Res 12). Secretary of State John Foster Dulles objected to its wording on the grounds that it appeared to commit the President to "the practicability and general desirability of some such union" and he suggested that Congress find some way "to hold the exploratory convention under less official auspices."

A revised resolution was drafted, but the Committee postponed action when Dulles pointed out that the NATO Council of Ministers was itself exploring ways of achieving greater unity.

In 1958 Committee Chairman Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) introduced a concurrent resolution (S Con Res 62) requesting the President to "use his best efforts to implement" a meeting of citizens from NATO countries "to examine ways to promote greater cooperation". The resolution was co-sponsored by several Senators and Representatives who had attended the third annual NATO Parliamentarians' Conference in Paris, which Nov. 16, 1957 proposed a NATO citizens' meeting.

Under strong urging from the State Department, the Committee removed the section giving the President responsibility and merely put Congress on record as in favor of such a meeting. The resolution was reported April 24, 1958 (S Rept 1470), but was never considered by the Senate.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) March 19, 1959 introduced a resolution (S Con Res 17) for a citizens' commission. Co-sponsored by Sens. Clifford P. Case (R N.J.), John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.), Frank Church (D Idaho) and Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), S Con Res 17 called for a convention of delegates from NATO countries and "such other democracies" as the convention might invite, to consider ways to "achieve more effective and democratic unity" in pursuing common coals. Delegates were to be "leading representative citizens officially appointed" but free to act as individuals.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARING -- Jan. 19 on S Con Res 17.

Principal witness in behalf of S Con Res 17 was William H. Draper Jr., who appeared as spokesman for the United States Committee for the Atlantic Congress, a five-day meeting held in London June 1959 and attended by 650 citizens from the U.S. and other NATO countries. The participants resolved to seek the approval of their governments for a special conference of "not more than 100 leading representative citizens" to study NATO problems. The proposed conference, unlike the privately sponsored Congress of 1959, would have semi-official status under the terms of S Con Res 17, Draper said. Sens. Case, Cooper, and Kefauver also testified briefly in behalf of their proposal.

Questioning by Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) and other Committee members indicated a general concern over the resolution's failure to spell out details covering procedures for selecting and appointing delegates, for receiving their reports and for paying their expenses.

ACTION -- The Committee Feb. 10 approved an original resolution (S J Res 170) by an 8-7 vote. The principal change from S Con Res 17 was language specifying that members of the Commission were to be chosen by Congressional officials, rather than by the Executive Branch, and that Commission members would not be speaking for the U.S. Government. The new measure also added technical provisions authorizing pay, staffs and expenditures. S J Res 170 was supported by the State Department.

The Committee report (S Rept 1122) filed Feb. 23 said that for years there had been "strong feeling among the NATO nations that much more should be done within the alliance to counter the increasing Soviet bloc emphasis on competition with the West through political and economic measures." The report said the Commission could take advantage of the heretofore little-used Article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty, providing for non-military cooperation.

Floor Action

The Senate June 15 passed S J Res 170 without amendments by a 51-44 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 501)

DEBATE -- June 14, 15 -- Proponents, including Frank Church (D Idaho), Clifford P. Case (R N.J.) and others, declared that collapse of the May summit conference made strengthening of the Atlantic Alliance imperative.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- As chairman of the NATO Parliamentarians Economic Committee, he believed success in the cold war depended upon economic cooperation at the citizen level among NATO nations.

Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- The resolution would "bypass" the constitutional authority vested in the President in foreign affairs.

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

ACTION -- June 21 approved S J Res 170 by a 20-0 vote and reported it June 23 (H Rept 1957).

Floor Action

The House, after defeating five proposed floor amendments and a motion to recommit the resolution to the Foreign Affairs Committee, approved the Senate version of S J Res 170 by a 289-103 roll-call vote Aug. 24. Earlier the House, by a 349-39 roll-call vote, adopted a resolution (H Res 587) granting an open rule (permitting amendments) with one hour of debate on the measure. (For voting, see chart p. 468)

The motion to recommit, defeated by voice vote, was made by Rep. H.R. Gross (R Iowa), who also sponsored an unsuccessful amendment to prohibit the use of funds authorized by the bill to influence legislation in Congress.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Aug. 24 -- John James Flynt Jr. (D Ga.) -- Include five Senators and five Representatives in the Commission's membership. Standing vote, 33-59.

Frank T. Bow (R Ohio) -- Provide that compensation to employees of the Commission not exceed a total of $50,000. Standing, 38-55.

Bow -- Provide that the United States pay no more than 20 percent of the total cost of the NATO Commission convention. Teller, 45-76.

Bow -- Require Commission members to make the same report on travel and expenses as required of Members of Congress. Voice.

Gross -- Prohibit authorized Commission funds from being used "for publicity or propaganda purposes designed to support or defeat legislation" in Congress. Standing, 43-65; Voice.

DEBATE -- Aug. 24 -- Gross -- The Commission is "a junketing organization".

Zablocki -- The NATO countries have waited too long to devise a strategy in times of peace against the Soviet economic offensive.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Nov. 21-26 -- Delegations from the House and Senate attended the NATO Parliamentarians Conference in Paris. The House delegation was led by Rep. Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) and consisted of nine Members: Hays, Victor L. Anfuso (D N.Y.), Robert R. Barry (R N.Y.), Gordon Canfield (R N.J.), Laurence Curtis (R Mass.), Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.), Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (R N.J.), Frank E. Smith (D Miss.) and Homer Thornberry (D Texas).

The Senate delegation was led by Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) and included in addition: J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.), Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Maurine Neuberger (D Ore.), J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.) and John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.).

HIGHWAY FUNDS AUTHORIZED; PROBE STARTS

HR 10495 -- Reported, amended, by House Public Works Committee (H Rept 1546) April 21, 1960.
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of House May 12.
- Reported, amended, June 24 by Senate Public Works Committee (S Rept 1725).
- Passed by Senate, amended, by an 80-0 roll-call vote June 29. (See p. 509)
- Conference report (H Rept 2080) agreed to July 2 by voice votes of House and Senate.

PL 86-657 -- Signed into law July 14.

Congress in 1960 authorized $1,042,500,000 for federal and federal-aid roads in fiscal 1962 and $1,047,000,000 for the same roads in fiscal 1963. The authorizations included $25 million more each year than the President requested for federal-aid primary, secondary and urban roads (so-called ABC roads) (For federal money apportioned to states, 1957-61, see chart p. 352)

There was no action at all, however, on requests by President Eisenhower for major revisions in the financing mechanism of the Highway Trust Fund; and in a separate development, a House special subcommittee began investigations into alleged malpractices in construction of the National Interstate and Defense Highway System. (See below, "Financing Problem" and "Subcommittee Investigation")

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 10495, the Federal Highway Act of 1960, authorized the following spending for road programs in fiscal 1962 and fiscal 1963:

	Fiscal 1962	Fiscal 1963
From the Highway Trust Fund:
Primary, secondary, urban roads	$ 925,000,000	$ 925,000,000
From general revenues:
Forest highways	33,000,000	33,000,000
Forest roads & trails	35,000,000	40,000,000
Park roads & trails	18,000,000	18,000,000
Parkways	16,000,000	16,000,000
Indian reservation roads & bridges	12,000,000	12,000,000
Public land highways	3,500,000	3,000,000
TOTAL	$1,042,500,000	$1,047,000,000

HR 10495 also:

Required that the Bureau of Public Roads, in submitting estimates to Congress in 1961 on the cost of completing the Interstate and Defense Highway System, include the cost of building 1,000 additional miles that in 1956 were authorized to be added to the 40,000-mile Interstate System. The Bureau would therefore submit estimates in 1961 for the entire 41,000 miles authorized.

Allowed "reserved" public lands (lands withdrawn from the public domain for various purposes, like defense installations) to be included in computations determining sliding-scale adjustments in the state matching share of the cost of building ABC roads (normally 50 percent, but less on a sliding scale for states having certain public lands within their boundaries).

Allowed the Bureau of Public Roads to reimburse states immediately, with subsequent cost adjustments, for the estimated federal share of costs of road relocation due to federal construction projects.

Allowed use of federal-aid highway funds on approach roads to publicly or privately owned ferry facilities (primarily for Alaska and Hawaii).

Allowed Maryland and Delaware to repay to the Federal Government funds used to construct certain sections of Interstate Route 95, after which the states would be allowed to collect tolls on those sections.

House

COMMITTEE -- Public Works, Roads Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- March 1-3.

BACKGROUND -- President Eisenhower, in his Jan. 18 Budget Message, asked that the ABC authorizations for fiscal 1962 and 1963 be held to $900 million, which was $25 million less than the fiscal 1961 authorization. HR 10495, introduced Feb. 17 by the Subcommittee Chairman, George H. Fallon (D Md.), continued the 1961 figure. Highlights of testimony:

David H. Stevens, president, American Assn. of State Highway Officials, and Robert M. Koch, president, National Limestone Institute Inc., March 1 urged a $25 million yearly increase in the authorizations until they reached $1 billion annually. Glenn Richards, Detroit Commissioner of Public Works, representing the American Municipal Assn., supported HR 10495, but urged an increase in the proportion of federal assistance for roads in urban areas, and called for creation of a special federal-aid urban highway program. Representatives of the Associated General Contractors of America Inc. and the American Road Builders' Assn. March 2 supported HR 10495. Christian Kahl, director, National Assn. of County Officials, said the authorization should be increased by $25 million yearly. Testifying March 3, Bradley Nash, Deputy Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation, supporting the President's proposed cutback to $900 million, said spending should be held down on state roads to avoid impairing the separate Interstate and Defense Highway System, since the ABC program received first call on funds in the Highway Trust Fund, by which both ABC and Interstate programs were financed. Federal Highway Administrator Bertram D. Tallamy said the Interstate System was of vital importance and enormous value to the Nation and there was a conclusively demonstrated need for its early completion.

ACTION -- The full Committee April 21 reported an amended version of HR 10495 (H Rept 1546), authorizing $925 million annually in fiscal 1962 and 1963 for ABC roads and $117 million in fiscal 1962 and $122 million in fiscal 1963 for other federal roads. The money for the ABC roads was to be drawn from the Highway Trust Fund; the other funds were authorized to be appropriated out of general revenues.

The bill also permitted the Secretary of Commerce to advance funds to states for completion of defense access highways, such as roads into missile installations.

The Committee said the authorizations were "the minimum figure to keep the ABC program "moving at a smooth pace." Seven Committee Republicans in supplementary views "reluctantly" supported the $925 million authorization. They said the over-all highway program was "out of balance" because the ABC roads program was getting proportionately more funds than the Interstate Highway Program. The Republicans opposed a Committee amendment raising authorizations for forest development roads by $5 million for each year, as compared with the original bill, and said that it would benefit "some big lumber companies" at the expense of cutbacks in other parts of the road program.

Floor Action

The House May 12, by voice vote, passed HR 10495 with no change in the money figures recommended by the Public Works Committee.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 10495 authorized $925 million a year in fiscal 1962 and 1963 as the Federal Government's 50 percent share of the cost of the ABC road program. The money was to be drawn from the Highway Trust Fund. In addition, the bill authorized the following appropriations, from general revenues, for other road programs:

	Fiscal 1962	Fiscal 1963
Forest highways	$ 33,000,000	$ 33,000,000
Forest roads & trails	35,000,000	40,000,000
Park roads & trails	18,000,000	18,000,000
Parkways	16,000,000	16,000,000
Indian reservation roads & bridges	12,000,000	12,000,000
Public land highways	3,000,000	3,000,000
	$117,000,000	$122,000,000

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

May 12 -- Robert E. Jones (D Ala.) -- Require state highway departments to erect signs, where work was in progress and visible to highway users, identifying the project and listing amounts contributed by the state and Federal Government. Voice vote.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Public Works

ACTION -- June 24 reported HR 10495 (S Rept 1725) with amendments. The only money change from the House version was inclusion of additional authorizations of $100 million each year for fiscal 1962 and 1963 in special funds for ABC roads. The additional funds were intended as a supplement to the regular funds, for use in areas of high unemployment and on projects of "greater need", and the Committee expressed the "hope" they would be used in the manner intended.

Whereas dollar-for-dollar federal-state matching was required for the regular ABC funds, the states were to be required to put up only $1 for every $2 in federal funds under the special program, less for states where the sliding scale adjustment for public lands was applicable. The federal share, regardless of the sliding scale, was to be limited to 95 percent for any state, and the money could be spent interchangeably for primary, secondary and urban roads as the states determined. (Under the regular ABC program, 45 percent of federal funds is earmarked for primary roads, 30 percent for secondary roads and 25 percent for urban roads.)

Other Committee amendments:

- Except for national parks, forests and monuments, allowed "reserved" public lands (lands withdrawn from the public domain for various purposes, such as defense installations) to be included among public lands used in computations determining sliding-scale adjustments in the state matching share for ABC funds. The Committee said the provision would decrease the required state share in 13 states, but the decrease would be "rather small, 2 or 3 percent or less" in all of these states except Alaska, Arizona, Nevada and Utah. In dollar terms, the savings to the 13 states, as computed by the Committee for fiscal 1961, were as follows:

Alaska	$ 3,977,152
Arizona	935,612
California	3,192,939
Colorado	290,352
Idaho	509,907
Montana	301,684
Nevada	659,936
New Mexico	685,635
Oregon	787,781
South Dakota	12,892
Utah	529,314
Washington	222,059
Wyoming	383,402
TOTAL	$12,488,665

- Increased authorized mileage on the Interstate System from 41,000 miles to 41,300 miles to bring Hawaii and Alaska into the system. The Commerce Department Jan. 13 had recommended that Hawaii be authorized to build 50 miles of highways under the Interstate program, but had opposed the extension of the system to Alsaka. "Neither the present conditions nor anticipated further developments during the next 15 to 20 years warrant the designation of any Interstate mileage in Alaska," the Department's report said. The Committee accepted the 50-mile recommendation for Hawaii and added another 250 miles for Alaska.
- Allowed the Bureau of Public Roads to reimburse states immediately for the estimated federal share of costs of road relocation due to federal construction projects.
- Allowed use of federal-aid highway funds on approach roads to publicly or privately owned ferry facilities (primarily for Alaska and Hawaii).
- Allowed Maryland and Delaware to repay to the Federal Government funds used to construct certain sections of Interstate Route 95, after which the states would be allowed to collect tolls on those sections.

Floor Action

The Senate June 29 passed HR 10495, amended, by an 80-0 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 509) Floor amendments increased the money figures approved by the Public Works Committee by $500,000 for public land highways for fiscal 1962, and provided that an additional 1,000 miles authorized for the National Interstate and Defense Highway System in 1956 be included in Bureau of Public Roads cost estimates for completing the Interstate system, so that cost estimates due in 1961 would cover the total mileage authorized.

FEDERAL COMMITMENTS TO STATES FOR HIGHWAYS, FISCAL 1957-61

The following chart shows how much federal money was apportioned to the states by the Bureau of Public Roads for fiscal years 1957-61 for ABC roads (federal-aid primary, secondary and urban roads) and for the National Interstate and Defense Highway System. "D" funds represent a special apportionment made for ABC roads for fiscal 1959 as an anti-recession measure. The states were required to match the federal apportionments shown below on the following basis: ABC roads -- 50-50; "D" funds -- $1 state money for each $2 federal; Interstate -- $1 state money for each $9 federal.

The Senate made no other changes in the Committee bill, so that the money figures as approved by the Senate were as follows:

Fiscal 1962 -- Regular ABC funds $925,000,000; special funds, $100,000,000; federal roads, $117,500,000; total: $1,142,500,000.

Fiscal 1963 -- Regular ABC funds, $925,000,000; special funds, $100,000,000; federal roads, $122,000,000; total: $1,147,000,000.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 29 -- Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) -- Increase fiscal 1962 authorizations for public land highways by $500,000 for a road to Dukes Creek Falls, Ga. Voice vote.

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Delete requirement in existing law that costs of completing the additional 1,000 miles in the Interstate System be excluded from cost estimates for the system. Voice.

DEBATE -- June 29 -- J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- Under the reserved land amendment, "Alaska gets $41 million...Arkansas gets about $13.5 million.... I do not understand why Alaska is such a special object of concern on the part of (the) Committee and is to receive such special benefits."

Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) -- "But 99 percent of Alaska is federal domain...not subject to (state) taxation for revenue-raising purposes."

Fulbright -- "...but not because it is held by the Federal Government -- but because it is covered by ice and snow.... Alaska is the principal beneficiary" of the reserved public lands amendment.

Pat McNamara (D Mich.) -- ABC roads "comprise almost 800,000 miles and extend into every county in the United States. They now carry about 48 percent of all the highway traffic in the Nation, and this is expected to practically double in the next 10 years. In addition to being our farm-to-market and rural roads, they have an important function as feeder roads for the Interstate System."

Conference

Senate and House conferees agreed, in a report filed July 1 (H Rept 2080), to accept all Senate amendments except those providing an extra $100 million in special authorizations for fiscal 1962 and 1963 and adding 300 miles to the Interstate system.

The Senate and House, by voice votes July 2, agreed to the conference report.

HOUSE DEBATE -- July 2 -- Gordon H. Scherer (R Ohio) -- The Senate receded from its "two really controversial amendments" -- the extension of the Interstate System from 41,000 to 41,300 miles and the addition of $200 million over two years for the ABC system. "This $200 million would have been taken from the Interstate System" (since ABC roads have first call on available funds in the Highway Trust Fund) and "would be grossly unfair since the Interstate System has already been cut back between 20 and 25 percent from 1956 construction levels."

SENATE DEBATE -- July 2 -- John A. Carroll (D Colo.) -- Expressed gratitude to Members of the House and Senate for accepting his so-called "thousand-mile amendment", requiring that the additional 1,000 miles added to the Interstate System in 1956 be included in cost estimates for completing the system, so as to bring the Denver to Utah road within the financing phase of the program and avoid a delay on the road of three or four years.

Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) -- "I regret that in conference one (amendment), giving Alaska 250 miles of Interstate Highway, was taken out, I think in response to Administration pressure and the threat of veto, but we are grateful" for retention of two other amendments of benefit to Alaska.

Jennings Randolph (D W.Va.) -- The Commerce Department had engaged in "dollar juggling and fiscal finagling" in June 10 and June 27 press releases concerning a step-up of contracts for the fiscal 1961 Interstate System. The Department was "maintaining its lead" in a race to determine which agency of the Administration "can release the most press announcements as substitutes for acts of public responsibility".

The Secretary of Commerce "seems to have been successful in influencing" defeat of the Senate amendment to provide $200 million in funds for ABC roads in depressed areas. "Nothing is more important to the... rehabilitation of blighted regions than the building and maintaining of primary and secondary roads adequate for this era."

FINANCING PROBLEM

Neither chamber of Congress took action in 1960 on the financing problems of the National Interstate and Defense Highway System.

The System, first planned in 1944, was expanded to 41,000 miles in 1956 and given a long-term financing and construction schedule, which envisioned completion of 40,000 miles by 1972, at a Federal Government cost of $25 billion and a state cost of $2.6 billion. (The federal share was 90 percent.)

The federal share of the costs of the Interstate System, as well as of the ABC roads program, was to be financed from a Highway Trust Fund, which was to be fed by various fuel and highway-user taxes. The 1956 law specified that the Highway Trust Fund was not to operate at a deficit at any time.

By 1959 it was clear that revenues were not coming into the Trust Fund as rapidly as had been anticipated and moreover, that the federal share of the cost of the Interstate program would be closer to $35 billion or $40 billion than to $25 billion. This meant new sources of revenue had to be found for the Trust Fund if Interstate work was to continue and be completed on time.

In 1959, also, because of the lagging income of the Trust Fund and its revenue provisions requiring a "pay-as-you-go" procedure, a sharp cutback in immediate allocations for the Interstate Program was necessary, unless some new funds could be found immediately.

Congress in 1959 took no action to solve the larger, long-range problem involving some $12 billion to $15 billion in new revenues needed; but for the immediate problem, it enacted legislation to raise $3,472,000,000 for the Trust Fund by raising the federal gasoline tax from 3 cents a gallon to 4 cents from Oct. 1, 1959 to June 30, 1961, and diverting 5 percentage points of the federal excise taxes on new cars, auto parts and accessories from the Treasury general fund into the Trust Fund for the three fiscal years 1962-64. (1959 Almanac p. 285)

In his Jan. 18, 1960 Budget Message, President Eisenhower made these requests affecting the highway program and Trust Fund (in addition to the request described above for ABC roads):

● Repeal the 1959 law provision diverting excise taxes into the Trust Fund for the fiscal years 1962 through 1964, and instead raise the existing gasoline tax from 4 cents a gallon to 4½ cents a gallon, and continue it at 4½ cents through the end of fiscal 1964.

● Instead of financing forest and public land highways from the Treasury by annual appropriations, give the Highway Trust Fund responsibility for these two programs.

● Raise the aviation gasoline tax from 2 cents a gallon to 4½ cents a gallon; impose a 4½-cent-a-gallon tax on jet fuels, currently tax free; and earmark these revenues for the Treasury general fund (the aviation tax was going into the Highway Trust Fund under existing law).

There was no action on any of the President's requests.

Nor was there any action to meet the larger problem, ignored in 1959, of providing revenues to complete the Interstate System on schedule. By general consent, action was postponed to 1961 to await completion of Commerce Department studies on the Highway Trust Fund revenue structure and Interstate construction costs.

ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS

In addition to the President's financing proposals, other individuals and groups suggested ways of improving federal highway financing.

A group of state Governors, led by Gov. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D) of Connecticut, chairman of the highway safety committee of the National Governors Conference, pressed early in 1960 for quick adoption of measures to beef up the Trust Fund and put the highway program back on its original construction schedule. Ribicoff calculated that measures taken by the Administration and Congress would cut the program by a total of $900 million for fiscal 1961-62. He proposed three measures to put an additional $1 billion into the Trust Fund so that the cuts could be avoided:

(1) Put 50 percent of the automobile and parts excise tax into the Trust Fund beginning in fiscal 1961, instead of in 1962 as was planned under 1959 law.

(2) Defer repayment until fiscal 1961-62 of a $359 million fiscal 1960 advance to the Trust Fund from the Treasury. (The advance was made, with Congressional approval, to enable the Trust Fund to keep up payments during certain months when its revenues were slack; a similar advance had been approved by Congress for fiscal 1961.)

(3) Continue the extra 1-cent a gallon gasoline tax, due to expire June 30, 1961, for an additional year.

The June 26-29 Governors' Conference adopted a resolution opposing any increase in the federal gasoline tax. A similar meeting -- of the Council of State Governments in December 1959 -- had heard a number of Governors and other state officials ask that all gasoline and automobile tax revenues which were collected be used for highway purposes.

BLATNIK CRITICISMS

Rep. John A. Blatnik (D Minn.), chairman of the House Public Works Special Subcommittee on the Federal-Aid Highway Program, May 11 in a speech before the eighth Highway Transportation Congress, said an overhaul of highway legislation was a "must" project for Congress in 1961 "if we are to prevent (the) highway program from degenerating into an awful mess."

The Congress met in Washington, D.C., May 10-12 under the sponsorship of the National Highway Users Conference.

Blatnik said the 1956 so-called "Byrd amendment", establishing a "pay-as-you-go" principle for the 41,000-mile National Interstate and Defense Highway System, served to minimize borrowing from general revenues and helped to put the highway program in "grave danger". In addition, he said, there was a "glaring inadequacy" of federal and state controls over highway construction, as illustrated by recent hearings held by Blatnik's Subcommittee on alleged highway fraud in Oklahoma.

Blatnik criticized what he called a "shortsighted" policy of "restricting the Interstate System" in metropolitan areas. He said city streets carried 46 percent of U.S. traffic but got only 31 percent of road funds, while rural roads carried 54 percent of U.S. traffic but got 69 percent of the funds.

He said Congress in 1961 should put the Interstate program back on its original construction schedule calling for completion in 1972, and should insure sufficient annual revenues for this purpose. Blatnik said "equality in tax treatment" should keynote Congressional efforts in this area, but he did not spell out specific tax proposals.

Federal Highway Administrator Bertram D. Tallamy May 11 told the Congress there was no reason to substitute federal control and authority over federal-aid highway programs for that traditionally exercised by the states.

William S. Richardson, chairman of the National Highway Users Conference, May 11 said administration of the highway program should be removed from the Commerce Department and a National Highway Board should be established to deal with this "gigantic expenditure of highway users' money."

SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Partly in anticipation of a 1961 review of the Interstate program, the House Public Works Special Subcommittee on the Federal-Aid Highway Program in 1960 opened a projected two-to-four-year investigation of alleged extravagance, fraud and routing irregularities in state and local highway programming. There were predictions the probes would turn up administrative weaknesses sufficient to force a reshaping of the program by Congress, in the direction of increased federal controls. The 18-member Subcommittee was appointed Sept. 4, 1959 with John A. Blatnik (D Minn.) as chairman. Operating on a 1960 appropriation of $295,000, the Subcommittee organized a team of 10 investigators. Its first hearings were on bridge clearance problems and highway scandals in Oklahoma and Florida.

● BRIDGES -- The Subcommittee held hearings Feb. 9-19 on a Jan. 25 decision of the Commerce Department to raise its clearance requirements upward from 14 to 16 feet for bridges on the Interstate System. The new Commerce specifications were based on Defense Department requirements for road transport of missiles.

At the close of hearings, Blatnik said the delay of three and a half years between adoption of the 14-foot standard in 1956 and its revision in 1960, during which period over 2,000 affected bridges were built, was "unconscionable, incredible, inexcusable and indefensible", and a "classic example of bureaucratic indecision". Blatnik said the Defense Department was not consulted when the 14-foot clearance was set, but neither did the Department make any effort to alert the Bureau of Public Roads or the American Assn. of State Highway Officials that its ability to transport weapons was impaired.

There was no determination as to whether existing bridges should be rebuilt to meet the new requirements.

● OKLAHOMA -- In hearings May 2-6, the Subcommittee focused on a 13-mile strip of the Interstate System near Tulsa, Okla., known as the Skelly Bypass.

In the course of the Skelly Bypass hearings, employees of the Oklahoma Highway Department testified that they had faked laboratory tests of materials used in constructing the highway, that they had accepted without independent audit the contractor's own figures on the delivery of materials to the project and in some instances had allowed the contractor to use materials that did not meet specifications. Committee investigators reported finding items of $745 and $1,325 entered twice in billings -- "quite obviously" double billings for single deliveries; and an "apparent shortage of $42,142 of material which the contractor was paid for, but according to his records he did not deliver." Two private engineers who checked the road at the request of the Tulsa County attorney told the Subcommittee they found deficiencies reflecting an overpayment of $524,689.

The federal inspector of the Skelly Bypass, whose work had been singled out for praise by the Bureau of Public Roads, testified that he had followed the "normal practice" of relying entirely on the reports of the state highway officials in determining whether the road measured up to standards.

The hearings reached a dramatic point when Lee Olen Downey of Claremore, Okla., told the Subcommittee that he had split his half of earnings in a sod contracting firm that did business with the state with H. Tom Kight Jr. in 1956-58 when Kight was state highway commissioner. Downey said he had lied about the case to a Tulsa County grand jury because Kight told him "he could get anybody killed for $500 to $1,000". Kight, who was facing criminal prosecution in Tulsa County, May 4 invoked the Fifth Amendment before the Subcommittee and said he would refuse to answer any questions so long as criminal charges were pending against him in Tulsa County. On May 5, the Fifth Amendment was invoked by Andrew H. Layman Jr., a member of the firm of Layman and Sons, which did part of the work on the Skelly Bypass. Layman said he was under indictment in seven cases in Tulsa County.

On the final day of hearings Highway Administrator Tallamy announced new regulations providing for random "surprise" road samples to be taken from completed highways and tested by state central laboratory personnel cooperating with Bureau of Public Roads officials. Tallamy said Oklahoma had been notified that if it was proved that funds were misused on the Skelly Bypass, the amount of any such loss would be withheld from federal payments to the state.

● FLORIDA -- The Subcommittee Dec. 5-13 investigated administration of the federal-aid highway program in Florida. Highlights of testimony:

Dec. 5 -- Creighton R. Brown, a payroll clerk for Cone Bros. Contracting Co. of Tampa, said for several years, up to Oct. 14, 1960, he had been instructed to put into unmarked evelopes each week payments averaging $25 which he then mailed to state engineers. He said the number of envelopes varied from three to eight. The payments, which came out of petty cash, were only sent to employees of the Road Department, Brown said. He said the list of those receiving the payments was controlled by Charles E. Bailes, general superintendent of Cone Bros. On Oct. 14 he had been told to stop the payments, but he had no knowledge of what had happened to the list, Brown said.

Walter R. May, counsel for the Subcommittee, said Florida began a legislative investigation of Cone Bros. on Oct. 14. The firm subsequently was declared ineligible to bid on state road construction jobs.

Malcolm L. Kimble, an engineer for the Florida Road Department, said he had never received irregular payments, but that "spasmodically" he would receive unmarked envelopes containing $25. Subcommittee investigators said records of the company showed Kimble had received 196 payments totaling $4,900 from Cone Bros. between Jan. 4, 1957 and Oct. 14, 1960. He said the firm had never asked him to perform any favors, but conceded that he would not accept any further payment should it be tendered because it "sure must be improper if it's caused all this fuss." Walter C. Little, job superintendent for Cone Bros., said he knew nothing about the weekly payments, but admitted he must have authorized them when confronted with vouchers bearing his initials.

Dec. 7 -- George Kopecky, chief investigator for the Subcommittee, said William McLeod, an engineer for the Florida Road Department, had received $10,041 from three contractors -- Cone Bros., J.W. Conner and Son and W.L. Cobb Co. -- in recent years. McLeod said the $1,200 he had received from Conner and Son represented loans which he intended to repay.

Bailes admitted the weekly payments had been made to engineers in the state highway department and said the list was drawn up by J.L. Cone Jr., one of the partners in the firm. Bailes said he was given instructions by Cone regarding the payments when he became general superintendent early in 1958.

Dec. 8 -- Joseph R. Maseda, a former state engineer dismissed from his job after the Florida legislature began its road investigation, said the poor riding quality of the $2.5 million Tampa-St. Petersburg Bridge, whose construction Maseda supervised, could have been the result of "a laxity of inspection at the time concrete was being poured, or...not enough inspections in enough places." Kopecky said the bridge's builder, Hardaway Construction Co., gave Maseda $2,003.60 and an affiliate firm, Curlew Properties, gave him $1,245. The alleged payments were for services not connected with Maseda's state job.

J.L. Cone Jr. said his firm gave $26,671.25 to Florida road department officials from January 1957-October 1960 to "expedite" projects but not in any attempt to get officials "to let us get by with substandard construction."

Dec. 9 -- W.L. Cobb of W.L. Cobb Co., Decatur, Ga., said the practice of contractors giving gifts to road officials had "snowballed" and he thought the investigation was "the best thing that's happened to us in a long time," and as a result of it, his firm had stopped such gifts.

Dec. 13 -- Florida road engineer Herbert C. Weathers said his wife received a phone call Dec. 7 warning her to "tell that husband of yours that if he doesn't go light on his testimony he'll have to buy you a pair of eyes instead of contact lenses."

Blatnik, recessing the hearings Dec. 13, said the Florida testimony revealed "reprehensible practices" which indicated "some state employees came perilously close to...extortion (or) contractors may have approached the stage of bribery or attempted bribery."

CONGRESS TIGHTENS BROADCASTING REGULATIONS

S 1898 — Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 690) Aug. 12, 1959.

- Passed by the Senate by voice vote Aug. 19.
- Reported, amended, by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 1800) June 13, 1960.
- Passed by the House, amended, by a 208-15 standing vote, June 28.
- Committee amendments to House version reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 1857) Aug. 19.
- Senate agreed, by voice vote, to committee amendments to House version Aug. 25.
- House agreed, by voice vote, to Senate amendment Aug. 30.

PL 86-752 -- Signed into law Sept. 13.

The Communications Act Amendments of 1960 (S 1898) tightened regulations governing television and radio broadcasting practices. The measure made rigging of TV quiz shows a federal crime, required disclosure of any "payola" and gave the Federal Communications Commission broader regulatory powers. The bill as originally passed by the Senate in 1959 had covered only technical broadcast licensing procedures.

Enactment of S 1898 followed 1959-60 hearings by the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Special Legislative Oversight Subcommittee on rigging of TV quiz shows, payola and other deceptive broadcasting practices. The 1960 hearings revealed numerous arrangements for promotion of phonograph records by disc jockeys and for advertising plugs.

The disclosures led the regulatory agencies, as well as the broadcasting industry, to propose and initiate corrective measures. The FCC, which held hearings early in 1960 on TV policies, together with other regulatory agencies became the subject of another series of Subcommittee hearings on alleged improper contacts between agency members and representatives of various industries. Although these hearings disclosed some questionable practices, no corrective legislation was enacted. (See p. 728)

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, S 1898, the Communications Act Amendments of 1960:

Provided with respect to broadcasting that: radio and television stations announce at the time of broadcast the receipt of any money, service or other valuable consideration, either directly or indirectly, for the matter broadcast; exempted from announcement any service or property furnished free or at nominal charge, unless it was provided for identification of a product, trademark or service beyond an identification reasonably related to its use.

Ordered stations to exercise reasonable diligence to obtain information on such payments from employees and others with whom they dealt.

Authorized the Federal Communications Commission to waive the announcement requirement when it determined the public interest, convenience or necessity did not require it; authorized the FCC to require announcement during any political or controversial-issue program when material was furnished free or at nominal charge as an inducement for the broadcast.

Directed any station employee who accepted a payment, or any person making one, to report the payment to the station prior to the broadcast.

Directed any person connected with the production or preparation of a program to report any payment in advance of broadcast to either the payee's employer, the sponsor or the holder of the station license.

Directed persons supplying program matter to disclose to the recipients any information on any payments made for inclusion of special material.

Declared it illegal, in any contest of intellectual knowledge, skill or chance, for any person, with intent to deceive the listening or viewing public, to: supply a contestant in a purportedly bona fide contest with any special or secret assistance; use persuasion, bribery, intimidation or other inducement to prevent a contestant from using his skill or knowledge; engage in any scheme to predetermine the outcome of a contest; produce or participate in the production of a program known or believed not to be bona fide.

Provided maximum penalties of $10,000 fine and one-year imprisonment for violations of either the announcement or contest requirements.

Provided that, prior to revocation of a license or the issuance of a cease-and-desist order, the FCC must issue a show-cause order, including a statement of the case, and call for a hearing within 30 days, with the burden of proof on the FCC.

Provided that a station willfully or repeatedly disobeying FCC regulations would be subject to a fine of $1,000 for each day during which the offense continued with the following limitations: (1) a fine could not be levied for any violation occurring more than one year prior to notification by the FCC and (2) fines could not exceed $10,000.

Required the FCC to notify stations of apparent liability before levying penalty fines.

Authorized the FCC to restrict license grants or renewals to shorter terms than the three years prescribed by law if it was in the public interest.

Required local notices of license applications and hearings in the principal areas to be served, and authorized the FCC to hold hearings in such areas if it was in the public interest.

Prohibited the practice of payoffs, in which persons agree to drop license applications in favor of a rival, unless the FCC approved the transaction as in the public interest.

Repealed a provision in the Communications Act of 1934 permitting acceptance by FCC members of honorariums for publications or delivery of speeches.

Background

The Legislative Oversight Subcommittee in 1959 held hearings on rigging of TV quiz shows which disclosed that both quiz producers and advertising executives were involved in deceptive practices. Although industry leaders promised prompt corrective measures, the disclosures brought calls for further investigations and legislative action. President Eisenhower told a November 1959 news conference he believed "nobody will be satisfied until this whole mess is cleaned up," and that he shared "the American general reaction of almost bewilderment that people could conspire to confuse and deceive the American people." Mr. Eisenhower ordered the Justice Department to study the rigging and report by January 1960. (1959 Almanac p. 744)

The regulatory agencies in December 1959 took these steps to correct malpractices: the Federal Communications Commission began hearings on TV policies and ordered all broadcasting stations to report by January 1960 on payola practices during 1959; the Federal Trade Commission called an industry-Government conference to discuss joint means of combatting deceptive advertising and FTC Chairman Earl W. Kintner told the industry that while it should exercise self-discipline, the FTC "means business" and would "keep the pressure on" as long as deception was a problem; the FTC issued complaints against firms for deceptive advertising; the National Assn. of Broadcasters adopted amendments to its television code to ban quiz rigging, deceptive advertising and payola; and NAB President Harold E. Fellows appointed a special six-member committee of broadcasting executives to deal with "ethical and legal issues." In January, the three major networks, ABC, CBS and NBC, announced they would set aside prime time for cultural programs, beginning late in 1961.

The FCC hearings ended Feb. 1 after conflicting testimony by some broadcasting officials that the FCC should exercise more leadership in eliminating abuses and by others that the industry should do its own policing. TV playwright and producer Rod Serling testified that sponsors were guilty of "ludicrous and timorous" interference with his plays; Peter W. Allport, vice president of the Assn. of National Advertisers Inc., said advertisers had an important financial stake in shows and "must be reasonably certain of commensurate value." The FCC announced after the hearings that it planned to tighten its rules on programming but Chairman John C. Doerfer said he believed self-regulation was best and uncautious steps by the FCC might violate the "ultimate best interests of the public."

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT RECOMMENDATIONS

The role of the regulatory agencies in broadcasting was analyzed by Attorney General William P. Rogers in a Dec. 31, 1959 report to the President, which Mr. Eisenhower had requested. Rogers said the agencies "appear to have authority adequate under existing law" to eliminate abuses but "these means do not appear to have been used as effectively as they can be." He said recommendations for substantial legislative action should be withheld until both the agencies and the industry tried to clean house, but he made two legislative proposals to aid in the cleanup.

Rogers said "operation in the public interest is the only reason for the existence of a broadcasting station." The FCC, he said, was "the public body created especially to make sure that the licensee meets his vital public interest responsibilities," and had a "substantial arsenal of weapons" to combat malpractices.

Rogers proposed that when a broadcaster's license came up for renewal every three years the FCC carefully examine his performance to see if he had served the public interest; that regulations be adopted requiring broadcasters to guarantee that programs testing skill or knowledge were not rigged; that stations be required to make employees report payments received for any service, announce such payments over the air and report them to the FCC; and that station personnel with outside commercial interests be required to report whether these interests had been "enhanced" by broadcasts.

In the case of the FTC, Rogers said it should launch an industry-wide inquiry into deceptive advertising practices, and he suggested that in its policing of false or misleading advertising the FTC "in appropriate cases" act against stations, rather than solely against advertisers.

Payola Hearings

Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.) of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Legislative Oversight Subcommittee Jan. 5 said Rogers' proposals on payola did not "satisfy the requirements" and that "the statutes should be broadened to cover everyone involved." He said he had no immediate quarrel with the proposal on FCC powers. Harris Feb. 8 opened hearings on deceptive broadcasting practices.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 8 David Maynard, Boston disc jockey, said he had received over $6,000 during a three-year period from record distributors, but it was not payola. He said the payments were for promoting records at teen-age dances which were not broadcast.

Feb. 9 -- Joseph Finan, former Cleveland disc jockey, said he supplemented his $40,000-a-year salary with payments from record companies, but only as a consultant. He said, however, that in one case he did accept $450 from Big Top Records for promoting three records.

Lester Lanin, Boston orchestra leader, said he made an agreement in 1958 with a distributor of Epic Records whereby it was arranged that radio station WBZ would play his records in a contest for charity groups, the winner of which would get his orchestra for a dance. Lanin said, "In this business you need exposure. When your records are played on the air it helps you."

Feb. 10 -- Wesley Hopkins, former Cleveland disc jockey, testified that in two years he received $12,000 in "listening fees" from recording companies, but said he did not broadcast unannounced plugs. He said the money was for listening to certain records and making sure they were "not lost in the shuffle." He said he never had received money for "playing a specific record at a specific time."

Feb. 15 -- Cecil Steen, a record distributor, said he paid a Boston station $1,400 in 1959 to have his records featured daily for 13 weeks. He called it a "normal situation" but said the handouts in some cases were wasted.

Jack Gould, maker of Paris Records, said disc jockeys had refused to play his records, because he did not use the distributor they recommended until he threatened to report to the Federal Communications Commission. He said his records "would have gotten very good treatment" had he shifted distributors.

Feb. 16 -- Donald R. Keelan of the General Accounting Office testified that between 1957 and 1959 four Boston record distributors paid $40,472 to disc jockeys and broadcast station librarians. He identified the distributors as Music Suppliers Inc., Dumont Record Distributing Corp., Records Inc. and Mutual Distributors Inc.

The general manager of Music Suppliers Inc., Gordon J. Dinerstein, said his company had paid the money to "create and maintain good will". He said his firm stopped such payments when the Committee's investigations indicated "we may have done something wrong."

Feb. 18 -- Harry Weiss of Music Suppliers Inc. said he and his competitors had sent false record-rating lists to the publication Cash Box on radio station letter paper.

The Subcommittee released testimony of Harry Carter, president of Music Suppliers Inc., and Samuel Clark, president of Am-Par Records, taken Feb. 17 in executive session. Carter said one record, "Growing Love," which had been plugged as a hit prior to release turned out to be a failure. Clark said that the only favor he had asked from stations was to have his records put "close enough to the top where they will be listened to" when they came into the station.

Feb. 19 -- Donald Dumont of Dumont Record Distributors said he had given $8,500 and several gifts to Boston disc jockeys only for services already performed.

Joe Smith, a Boston disc jockey, said he had collected royalties of 2 cents a record from playing the record "Sixteen Candles." He said the $7,775 he received from the music industry was an "expression of gratitude" for records he had played which later made money.

March 4 -- Federal Trade Commission Chairman Earl W. Kintner said that since December 1959, when the FTC completed an investigation into deceptive broadcasting advertising, it had issued 60 orders, enforceable by court orders, to record firms and distributors to stop deceptive advertising and payola practices. (Firms receiving such orders must challenge them within 30 days or comply. If they contest the orders, the FTC holds hearings, then either withdraws or modifies the orders or makes them final. A final order can be challenged in federal court.)

Kintner also said FTC investigations showed 255 disc jockeys and other broadcasting station personnel had been involved in payola. He said the list of names had been turned over to the Federal Communications Commission and the Internal Revenue Service. He agreed to give a copy to Subcommittee Chairman Oren Harris.

When Kintner said the FTC had investigated the activities of disc jockey Dick Clark, Subcommittee member John B. Bennett (R Mich.) said Clark should be called to testify. Bennett said he was concerned that Clark had not been called because he was "the outstanding disc jockey and is obviously very seriously involved in payola."

(Subcommittee counsel Robert W. Lishman March 21 released a report prepared for Harris which said witnesses were reluctant to tell the Subcommittee what they knew about Clark for fear of being "denied further opportunity" of getting themselves or their records on the air.)

DOERFER RESIGNATION

FCC Chairman John C. Doerfer said he had spent "about six nights" in January aboard the yacht Lazy Girl, belonging to George B. Storer, owner of a number of radio and television stations, but denied he had violated FCC regulations and said his visit was purely social. He said the yacht had been tied to a dock in Florida, and denied having taken a "week-long luxury cruise".

(Doerfer March 10 submitted his resignation to President Eisenhower. He said his FCC duties had required "day-to-day contact with many industry people... a number of these contacts eventually ripen into social acquaintances and sometimes friendships, which, despite appearances, do not imperil the integrity of either the Government official or the member of industry." Doerfer said he would not "waver from my views that the best solution to modern-day Government regulation of complex industry problems demands a thorough knowledge of that industry and actual contact with the members thereof," but he was resigning "to avoid possible embarrassment" to the Administration. The White House March 10 named FCC member Frederick W. Ford to succeed Doerfer.)

April 25 -- The Subcommittee heard executive testimony from George Paxton and Marvin Kane of Co-ed Records Inc., and Allan J. Freed, former disc jockey.

April 26 -- Paul Ackerman, music editor of Billboard Magazine, recommended making payola a crime.

Thomas Noonan, Billboard's research director, under questioning by Subcommittee Counsel Robert W. Lishman, said disc jockey Dick Clark "probably was the most important single individual" in the exploitation of records.

Bernard Goldstein, vice president of Computech Inc., a data processing firm, said Clark had a financial interest in only 27 percent of the records Clark played on his program. Goldstein, who had been hired by Clark to make a study, said it showed Clark chose his records for their popularity rather than for his financial interest.

April 27 -- Joseph Tryon of Georgetown University and Morton S. Raff of the Bureau of Labor Statistics said there were statistical flaws in Goldstein's study. Tryon said Clark played records in which he had a financial interest twice as frequently as others, which could have given them "higher popularity ratings". Goldstein's evidence "does not support the stated conclusion that there was no preferential treatment," Raff said, and added that the Computech report was without value as evidence.

Harry Finfer, a part owner of Jamie Records and manager of Universal Record Distributors, said Clark had made $31,375 in salary and stock profits in two-and-one-half years on an investment of $125 in Jamie. Finfer said Clark's producer, Tony Mammarella, and his wife had received $1,500 from Jamie and $4,000 from Universal, and $15,000 had been paid to disc jockeys and broadcast officials who listened to Jamie records and broadcast them.

Explaining the payments to Clark, Finfer said Clark in June 1957 had been invited to buy a 25 percent interest in Jamie for $125 because of his "expert knowledge" of records. His duties were to give the firm "the benefit of his advice and experience," Finfer said, and for this he was paid $16,700 in salary between June 1957 and November 1959, when he sold his interest in the firm for $15,000 to the other partners.

Finfer said Universal had paid $34,246.43 -- including the money to Mammarella -- to various disc jockeys and broadcast officials in the period July 1, 1957 to July 1, 1959. Finfer said Clark knew nothing about payments to others. All payments, he said, were made "for the purpose (of the various recipients) listening to records and giving advice."

April 29 -- Disc jockey Dick Clark said he had "sought the opportunity for diversified investments of my energies and resources...investments and opportunities which would continue after my performing popularity had waned or disappeared," but that "I have never agreed to play a record or have an artist perform...in return for a payment in cash or any other consideration." Clark reviewed the formation of 33 music companies and record firms in which he had at one time or another held interests ranging up to 100 percent, but said he had divested himself of all outside interests at the request of his employer, the American Broadcasting Co., after the November 1959 beginning of the payola inquiry.

Clark conceded he knew a record firm in which he had an interest had paid $20,000 to disc jockeys over a 20-month period and that he had accepted $4,500 in gifts from one record promoter but said such "reimbursements" were discontinued in 1958.

Robert W. Lishman, the Subcommittee's chief counsel, presented a summary of Clark's investments since 1957 which showed $576,570 in gains -- including $167,570 in salaries and $409,000 in an "increase in stockholder's equity over investment."

May 2 -- The Subcommittee released earlier closed session testimony by two New York record manufacturers and music publishers, George Paxton and George Goldner, in which they said they had surrendered, without charge, complete copyright interests to music publishing firms owned by Clark with the understanding this would foster their music's promotion. Goldner said a representative of the Clark firm had asked for the copyrights and that Clark had subsequently played all but about one of the records for which he received the copyrights from him.

Clark admitted under questioning he had been paid $7,000 by American Airlines for plugs at the end of programs stating that guests had been flown by the airline. He said he was not sure the guests actually had used American Airlines, did not know the details of the agreement, but believed the network had approved the deal and it was "standard practice" in the industry. Clark also admitted a former associate producer of his "American Bandstand" show, Anthony Mammarella, told him in November 1959 that he had accepted payola from record firms, but Clark said he had not mentioned the matter to a Subcommittee investigator because he "preferred that Mr. Mammarella tell his own story."

May 3 -- Ben Hoberman, ABC station manager for WABC, New York, said Allan J. Freed, who was fired as a radio disc jockey in November 1959 for refusing to sign a network affidavit on payola, had been required to pay the station $10,000 for plugging each of three theater shows Freed sponsored.

Leonard H. Goldenson, ABC president, said the payments by Freed were perfectly proper, that Clark had been given no preferential treatment over Freed and that affidavits presented to both disc jockeys were to "elicit the same information."

The Subcommittee released figures, based on a mail survey, that showed 130 record distributors had handed out $263,244 in payola in the past two years to 207 disc jockeys and other radio-TV personnel and to 12 stations themselves.

SUBCOMMITTEE FINDINGS

Subcommittee Chairman Harris Feb. 9 released an interim report (H Rept 1258) containing recommendations for legislative and administrative action to establish more control over broadcasting. The report criticized broadcasting stations for surrendering "control of programming to the networks, who, in turn have often abdicated control to advertisers." The investigations pointed "unmistakably to the need for further legislation to strengthen the controls over station licensees," the report said. Several of the report's recommendations were similar to those in Attorney General Rogers' December 1959 report to the President.

The report was signed by the five Democrats on the Subcommittee -- Harris, Peter F. Mack Jr. (Ill.), Walter Rogers (Texas), John James Flynt Jr. (Ga.), and John E. Moss (Calif.). A minority report, signed by Republican Reps. William L. Springer (Ill.), Steven B. Derounian (N.Y.) and Samuel L. Devine (Ohio), agreed in general with the majority report but differed on the extent of the existing authority of the Federal Trade Commission. Harris Feb. 6 told reporters that the Subcommittee had found that the FTC and the Federal Communications Commission had adequate authority to eradicate the deceptive broadcasting practices which had been disclosed. The minority report agreed with the testimony of FTC Chairman Earl W. Kintner that the Commission lacked jurisdiction over deceptive practices in the content of programs. The fourth Republican member, John B. Bennett (Mich.), did not sign either report but said the majority report represented a "fair appraisal of the subject matter" investigated.

Following is a summary of the Subcommittee recommendations.

● 1. Proposed amendments to the Federal Communications Act of 1934:

Make it a criminal offense for anyone, with the intent to deceive listeners, to participate in, or conspire to produce, fixed or rigged programs that are purported to be bona fide contests of knowledge or skill.

Empower the FCC to suspend a station's license upon a finding that the station, although previously warned by the Commission, was broadcasting programs not in the public interest.

Require that radio and television networks be licensed and made subject to FCC regulation. Make the renewal of each three-year license contingent upon a finding that it is in the public interest. Define the public interest and prohibit the networks from: furnishing deceptive material to a station; abdicating control over broadcast material to an advertiser, producer or any unlicensed person; promoting a product or service in which the network has a financial interest; or entering into a contract which would hinder a station from operating in the public interest.

Prohibit, with criminal penalties, payoffs for the promotion of a product without announcement that the "plug" was paid for (an effort to halt the "payola" practice).

Declare it the policy of Congress to prevent "trafficking in licenses" by prohibiting a newly authorized licensee from selling a station within three years unless the FCC, after holding hearings in the area where the station is located, is convinced the transfer is in the public interest. Require that applications for transfer of a license, or of controlling interest in a license, be made public, including the price involved in the transfer. Repeal a section of the law which prohibits the FCC from judging whether or not transfers of licenses are in the public interest.

Except for actual expenses, prohibit one applicant for a broadcasting license from paying another to drop out of competition. If withdrawal of an application is approved by the FCC, new applicants must be given 30 days to apply for the license at stake.

Provide that FCC hearings on proposed licenses or renewal applications be held in the locality of the station, rather than in Washington.

● 2. Recommendations for administrative action by the FCC:

Monitor broadcasts to determine whether the balance of programs is in the public interest.

Require stations to make audio-tape recordings of all personal interview programs which must be available to the Commission upon request during the next 30 days.

• 3. Proposed amendments to the Federal Trade Commission Act:

Empower the FTC to seek a temporary restraining order, pending completion of an investigation, in all types of unfair and deceptive business practices rather than only in the case of false advertisement of foods, drugs and cosmetics.

Add broadcast licensees, networks and advertising agencies to those subject to criminal penalties under section 14 of the Act.

REGULATORY AGENCY ACTIONS

While the Subcommittee was holding the 1960 hearings, the regulatory agencies took these actions:

Feb. 11 -- The FCC proposed that Congress enact legislation permitting fines of up to $9,000 and imprisonment for up to one year for deceptive broadcasting, declaring it currently was powerless to act in such situations.

Feb. 25 -- FCC Chairman Doerfer told a meeting of State Broadcasting Assn. presidents the Feb. 6 Subcommittee recommendations for tighter FCC control over broadcasting were too severe and the indiscretions were no greater than those in other industries. He said the agency approved recommendations to permit punishment for rigged quiz shows but objected to proposals for program monitoring and hearings on license applications in the area where a station sought a license.

March 2 -- The FCC announced it would license radio and television broadcasting stations for periods shorter than three years, the usual term of a license. The FCC said the change would enable it to make use of shorter-term licenses where it did not believe a station "is entitled to a regular three-year renewal and which merits closer observation during a shorter period of operation."

March 24 -- FTC officials said their monitoring staff was checking 15 magazines and 20 to 25 newspapers each week and watching television commercials in a new program to detect unfair and illegal advertising. The FTC said different periodicals were read each week, and the spot checks were aimed primarily at national advertising campaigns.

The National Assn. of Broadcasters, National Broadcasting Co. and Columbia Broadcasting System protested a March 17 Federal Communications Commission directive to stations to tell listeners whenever they used donated records or mentioned or showed commercial products in return for a "valuable consideration". The FCC said the ruling, aimed at "sneaky commercials", was an extension of previous directives but the broadcasters said it was substantive and hearings should have been held before the directive was issued.

LEGISLATIVE ACTION

House

While hearings were in progress on deceptive broadcasting practices, the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Communications and Power Subcommittee, also under Harris' chairmanship, held two days of hearings on specific legislative proposals to provide broadcasting industry regulation. These hearings were necessary because the Legislative Oversight Subcommittee was not a legislative group.

TESTIMONY -- April 12 -- Chairman Frederick W. Ford of the Federal Communications Commission said the FCC had drafted a bill to provide criminal sanctions only with reference to "a test or contest of intellectual skill or knowledge." He said a distinction must be made between rigged shows and "innocent deception" often found in theatrical contents of programs. He endorsed a proposal to suspend station licenses for 10 days for violations, included in HR 11341, which was introduced March 23 by Harris, and said this would give "flexibility and effectiveness" to enforcement, but he opposed proposals to require the FCC to greatly step up the number of hearings on license applications. Ford said this would leave the FCC with a "very serious" administrative problem because it would require additional staff and funds and might lead to prolonged processing delays.

Rep. John B. Bennett (R Mich.) filed a statement with the Subcommittee urging consideration of his bills (HR 10241-42) to provide stricter license review and criminal penalties for deceptive broadcasting.

April 13 -- Vincent T. Wasilewski, representing the National Assn. of Broadcasters (NAB), said NAB opposed 10-day suspensions of licenses because it would "make the public pay for the broadcaster's misdeeds." He said the FCC already had ample authority to cope with violations. He endorsed proposals to deal with quiz fixing and payola.

Thomas K. Fisher, vice president and general attorney for the Columbia Broadcasting System television network, agreed with the NAB position.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- May 20 -- Ford, in a statement filed with a Senate Appropriations subcommittee, requested $300,000 to put into operation for one year a 25-man monitoring unit to check all radio-TV advertising on a regular, continuing basis and to investigate complaints. Congress, in its July 1 passage of the fiscal 1961 Independent Offices appropriation bill (HR 11776), voted $150,000 for the unit, and stipulated that the funds in no way were to be used in any censorship function.

HOUSE BILL REPORTED

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ACTION -- June 13 reported an amended bill (S 1898 -- H Rept 1800), the Communications Act Amendments of 1960. The bill was reported in the form of a substitute for the measure passed by the Senate Aug. 19, 1959.

The House measure required public announcements and disclosures of any money or other item of value accepted by a radio or television station employee in exchange for a promise to broadcast anything and required stations to exercise "reasonable diligence" to obtain such information. The report said these provisions were "imperative" because licensees "now delegate much of their actual programming responsibilities to others." The bill made rigging of quiz programs a criminal offense. The report said the 1934 Communications Act was "inadequate" because it placed responsibility solely on licensees, who had "no practical control" over shows on national hookups. The bill fixed penalties for individuals who disobeyed the new regulations and authorized the FCC to suspend broadcasting licenses for 10 days for violations by stations or to grant short-term licenses to provide more frequent review of performance; it also authorized fines of $1,000-a-day for an indefinite period for intentional violations.

The Committee did not give the FCC direct power to regulate the networks or to restrict sales of television stations and permit competition from other new applicants for channels.

Separate views were filed by three Republican Committee members -- Reps. John B. Bennett (Mich.), Steven B. Derounian (N.Y.) and Ancher Nelsen (Minn.). They said although they generally favored the bill they would reserve the right to offer floor amendments because the measure was "woefully deficient" in failing to require the networks to "exercise the same high responsibility and diligence" as the individual stations.

Floor Action

The House June 28 passed S 1898 with amendments by a 208-15 standing vote. Passage followed four days of debate during which some Congressmen complained that the penalties provided were too stiff and the FCC was being given too much power, while others wanted to strengthen the FCC by authorizing regulation of the networks themselves.

The main objection to the bill during House debate was to provisions for FCC sanctions, including suspension of station licenses for 10-day periods and forfeiture of $1,000 per day for each day of a violation. Opponents termed the dual sanctions "tyrannical" and "oppressive" and said the broadcasting industry strongly opposed them. Proponents said the FCC had given assurances there would be no dual penalties and that existing law provided for judicial review of such actions. The provisions were softened somewhat through floor amendments which specified that sanctions were to be imposed only when violations were the result of "negligent or intentional" actions.
